I reply, if they have remained in her through her bloody reign of 1290 or 1260 years, it is out of place to bid them come out of her now, when she has lost her power to slay them. This would look as though they had never had the courage to raise the cry, while she was in power; but when her power is gone, or the dominion of the horn taken away, then they are to come out of her. Why? Because she has fallen from her exalted position; she has lost her power to slay the people of God; and she has become the habitation of devils, and hold of every foul spirit, &c. In the name of truth, I ask, what was she before her falling from this high position of reigning over the kings of the earth? Even admitting she has not the power to-day that she once had, yet the loss of this power cannot be her fall referred to in chs. 14 and 18, for it is evident that she becomes a habitation of devils, in consequence of her fall; whereas, she had previously been the habitation of God through the Spirit, but now the man of sin is revealed sitting in the temple of God, Eph. 2: 22. But I fear I shall dwell too long on this point. Enough has been said, no doubt, to satisfy every candid mind whose aim is truth, simple truth, in preference to man-made theories, that have no foundation in the word of God.

We now come to the subject of the everlasting Gospel, in connection with the Seal of the living God, and the number of those that were sealed. As the preaching of the everlasting Gospel is before the fall of Babylon, we conclude it is none other than the Gospel that Paul and the other Apostles preached; than which, says Paul, if an angel from heaven preach any other, let him be accursed, Gal. 1: 8. It is the Gospel of the everlasting covenant, Heb. 13: 20. The blood of the everlasting covenant, is "the blood of the New Testament which was shed for the remission of sins," Matt. 26: 28. The New Testament, or Covenant, is the everlasting Testament; for it supercedes the old one, which was done away in Christ. The old covenant was broken, but continued in force until Christ died, 2 Cor. 3: 13, 14. By referring to Heb. 8: 6; 13: 9; 15: 17; Col. 2: 14, it will be seen that the old covenant being done away, the new one is now in force. Through the death of our Lord Jesus by the shedding of his blood, the atonement is made for all them that believe; therefore, to preach the everlasting Gospel now, is to preach the glad tidings or good news of salvation by grace, through faith in the blood of the new and everlasting covenant, or testament.

But the angel says, "Fear God and give glory to Him; for the hour of his judgment is come;" and this is taken to prove that this message commenced in the last generation; because, it is said, this could not be true in any other generation.

Here is the whole strength of this argument for the fall of Babylon and third angel's message in the 19th century. I pledge myself to meet this objection before I close; but we wish now to pursue the subject of the everlasting Gospel and Seal of the living God. The everlasting Gospel is the Gospel that the Apostles preached, or it is another. If it is another, then, says Paul, let him that preaches it, be accursed.

Well, you say, we admit, it began to be preached in the Apostles' days; or even in the days of Abraham.

Let us now refer to the Seal of the living God, ch. 7: 2; "And I saw an angel ascending from the East, having the seal of the living God; and he cried to the four angels to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, hurt not the earth, nor the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads, and I heard the number of them that were sealed; and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel."

The book of Revelation is a prophecy of events to transpire in the Gospel dispensation. Proof—ch. 4: 1. Now one thing is certain; this angel ascending from the East, having the seal of the living God, must have commenced his mission before the servants of God were sealed. Yes, you say, that is freely admitted. Well, now we shall shew from the sure testimony, that his work did not commence in the 19th century, as some have affirmed; but the sealing of God's servants is an operation effected by the reception of the truth, in the love of it, viz., believing the everlasting Gospel. When we have shewn when and where this work commenced, we have found the time and place of the ascension of this class of messengers; for this agent represents a class of messengers as we learn by his own words; he uses the plural pronouns, "we" and "our," "till we have sealed the servants of our God, in their foreheads." Now, Brother Paul, we wish to know if any of God's servants were sealed in your days. O yes, "now he which establisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us is God; who hath also sealed us; and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts," 2 Cor. 1: 21, 22. Again; "That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted"—first fruit in Christ. "In whom ye also trusted." When? "After that ye heard the word of truth, the Gospel of your salvation; in whom, also, after that ye believed, ye were SEALED with that Holy Spirit of Promise," Eph. 1: 12, 13. Again: "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are SEALED, unto the day of redemption," Eph. 4: 30.

But some one may say, this does not seal the saints of God in their foreheads; for it has been contended that this agent is a literal angel, that comes at the day of wrath, and seals the servants of God in their foreheads, after the events spoken of in ch. 6: 14–17, when the kings of the earth and the great and the rich men, call for the mountains and rocks, to fall on them; "for the great day of his wrath has come." Well, let us turn to the 9th ch. of Rev. We find here that under the sounding of the fifth trumpet and under the first woe, there comes out of the bottomless pit a smoke; and out of the smoke locusts upon the earth; "and unto them is given power as the scorpions of the earth have power. And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, but only those men that have not the seal of God in their foreheads." There were some then that had the SEAL of God in their foreheads, and they were an exception to those that should be hurt by these symbolic scorpions, which represent the Saracen armies. Read "The Grand Crisis or the Lord soon to Come," by F. H. B., pp. 299, 300, and you will see the fulfilment of this Prophecy. Also Gibbon. pp. 288, 290. This is enough to shew that the messengers having the Seal of the living God, had sealed some of God's servants some 1200 years before the day of wrath. And although the first verses of ch. 7 contain a record of events that John saw in vision, after being brought down through the scenery ot the six seals to the day of God's wrath, yet it by no means follows that this is the order in which the events shall transpire The expression, "After these things," signifies after he had seen these things, there was another series of events presented to his mind, commencing with four angels holding the four winds, and an angel is seen ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God, to seal his servants in their foreheads. As we have shewn that some of God's servants were thus sealed as early as the sixth century, we know that the ascension of this angel from the east can be none other than the same class of agents that sealed the same class of servants in the first century. We have before shewn by reference to Eph. 1: 12, 13, and 4: 30; 2 Cor. 1: 21, 22, that the servants of God were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, after that they believed the word of truth, the Gospel of their salvation. And this Gospel was first preached by the Apostles in the east in Jerusalem. We now ask the following questions:

What is the seal of the living God?

Ans. The Holy Spirit, Eph. 1: 12, 13; and 4: 30.

Who first received it after Jesus?

Ans. The Apostles, that was in the Gospel dispensation; then the Apostles are the class of messengers symbolized by the angel having the seal of the living God. But this angel is seen ascending from the east, he is not in the midst of heaven, as in ch. 14: 6; and as the day begins when the Sun ascends from the east, so this angel represents a class of messengers beginning in the east, with the message that ushers in the Gospel day, and seals those as the servants of God, that believe it.

Now, we ask, who first preached the Gospel in this dispensation; with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven?

Ans. The Apostles, Acts 2: 1, 4.

Did those that believed it receive the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the seal of the living God?

Ans. They did, Acts 2: 38.

To be continued.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. A. E. Howden.

Bristol, Vt., April 8, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—Although I am a stranger to you, I feel it a privilege to write a few lines, in behalf of the Crisis. I thank the Giver of every good and perfect gift, that I am not deprived the privilege of receiving and perusing its contents; for it is like cold water to the thirsty soul. Bro. Burnham's remarks in our last, respecting the Crisis, are worthy to be noticed. It is truly what the flock of God needs in this trying hour. Yes; we want meat in due season; I trust the Brn. and Srs. will not let this pass unnoticed, but will lend a helping hand, ever having in mind that we who possess this world's goods must give an account of our stewardship here.

The cause of God in this place is very low, and iniquity abounds, while the love of many is waxing cold. There have been many things to divide and distract the little flock in Bristol; but, praise be to God, there are a precious few that have not denied the faith, who are strong in the belief that the end of all things is at hand. My prayer to God is, that He will unite the little flock in this place. Let us be faithful a little longer, ever taking the Bible for our guide. "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." A. E. Howden.

Truth, to the Christian, is like the refreshing shower, which, when Nature is drying and drooping, makes it to lift its desponding head and wear a beautiful and joyous garb. J. D. C. W.

Devouring Fire.

By J. Dimmick.

"Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" Isa. 33: 14.

This text is generally resorted to, as one of the strong holds in support of the doctrine of eternal torment. Let us examine and ascertain whether it does, in fact, afford that support. To my mind it does not—but it sustains a doctrine quite the reverse. The prophet, throughout several successive chapters in the vicinity of the text, is foreshowing the reign of Christ, in His coming Kingdom on the earth, the blessings that He will then bestow upon his people, and the judgment He will inflict upon His enemies; and in the context, it is expressly declared that the wicked shall be burned as thorns in the fire—and that their breath as fire shall devour them—so that even sinners in Zion, the hypocrites, shall be afraid from what He hath done—hence the reason of the inquiry in the text, "who among us shall dwell with devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" As much as to say, who among us, that belong to the Church, and profess to love God, shall dwell with Him, seeing His judgment and fiery indignation will devour the adversaries—and that without regard to profession. That this inquiry is in relation to God, is evident from the several verses immediately following the text, which are a direct answer to the question, who shall dwell with devouring fire? &c.

The answer is, the righteous—they shall dwell on high—that is, dwell with God; for it had just before been said, it was He who dwelleth on high—they shall see the king in His beauty—the Lord is our king He will save us. Does not this response, then, show that this is the true reference—namely, that it is God, that is meant by the devouring fire. In fact, "our God is a consuming fire," consequently, everlasting burnings—and He will consume the wicked by the breath of His mouth, and shall destroy them with the brightness of his coming. Otherwise, if this devouring fire and everlasting burnings mean an eternal hell fire, then will there be no answer attached to the question, as to who will dwell in it, unless it be, that the righteous will; for they are the only ones named in the reply, as being dwellers in the fire of the text—and who would think of fixing on the righteous as fit subjects for eternal burnings? Nevertheless, this is the unavoidable result, from such an interpretation—and besides, to call devouring fire eternal torment, is a contradiction of terms. To devour, is to destroy, annihilate. Thus there is, evidently, an absurdity in applying any other meaning to the text than that these burnings specified therein, represent God in His judgment—that notwithstanding, He is a devouring fire, He is only so to the wicked. He is not so to the righteous, they, the latter, can and will dwell with him, as their Lord and king in perfect safety. He is ever their defence—a wall of fire round about them, and a glory in their midst. He dwelt in the burning bush without consuming it—and because he changeth not, therefore are the sons of Jacob not consumed—consequently the text teaches no such doctrine as never ending torment—it neither asserts, or implies that the wicked will be so punished, or even that there is a place for such punishment—but on the contrary, it does say, in the connection, that they shall be burned and devoured—and in accordance thereto, does the text plainly imply the destruction of the wicked—that they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction, from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power."

Vermillionville, Ill.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. S. M. Tatro.

Collinsville, March 14, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—I feel to praise God for the Crisis; for it is a medium through which we can hear from our dear Brn. and Sisters of like precious faith. O praise God—it does my soul good to take up the Crisis and read the letters it contains from my dear Brethren and Sisters, as they tell of their joys and sorrows, hopes and fears, and their determination to see the end of the race. And I believe we may expect the end is nigh, even at the door. Yes, praise God, the Lord himself shall descend from heaven soon, and that same Jesus shall come again in like manner as He went up. It will not be a spiritual coming, no; it will be that same Jesus. Yes, that same identical Jesus that hung on the cross. He is coming back to earth, and when He comes, He will come to establish peace—to set up His everlasting kingdom, and to release the wayworn pilgrim from his sufferings. O Brn. and Srs., let us look up and hold up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh. It is but little in the distance. The signs that were to precede his coming are mostly in the past. Do we believe the Bible? If we do, we must believe that our redemption is at hand. O, dear Brethren and Sisters, look abroad on the earth, see in what confusion the earth appears. When, I ask, was it in such confusion as at the present time? I think the world is in just the condition that the Bible says it will be in, just prior to the coming of our Lord and Master.

May the Lord help us to have our loins girt about with truth, that we may be able to stand when the world is on fire, and the wicked are calling for rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne.

I would say for the encouragement of Sister Cordelia A. Robinson, as she has expressed a desire to hear from the Brethren and sisters with whom she was acquainted at the East, that we keep up our prayer-meetings as usual, and depend upon it, dear Sister, though you are missed in our little praying circles, you are not forgotten. You are remembered at the throne of grace, that God may bless you in your far Western home, and make you useful in His cause. O may you be the means of winning souls to Christ. We often think and speak of you as being deprived of the privilege of meeting with those of like precious faith, and enjoying their society. But glory be to heaven's king, the day is not far distant, when, if faithful, you will meet an innumerable company of like precious faith, where parting will never come.

Finally, Brethren and Sisters, let us endure a little longer. Though the battle may wax hotter and hotter, it will soon be over. The Lord will soon give us a discharge from the warfare, if we are faithful a little longer. O come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

From your unworthy Bro., waiting for redemption, Samuel M. Tatro.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. C. Goodrich.

Pleasant Valley, Ct., April 12, '56.

Bro. Merriam:—Permit me to say a few words through the Crisis, by way of exhortation to the little Church of God scattered abroad. Dear Brn. and Srs., be of good cheer, behold the King cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to take vengeance on thine enemies, and to destroy them that corrupt the earth. You have long cried for deliverance, your cries have entered the ears of the Almighty; the earth will soon shake, already its premonitory throes are felt, the heavens will soon be folded together as a vesture, and the retinue of God's shining ones will be commissioned to gather the redeemed host; and then those that now sleep in the cold, damp ground, together with those who have been buried beneath old ocean's briny billows, will come forth. Soon, very soon—the sound of the seventh angel's trumpet will be heard, and then will follow the declaration, "the Kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and forever." Then shall the redeemed of the Lord come to "Mount Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

"Let the last trumpet sound, O Lord, and let thy sorrowing, sighing, groaning, weeping, weary, tempted, tried and way-worn Church enter that country where sighing shall cease, where tears shall be ended, and where pain shall be no more felt! O let the requiem of death and the devil be sung by the immortal choir, and let the host of God's suffering ones be gathered to chant his praises in an earth renewed, is my prayer; and not only mine, but the prayers of a Church that is groaning within themselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body Come, then, dear fellow pilgrim, let us fight on, fight manfully the good fight of faith a little longer, and then we shall get our discharge from the army, and take a crown of life. May the Lord help us all to be faithful, is the prayer of thy Bro. in tribulation,

C. Goodrich.

The Future World.

By M. A. Cotton.

That this earth, in its present state, is to pass away, and a future world, a glorious restitution to follow, is clearly taught in the Holy Scriptures.

The contrast between earth in its present condition, and earth restored, as taught, is very striking.

Here, we have sickness, sorrow and death, bloodshed, famine and pestilence; cold winds and scorching heat; disappointments and cruel mockings. There, health shall bloom on every countenance, joy fill every bosom, life flow through every vein, and invigorate every frame.

"All the precious stones in the crowns of kings, and in the cabinet of museums, are the scattered fragments of that explosion which sin kindled in ancient Paradise, now strewn over the earth, and buried frequently in its depths; relics in short, of its magnificence, and memorials of its catastrophe. In that future world, these precious stones shall be exhibited in all their pristine glory; in masses, not in minute fragments; brilliant and pure, not dimmed and shaded. Ruby rocks and quarried diamonds shall be there. Its floors shall be emeralds, and its dome shall be like sapphire; and its high altar the Son of God, "the Pearl of great price," from which shall ascend perpetual incense, and around which shall rise, as from innumerable hosts, a hurricane of praise forever. The very dust shall be of diamond, and the meanest thing where all is magnificent shall be gold. Its soil shall be ever fresh and fragrant as the rose; its sky around like the rainbow, and over it all flowered with stars; and its distant hills shall be forever alive with light, darkness shall flee away from it like a doubt before the truth of God, and no night shall draw its sable curtains over earth's head. All space shall be full of Deity, the stars shall be the Scriptures of the sky, and the light of the Sun of Righteousness the Apocalypse of all. All sounds shall be harmony, and all mysteries light; the universe itself shall be a glorious hymn, and worlds the words in which it is written; and pine-forests, and palm-groves, the lichen and green fern, and the giant oak, and hill-tops visited all night with troops of stars, shall overflow with the light of love, and life, and glory, and all so pure that snow would stain and dew defile them. A new and yet more glorious Genesis shall come upon our world. This poor earth, for six thousand years a vast sarcophagus, shall recover more than Eden life and beauty after its baptism of fire." It shall be "A cathedral boundless as our wonder,

Whose quenchless lamp the sun and moon supply;
Its choir the winds and waves, its organ thunder,
Its dome the sky."

For the Crisis.

The Pilgrims.

By Julia L.

I saw a little company assembled on a day of holy rest. They seemed like pilgrims, and I knew they had met to talk of their journey, and of the place of their destination. I thought they were weary, and sad, but when they recounted their joys and sorrows, I observed that their blessings far out-weighed their trials, and a solemn joy o'erspread their countenances, as they told of the rich reward they hoped to gain at the end of their pilgrimage.

It was not toward California's rich mines that they were wending their way, nor were they seeking worldly honors or fame. O no! They had bidden adieu to the fancied pleasures they had once so eagerly pursued, and were earnestly seeking enduring joys. They had heard of a better land, where a glorious king—even Jesus, should reign, and there was one who stood before them and talked of the beauty and Majesty of the Kingdom and of the holy throng that should be gathered from every nation and clime—their sufferings ended and their trials all o'er. He told of the prophets and patriarchs who had long slept in the dust of the earth, but who had secured an interest in the heavenly inheritance, and would awaken from their long slumbers to live eternally.

Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked of the new Jerusalem—the pure rivers of life—the golden harps and the songs of the blest? And when we were exhorted to secure a fitness for a participation in the joys of the redeemed—to gird on the Gospel armor and endure hardness as good soldiers—to watch and pray always—when we were assured that the toil would be brief—that sorrow and sighing, oppression and strife would soon be ended—did we not inwardly resolve to meekly bear the cross, and be willing and obedient servants of the Lord? Shall we be faint or be discouraged when we are almost in sight of the prize? Shall we not, rather, serve the Lord with new engagedness, and joyfully press forward toward the land of promise, looking for and loving the appearing of Jesus?

"Let us hail the joyful season,
Let us hail the dawning ray;
When the Lord appears, there's reason
To expect a glorious day;
At his presence,
Gloom and darkness flee away."

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. J. Browe.

Newark, April 13, '56

Bro. Merriam:—The Church in Newark has responded nobly to the suggestion of Bro. E. Burnham in favor and behalf of the Crisis. His short and pithy article was read to the Brethren and Sisters, and a proposition was made at once by Bro. Lyle, that a 10 cent collection should be taken up after the manner of the M. E. Church, which proposition he backed up by his example, which was promptly followed by others, so that there has been put in my hands the sum of nearly $6.00 which I gladly and with joyful heart, hasten to send you, hoping that it will tend to cheer and encourage a faithful servant of God and his Church in his arduous labors, and to stimulate others to do likewise; so that the old debt may be paid, and the best paper in the land (at least for the waiting ones) be relieved from its embarrassment. Now let the various Churches through the country that are looking for the Lord, and are interested in the Crisis, as a free medium of light and encouragement to the little flock, set apart a day—say the first Sunday in May—and take up a collection for the above object, and there is good reason to believe we shall all have the gratification of seeing the good work accomplished, and the Crisis set FREE.

Yours, looking for the redemption of the true Israel, and sudden destruction of those who are now beginning to cry peace and safety after war and tumult,

J. Browe.

Truth.

By John Milton.

Truth, indeed, came once into the world with her Divine Master, and was a perfect shape, and most glorious to look on; but when he ascended, and his apostles after him were laid asleep, then straight arose a wicked race of deceivers, who, as that story goes of the Egyptian Typhon with his conspirators, how they dealt with the good Osiris, took the virgin Truth, hewed her lovely form into a thousand pieces, and scattered them to the four winds. From that time ever since, the sad friends of Truth, such as durst appear, imitating the careful search that Isis made for the mangled body of Osiris, went up and down gathering up, limb by limb, still as they could find them. We have not yet found them all! nor ever shall do, till her Master's second coming; he shall bring together every joint and member, and mould them into an immortal feature of loveliness and perfection.—Cyclopedia of English Literature. Vol. 1., p. 400.

Bro. Merriam:—I was struck with the beauty of the above, and if you think it worthy a place in the Crisis, please insert it. M. A. Cotton.

Gems of Truth.

Selected by William Shepherd.

The Church.

"Protestants do not understand by the Church the body of professed Christians, but the true body of Christ. The true Church may attain its highest state of spiritual excellence in the midst of the general defection of the external body. This will probably be realized in a remarkable manner when Christ comes to judgment. He may hardly find faith on the earth, as it was hard to find during the tenth century, but believers, who shall then be looking for the coming of the Lord, may be standing at an elevation which the Church has never yet reached.

It is a natural consequence that the Church which is the body of the Lord, and out of which there is no salvation—is not any society whatever governed by men, and of which human decisions and a written constitution rule the admission, the conditions, the extent. The true Church is solely the communion of all those who have Jesus Christ for their Head, His word for their rule, His spirit for the principle of life. In vain would a pope, bishop, even synods, presbyteries, councils of Churches disown the members of this body, and excommunicate them; they are the Church, because they are of Christ. 'I believe in the communion of saints.'

"Here, then, are two important principles. The first is, that Christ and His word are the only absolute authorities for the Christian. The second is, that the relation of the saved soul with Christ, is an immediate relationship. No human mediation is necessary to establish and maintain it.

"It is a fundamental principle of the blessed Gospel that nothing which is external—nothing which can give or take from man, constitutes the communion of the soul with God, or salvation; the communion proceeds solely from the act by which the soul without any intervening object attaches itself to Jesus Christ, by means of justifying faith.

"Christian faith rests on Christ, Christian hope is derived from union to Christ. This union to Christ is the ground of the believer's justification, sanctification and redemption."

Truth and Error.

"Truth courts investigation, but error shrinks from scrutiny. Truth fears no evil from the most rigid examination, but error always fears the consequences. Truth is immutable and will stand criticism. Truth, like its glorious Author, is eternal and will continue to exist when all things earthly fail, while error will be swept away with the refuge of lies. The more you examine truth, like gold, the brighter it shines. Truth is not tarnished by inspection, but discovers more splendor. Any system which shrinks from scrutiny, discovers corruption in its premises, and is unworthy of an intelligent man."

Wrong will be Righted.

"It would seem that nothing can permanantly flourish which is founded in a radical principle of wrong. Kingdoms may be conquered, nations trodden under foot, and for a brief period it may seem that force is triumphant over right, but there is a worm in the chaplet of glory acquired by such means which will soon cause it to wither and die. There is a natural, irresistible tendency in everything deranged by violence, to come to its right place either by a speedy reaction, or by going round in a circle, and ending where it begun. It would seem that truth alone, is everlasting, and that nothing can permanently endure which is founded in wrong, or hostile to virtue."

Dependence on God.

"Our dependence on God is such, that we are obliged not only to do everything for His sake, but also to seek from Him the power so to do; and this happy necessity of having recourse to Him in all our wants, instead of being grievous to us, should be our greatest consolation. What a happiness it is, that we are allowed to speak to Him with confidence, to open our hearts and hold familiar converse with Him by prayer."

God's Long-suffering.—Were there but eight, only eight saved? There were thousands, millions sought. Nor is it justice to God to forget how long a period of patience, and preaching, and warning, and compassion, preceded that dreadful deluge. Long before the lightning flashed from angry heavens; long before thunders rolled along dissolving skies; long before the clouds rained down death; long before the floor and solid pavement of this earth, under the prodigious agencies at work, broke up, like the deck of a leaking ship, and the waters rushed from below, to meet the waters from above, and sink a guilty world; long before the time when the ark floated away by tower and town, and those crowded hill-tops, where frantic groups had clustered, and amid prayers and curses, and shrieks and shouts, hung out their signals of distress—very long before this, God had been calling an impenitent world to repentance. Had they no warning in Noah's preaching? Was there nothing to alarm them in the very sight of the ark as story rose upon story; and nothing in the sound of those ceaseless hammers to waken all but the dead? It was not till mercy's arm grew weary ringing the warning bell, that, to use the words of my text, God "poured out his fury" on them. I appeal to the story of this awful judgment. True, for forty days it rained incessantly, and for one hundred and fifty days more "the waters prevailed on the earth;" but while the period of God's justice is reckoned by days, the period of his long-suffering was drawn out into years; and there was a truce of one hundred and twenty years between the first stroke of the bell and the first crash of the thunder. Noah grew gray preaching repentance. The ark stood useless for years, a huge laughing-stock for the scoffer's wit; it stood till it was covered with the marks of age, and its builders with the contempt of the world; and many a sneer had those men to bear, as, pointing to the serene heavens above and an empty ark below, the question was put, "Where is the promise of his coming?" Most patient God! Then, as now, thou wert slow to punish—"waiting to be gracious." Guthrie.

Obituaries.

Died in St. Thomas, W. I, Dec. 19, 1855, of the yellow fever, Charles W., only son of Capt. Warren G. and Julia A. Currier, aged 5 years and 5 months.

The night previous to the death of this little martyr to the grim monster, Death, he broke the solemn stillness of the death chamber, and and sung in sweetest strains:

"We're going to the land,
The land of pure delight,
Where the sky is ever clear,
And the sun is ever bright.
Where the gentle zephyrs play,
All laden with perfume,
Where the grass is ever green,
And the flowers are in bloom."

The next day he appeared for some time unconscious, when opening his eyes, and gazing on his mother, who stood beside the bed of her only son, the voice of little Charley fell in dying accents for the last time on his mother's ear, in the following words: "Good-bye—good-bye—good-bye." He then sung, as he calmly and serenely gathered up his feet in death—

"Go forth to meet your Lord."

Little Charley now sleeps in Jesus, waiting the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God, then he shall awake and sing with all the blood-besprinkled band:

"Where the sky is ever clear,
And the sun is ever bright."

May every little boy and girl that hears this read, prepare to meet dear little Charley Currier.

The tyrant, still triumphing in his indiscriminate ravages, plunges his fatal dart into the heart of Charles's mother, and now we have to record the death of Sister Julia A. Currier, wife of Capt. W. Currier, and daughter of Sister Crane, of Warehouse Point, Ct.

Sister C. died of the yellow fever on the 15th day of Jan., 1856, in the Isle of St. Thomas, aged 42 years. She leaves a husband, an only daughter, and a mother, to mourn her loss. As we are again and again called to notice the death and also attend the funerals of so many of those who are of like precious faith, and have fondly cherished the hope that we should long ere this have been with the Saviour, who is the brightness of His Fathers glory and the express image of His person, our hearts are sad, and we are led to cry out from the depths of our souls:

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just;
While the rich blood of martyr's slain,
Lies mingled with the dust?"

Little did we think when on a visit at the pilgrim's home of Sister Currier on the 8th and 9th of May, 1855, that we should ever be called to announce the death of this kind mother and her little boy. Well, the mother and the child are taken away, and a husband and little daughter and the aged mother now feel deeply the loss. The last words she ever uttered when informed she was dying, were:

"Praise the Lord!"

So our friends and loved ones are falling around; one after another is taken away. We shall see their faces and hear their voices no more until our long absent Lord returns.

"Then they new rising from the tomb,
With brighter lustre far shall shine;
Revive with ever-during bloom,
Safe from diseases and decline."

May the blessing of God rest on the lonely companion, the little daughter, and the aged and widowed mother, is the prayer of my heart, Amen. S. S. Brewer.

Lawrence, Mass, April 7, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—I write the following notice by request:

Died in Mount Holley, Vt., March 17th, 1856, in the 37th year of her age, Sr. Nancy A Cheney, wife of Bro. Thomas A. Cheney. Her disease was consumption; she suffered from ill health for a number of years.

Sr. C. was converted when quite young, and joined the M. E. Church; where she remained a consistent member, until the soul-stirring theme of the Savior's immediate coming was preached in Mount Holley by Bro. S. H. Shipman, in '42. Since that time she has been a constant believer in the Advent doctrine. A short time previous to her death, while conversing with a neighboring Bro., he remarked to her, "then you, like Paul, have a desire to depart and be with Christ." She replied, "yes; but I shall not be with him now; I shall lie in the grave until he comes; and then I shall be with him." She has left a husband and three children with other friends, to mourn the loss of an affectionate companion, and kind and loving mother. She exhorted them in her last moments to be ready to meet her, saying, "I shall not remain in the grave long." O may God give grace to the afflicted family to bear with Christian meekness, their severe bereavement.

Her funeral sermon was preached by Bro. Willard Dow, from 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8, (a text of her selecting) to a large and attentive congregation.

"Farewell sister, thou has left us,
And thy loss we deeply feel;
Though 'tis death that has bereft us,
God can all our sorrows heal."

Solomon E. Spaulding.

Died. At West Poland, Me., April the 2d, Lizzie T. Howard, daughter of Elder L. L. and S. Howard, aged 3 months and 13 days.

"The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord," Job 1: 21. H. J. Hayes.

Lawrence, Mass., April, 1st.

Fell asleep in Jesus in this place, Israel P. James, on the 24th of March, aged 24 years. During his sickness, which was of a pulmonary nature, he was never heard to murmur or complain. Patient and resigned, he waited in calm submission the moment the enemy should close his eyes, and he should lie down and rise not till the heavens be no more. He should not awake, nor be raised out of his sleep;" believing that then they that dwell in the dust shall "awake and sing," when the earth shall cast out her dead.

Thus the monster Death has severed the tender ties of affection that entwine around the tendrils of a mother's heart, and she weeps, but not in hope forlorn.

The writer attended the funeral, and endeavored to comfort the weeping friends with words of Holy writ.

On Lord's day a sermon was preached in the chapel in this place by Eld. A Ross, from these words: "Thou destroyest the hope of man," Job xiv: 19. His remains were carried for interment to Stanstead, C. E., there to sleep till God thourgh the great Life-giver shall send immortality walking through the portals of the gloomy grave. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Amen. S. S. Brewer.

P. S. Will the Advent Herald please, at the solicitation of friends, insert the above?

The above was misplaced, or it would have been inserted before.

Interesting Missionary Intelligence.—Henthada and Toungoo—The Karen department of the Henthada mission has never been in so encouraging a condition as at the present time. An interest has been awakened in several places, and "quite a large number are beginning to worship God through Christ." Nearly twenty young men are laboring as assistants. Favorable indications also exist among the Burman population.

A chapel has been erected and a teacher planted half a day's walk farther from Toungoo than any that have existed previously. During a recent tour, Mr. Whitaker was received everywhere with the greatest enthusi asm. Many followed his train from village to village. "In leaving a village," he says, "it seems as though I was compelled to shake a thousand hands before I can get fairly clear of the chapel, and they are strung all along the path, waiting with hands extended for the first half mile, and by the time we get half way to the next village, we begin to meet the inhabitants of the next parish, coming to pay their respects." Mr. Bennett adds, "The work of grace in Toungoo is wonderful, and it seems a pity that the means should be so inadequate to the work."

A most interesting account is given of the spirit which characterizes the Karen preachers They are indefatigable in their labors, and unceasing in their efforts to diffuse the gospel among their countrymen. San Quala gives a list of eleven churches founded by him, containing 637 members. There are twenty-eight churches connected with the Toungoo mission, embracing a total of 1880 members. In more than forty villages chapels have been built, and the villagers profess to believe in Christ.

Total Destruction of Gerrish Market by Fire—Loss quarter of a Million—Buildings Crushed by Falling Walls—The Steam Engine at Work.—At one o'clock on Saturday, the six story brick building on the corner of Portland and Sudbury Streets, extending to Friend Street, was discovered to be on fire in the upper stories. The wind was strong, added to which the portion of the building on fire was filled with inflammable material, causing the flames to spread with great rapidity. It was at first believed that the lower parts of the building would be saved, but gradually story after story was destroyed until the whole building was a mass of ruins, the falling of the walls in various directions preventing the firemen from having a hand-to-hand encounter with the flames. The dense smoke of the fire was seen for a great distance in the country, and engines from all quarters soon reached the city, including the departments of Cambridge, Charlestown, Roxbury and many other places. At about two o'clock, the steam fire engine, Miles Greenwood, which on that day had been reported by Chief Engineer Smith, as in a working condition, was ordered to the fire by Mayor Rice, and reached Haymarket Square, where it was placed and soon commenced to throw two powerful streams upon the fire, thus liberating most of the hand engines for the protection of the adjoining property, which, at one time, was in great danger.

The Market was erected some four years since by Mr. George W. Gerrish, and probably cost from $75,000 to $100,000. It was insured to the amount of $40,000, a policy of $10,000 having expired a few days since.—Boston Traveller.

Fearful Mortality in Southern Russia.—A correspondent of the Austrian Gazette states—and the report is confirmed by similar statements in other German papers—that typhus fever is making terrible havoc in Southern Russia.

Among the troops and militia stationed at Odessa and vicinity it rages with frightful mortality, and is spreading among the population to such an extent that all the hospitals and many private dwellings are filled with the sick, of whom a vast number die daily. More than twenty thousand soldiers are in the hospitals, and thousands have already died. Among the victims there were in one week twelve army surgeons and four physicians, of whom two were Americans, who had made preparations to return home.

In the city proper some fifteen hundred families are plunged into the deepest poverty, and commitees have been appointed to supply them with food, clothing and fuel; even among the better classes great distress prevails, and the desire for peace is universal. Not only Odessa, but all Southern Russia, in the vicinity of the seat of war, is decimated by this frightful scourge. Baktschiserai, Simpheropol, Cherson, and particularly Nicolaieff, are almost depopulated. Bessarabia is likewise threatened with a visitation of the disease The number of victims up to the latest dates was estimated at not less than 100,000.

The Bible in Newspaper Form.—A meeting was held in New York a few days since to consider the expediency of printing the Bible in newspaper form. Mr. Solomon Jenner presided, and addresses were made by a number of clergymen. It is proposed to print portions of the Scriptures in newspaper form for gratuitous circulation among the lowest and poorest classes. It is hoped that by this means many persons who would otherwise never read the Scriptures may be brought to a knowledge of their truths. Measures are being taken to raise a fund to defray the expenses of the movement.

New Orleans, April 12.—Advices from Galveston of the 8th represent the Indian depredations in Northern Mexico as continuing without abatement. Col. Senaqua had surprised a camp of the Lipans; killed 40 of the Indians and taken 200 prisoners.

Accounts from Illinois represent the coming wheat harvest as likely to be as good as the last, and much larger than ever harvested in the country. The snow within sixty days is estimated to have been worth ten millions of dollars.

The Christian Register says:—It is calculated that the clergy cost the United States six millions of dollars annually; the criminals nineteen millions; the lawyers eighty-five millions; tobacco forty millions, and rum one hundred millions.

Another Fillibuster Excitement in New York—Sailing of the Orizaba for San Juan with Recruits for Walker—Arrests—New York April 9.—Three men were seized yesterday on board the steamer Orizaba, as she was about sailing for San Juan, Nicaragua, charged with organizing a body of armed men to proceed to Nicaragua, to fight against the Republic of Costa Rica. The scene presented on the departure of the steamer was one of considerable excitement and interest, the United States Assistant District Attorney and his assistants having been partly carried down the bay in the steamer. The shouting at this moment was terrific; it was anticipated Mr, Joachimson was destined to take a trip to San Juan. In the meantime, however, word had been sent to the commander of the Revenue Cutter not to permit the departure of the steamer until the Marshal was satisfied.

The Orizaba lay to when in the stream, and the Marshal went out to her in a boat and arrested C. C. Hicks, J. C. Hemmich and John Kingsley; the others were not to be found. The three were taken before Commissioner Stilwell, and by him committed for examination. The bail of Hicks was fixed at $2500, and the other two at $1500 each. The Orizaba was permitted to proceed. It is said that the recuiting party to which the accused belonged, were from Baltimore. Their alleged leader was among those who escaped.

The Orizaba had some five hundred passengers, and of these over three hundred were unquestionably bound for General Walker's army.

Monster Steamships.—The new stamship Adriatic, which was launched at New York Monday is said to be the largest steamer in the world. The only vessel that at present approaches her size is the Persia, and she will only be exceeded by the Leviathan, now building in Glasgow, whose dimensions and tunnage are something fabulous. She is 350 feet in length, 50 feet breadth of beam, 33 feet in depth, and 4,200 tuns measurement. Her hull is divided by water tight bulk-heads. Her entire cost will probably be not far from a million of dollars.

The immense English steamer which is now building at Glasgow is 680 feet long, and will carry 600 first class passengers, and 1800 second class, and 10,000 troops with field equipments. She registers 23,000 tuns with capacity for coal in addition of from 12,000 to 14,000 tuns. She will have seven masts and ten boilers. In addition to an ample complement of boats, she will carry no less than eight small screw steamers, each 110 feet in length, placed four on each side of the vessel, with which she will land and embark both passengers and cargo.

Persecution in Tuscany.—We learn from Italy that the persecution of the native Protestants in Tuscany has re-commenced. We confess we were not prepared for the statement of our correspondent, that ten thousand persons have, on the admissson of the Government authorities, left the Romish Church. And yet other intimations run in the same direction. The supplement to the Austrian Concordat, published the other day, recommends on very flimsy pretexts, greater stringency in the prohibition of heretical books in Italy than in Austria. We suspect the real reason for this is concealed, and only makes itself apparent in the more outspoken persecutions of the Protestants at Pontedera. Who shall measure the depth or the velocity of this under current of feeling which has set in against the Church of Rome, even within the boundaries of "the seat of the Beast?"

The Bible Free in Turkey.—We take pleasure in recording the following significant incident:

A box of New Testaments in Turkish, that were to be shipped at Thessalonia, were recently sent from the Bible depot in Constantinople to the custom-house. As they were books, some copies had to be sent to the government censor to be examined before they could pass. They soon came back with the government seal on the first blank leaf, authorizing their free circulation in Turkey.

Tornado.—Philadelphia, April 13. A tornado last night unroofed 150 houses in different sections of the city, but there was no loss of life so far as heard from. Two large brick churches and three factories in Kensington were unroofed. The large boiler house of the Franklin Iron Works, 150 feet long, was totally demolished. The Trenton railroad depot at Kensington, was partially unroofed. The western telegraph lines are all down, and it will require two or three days to get them again in working order.

Further Account of the Tornado at Philadelphia and vicinity—Life Lost—Cars Blown off the Track.—Philadelphia, April 14. Accounts from towns in the vicinity of this city give additional information of the ravages of the tornado.

A lady was killed at West Chester by a shutter, while she was endeavoring to close the blinds. Innumerable dwellings and barns have been unroofed in every direction.

A train of loaded freight cars, standing near the depot of the Pennsylvania Railroad, in West Philadelphia, was blown from the track. Ten loaded cars on the Reading road were driven an hundred yards from the place where they were left, and five of the number blown off the track.

Damage by Wind.—The squall on Saturday night did considerable damage in Brooklyn. The scaffolding of the new Church, in President street, was blown down, and several houses unroofed.

Meteor.—Belfast, (Me.,) April 11.—At nine o'clock this morning, a large meteor fell to the south of Belfast, shaking the buildings in this city, and was distinctly heard in Rockland and neighboring towns. The noise resembled the explosion of a powder mill. It is not known where it fell.

Destructive Storm in Ohio.—Cleveland, April 14. The storm of Saturday night did great damage along the line of the Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad. A Church and 15 houses were demolished at Alliance, and one man killed. A large number of trees were blown across the track between Salem and Damascus, and much other damage was done.

Nicaraguan Affairs.—The Herald's Washington correspondent says:

"It is true that the French and English squadron contemplate interfering in the Central American war, if the assertion of a distinguished foreign Minister, who ought to know, is to be believed."

FOREIGN NEWS.

Four Days Later from Europe.

Arrival of Steamship Washington.

New York, April 13.—The steamer Washington, from Southampton, March 26, arrived at this port at 7 o'clock this morning, bringing Liverpool dates of 24th, and London 25th.

The peace treaty was not signed. Matters at the Paris conference were not so harmonious, owing to difficulties interposed by Prussia. Peace, however, is considered substantially certain.

According to the London Times, the cause of the difficulties at the Paris conference, was a demand put forth by the Prussian plenipotentiaries to be admitted to sign the treaty of peace on the same footing, and in the same character as if Prussia had been a party to the alliance throughout. It is said that Russia supports Prussia in these pretensions. This took place at the meeting of the 22d. Another meeting was held on the 24th, but nothing of its deliberations had transpired. The opinions that the conference would ultimately resolve itself into an European congress is strongly believed.

The Times's Crimean correspondent says the war party still cherish hopes that the negotiations may break down. It may suit the French to make concessions, but it ought not to suit us. They doubtless consider they have done enough for honor and glory, and to revenge the reverses of 1812; moreover, they cannot afford war as England can, and their army, however numerous on paper, is dwindling sadly; scurvy and fever is playing havoc in its ranks. The mortality is stated to be 120 per day, and frequently more.

The allies had commenced the demolition of the enclosure lines around Sebastopol.

Ismael Pacha is increasing the army of Anatolia. His adversary, Gen. Mouravieff has reinforcements via. Caspian Sea and Tiflis.

The city of Parma has been again laid under siege, owing to frequent disturbances and assassinations. The government had also become greatly alarmed, owing to the cattle murrain, said to be spreading all over the continent.

Sir Hyde Parker, commander of the English naval forces in the East Indies, died at Davenport, on the 21st of March.

Sir Henry Pottinger died at Malta, March 18th.

Advices from Hamburgh state that Commodore Watson had declared Liban and all the Russian ports in the Baltic, in a state of blockade.

Advices from Persia state that Dost Mahommed has taken possession of Candapar, and Persian troops were marching against him.

A telegraphic despatch from Jassy states that a courier, who was the bearer of a formal demand for a union of the principalities, addressed to Count Walowski, had been arrested at Czernowitz.

Advices from Nicolaieff state that a commission had arrived there from St. Petersburg on March 4, and immediately commenced operation for the abandonment of that place as a military depot. It was stated it would be declared a free port.

THREE DAYS LATER.

Arrival of the Cambria.

Halifax, April 14.—The Royal Mail steamship Cambria, Capt. Douglass, from Liverpool on Saturday, 29th ult., arrived at this port en route for Boston, this forenoon.

The news is three days later than that received by the Washington, but presents no feature of decided importance.

The difficulties reported to have presented themselves in the Peace Conferences, just prior to the Washington's departure, are understood to have been removed, and it is confidently expected that the treaty of peace would be signed in a few days.

The Peace Conferences.—It seems to have been fully expected that the labors of the Conferences would be brought to a close on the night of the 22d ult., and that the treaty of peace would be signed so that it might be officially announced on Sunday morning the 23d, simultaneously with the celebration of the Te Deum in thanksgiving for the birth of the Imperial Prince. "The effect," says the Paris correspondent of the London Times, "would have been fine—while the solemn strain was pealing beneath the roofs of every Cathedral in France, that the thunder of cannon should announce the consummation of the work of peace." The Emperor, it is said, was so certain that the treaty would be signed, that he had given orders for the illuminations in the ministerial offices; and on the authority of other supposed to be well informed parties, it was affirmed that the business of the session of the conferences on Saturday would hardly be more than affixing signatures and shaking hands. But these predictions were not realized. The Times correspondent writing on Sunday evening, says:

"Difficulties have arisen which I hope are not unsurmountable, but which may take time to remove. That time is felt to be very precious in every respect, and not least in a financial point of view. Indeed, the loss incurred is considerable in men as well as money. Typhus is raging in the army, and the expense incurred by 14 or 15 days' unnecessary delay in the Crimea, is calculated for the English at about 20,000,000f., for the French about 15,000,000f. Our armistice expires on the 31st, and it is denied, though I can hardly credit the denial, that it will be renewed; but even if it be renewed, an act of indiscretion on the part of a general officer, of a diplomatic agent, or even of inferior persons, may add new complications, as if there were not enough already. You will agree with me that the cause must be a serious one indeed which would justify so much loss.

The Pacific—The British Admiralty, in response to an appeal addressed to them through the London Times, had despatched two steamers, the Desperate and Tartarus, in search of the missing Pacific. The Times remarks:

"The chance of success is very remote. The true course of action is neither to give way to exultation nor despondency, but to bend every nerve to the discharge of a solemn duty. The assistance which we now send would have been sent in any case, but we must not lose sight of the fact that our Transatlantic friends despatched an expedition in search of our missing countrymen in the Polar Seas. Such facts as these are far better evidence of the real sentiments that prevail among the great masses of the two communities than the noisy brawling of stump orators.

Italy.—It is stated in our telegraphic summary, the city of Parma, had been laid under siege. The immediate cause was an atrocious attempt to assassinate Gaetano Bordi, Auditor of War, as he was walking in the street. He was stabbed in the back by an unknown hand, and his life was in great danger. The assassin fled, and could not be arrested.

Russia.—Letters from St. Petersburg announce that after conclusion of peace, conferences will be held to examine and discuss plans of reform in commercial policy. The journey of the Emperor into Poland is postponed until his coronation. There are indications of bad feeling between Russia and Austria.

The Peace Conference—Paris, Friday night. No doubt seems to be entertained that the treaty of peace will be signed early in Easter week.

Some surprise is felt in the department that 140,000 more recruits should be demanded for the army, as last year.

There is some talk, however, of a powerful force being sent into Africa, to complete the entire subjugation of the native tribes.

The French portion, too, of the army of occupation in Turkey, will not be less than 40,000 effectives.

The Peace Conference.—The Peace Congress met again Thursday, 27th ult. All the members were present. The deliberations were reported important. The treaty of peace, it is confidently believed, would be signed on Saturday, March 29th.

Lord Clarendon earnestly resisted Prussia's claims, and insisted that she should only adhere to the treaty of 1840, which was signed without her participation in making it.

The Times correspondence says that "Clarendon prevailed in his motion, and that an arrangement is come to that the Allies shall sign one protocol, and that a second shall be drawn up, which Prussia and the Allies shall sign jointly. A committee is now occupied in the "reduction" of both protocols. The only delay, supposing no accident occurs, can be in properly framing these protocols."

The armistice is not formally prolonged, but telegraphic instructions are sent not to renew hostilities without express orders.

Austria.—The differences between Austria and Rome, relating to the proposed conference to interpret the Concordat, have been mutually arranged.

A very bad feeling is exhibited by Russia and Prussia towards Austria; exhibiting itself in numerous small matters.

France.—The papers continue to publish shoals of congratulatory addresses.

A review of 100,000 men will be held at Paris, and celebrate the signing of the treaty of peace. The review is nominally as a compliment to Count Orloff, the only soldier of the Plenipotentiaries.

Among rumors prevalent, one is, that the Emperors of Russia and Austria have respectively promised to visit Paris soon after the conclusion of peace.

Six thousand French have embarked at Marseilles for the Crimea, probably to supply sick vacancies.

Napoleon determines to send an extensive expedition of colonization to Madagascar. England does not oppose.

THE SCRIPTURE DOCTRINE OF

FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By H. H. Dobney,

Baptist Minister, of England.

Fourth Edition.

WITH AN APPENDIX ON

THE STATE OF THE DEAD,

By John Milton,

Author of "Paradise Lost."

1 Vol. 12 Mo., 310 Pages. Price 75 Cents.

This is one of the most important works ever issued upon this solemn subject. Clear, forcible, and sometimes eloquent in his language, the author surveys the whole field, and presents his arguments and examines objections with the facility of "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The style is calm and Christian, a rare excellence in a controversial work. The Universalist, the skeptic, and the infidel, will find here that while the truths they hold are admitted in all their force, yet the reasonableness of revelation and the retribution therein revealed cannot be denied. And the believer in the doctrine of the Eternal agony of the multitudes of the Lost, will find that objections to that opinion exist in the word of God, no less serious than those which arise from the calm consideration of the subject in the light of human reason.

Let all obtain and read this work with care, and we shall await with confidence the verdict of the candid and unprejudiced.

The volume is an elegant 12mo., and contains besides the views of the poet Milton, who, with Luther, Tindale, Bishop Law and Archbishop Whately, defends the doctrine of unconsciousness in death.

It will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the price, 75 cents.

For the Crisis.

How many Dispensations are presented in Scripture?

Four—The Patriarchal ,the dispensation of the Law, the dispensation of the Gospel, and the dispensation of the fulness of times. These are illustrated by Exekiel's vision of the waters that issued out of the sanctuary. The amount of truth given in the Patriarchal dispensation, is comparable to the first measurement of the waters, which was up to the ankles, and so on. The dispensation of the fulness of times, will be a river to swim in, that cannot be passed over; spoken of again, as the "Times of Restitution," in which God "will gather together in one all things in Christ both which are in Heaven and which are on earth; even in Him."

The law is the letter and killeth—the Gospel and Spirit give life.

What is meant by the fulness of times?

All the truth, all the curse, all the blessings of the past will come down into the fourth dispensation, as the waters of a river small in their beginnings, increase, deepen and widen till they arrive at their fulness, which fulness is made up of all the waters of the river from their beginnings. All the promises made to the Patriarchs will be fulfilled; all the curse of the law executed upon those who are under the law; all the blessings of the Gospel or fulness of the Spirit bestowed upon those who are under grace or have the Spirit.

Where are we in this river? Near the close of the third, or dispensation of the Gospel, waiting for the latter rain, or "refreshing from the presence of the Lord," to prepare us to be presented as a chaste virgin unto Christ. In the days of the voice of the seventh angel, which warns us of events that will come when the seventh angel shall have sounded. The seventh is the last, and it is also the Trump of God when the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. Then shall the kingdoms of this world become our Lord's and His Christs. When the Nobleman returns, having received the kingdom and reckons with His servants. Hence commences the day of reckoniug, the day of judgment, for Christ judges "the quick and the dead at His appearing and Kingdom." Then commences the seventh day or Millennium, the day of redemption of the purchased possession; which work, I learn from Scripture, is progressive. The literal Zion, (a fort at Jerusalem—"the castle of Zion which is the city of David,") as well as the spiritual (outcast, Zion that no man seeketh after; whose speech shall be low out of the dust, &c.) shall be saved fist." For the Lord shall visit Ariel, the city where David dwelt with thunder and with earthquake and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of night vision, &c., so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion," Isaiah 29: 6,–8, which is also treated upon by Zech. 14: 3–5. "Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations as when He fought in the day of battle—ye shall flee like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah king of Judah." How did the Lord fight in the day of battle? The 83d Ps. gives us some intimation of it, "keep not thou silence, O God; hold not thy peace and be not still, O God. For lo, thine enemies make a tumult; and they that hate thee have lifted up the head. They have taken crafty counsel against thy people, and consulted against thy hidden ones. They have consulted together with one consent; they are confederate against thee; The tabernacles of Edom (Esau) and the Ishmaelites of Moab, and the Hagarenes; Gebal, Ammon and Ameleh; the Philistines, with the inhabitants of Tyre; Assur is also joined with them; they have helped the children of Lot. Do unto them as unto the Midianites; as to Sisera, as to Jabin, at the brook Kison: which perished at Endor; they became as dung for the earth. Make their nobles like Oreb, and Zeeb; yea all their princes as Zebah and as Zalmunna: who said let us take to ourselves the houses of God in possession. O my God make them like a wheel; as the stubble before the wind. As the fire burneth a wood, and as the flame setteth the mountains on fire, so persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm. Fill their faces with shame; that they may seek thy name, O Lord." Isaiah treats upon the same subject—10: 20–26, "and it shall come to pass in that day, that the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob shall no more again stay upon him that smote them; but shall stay upon the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, in truth. The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God. For though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet a remnant of them shall return; the consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness. For the Lord God of Hosts shall make a consumption; even determined in the midst of all the land. Therefore thus saith the Lord God of Hosts, O my people that dwellest in Zion, be not afraid of the Assyrian; he shall smite thee with a rod, and shall lift up his staff against thee, after the manner of Egypt. For yet a very little while and the indignation shall cease, and mine anger in their destruction. And the Lord of Hosts shall stir up a scourge for him according to the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb; and as His rod was upon the sea, so shall he lift it up after the manner of Egypt."

How did the Lord do unto the Midianites? He raised up Gideon and selected an army of three hundred from ten thousand, and sent them forth with a trumpet in every man's hand, with empty pitchers, and lamps within the pitchers. And when they had surrounded the camp of the Midianites in the night time, in the beginning of the middle watch, they blew the trumpets, brake the pitchers and cried, "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon." "And the Lord set every man's sword against his fellow, even throughout all the host." "When the report of Gideon's victory reached the Israelites they took their weapons and pursued their enemies, and overtook them in a certain valley encompassed with torrents, a place where these could not get over, so they surrounded them, and slew them all with their kings, Oreb and Zeeb." Josephus. "And Gideon came to Jordan and passed over, he, and the three hundred men that were with him, faint, yet pursuing." They took the two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, and discomfited all the host, about 15,000. The whole number were about 120,000. On enquiry, Gideon found that Zebah and Zalmunna were the murderers of his brethren. And he said, "as the Lord liveth, if ye had saved them alive, I would not slay you." And he said unto Jetha, his first-born, "Up, and slay them." "Execute the judgment written, this honor have all the saints," or first born.

What is the "purchased posfession" promised to the people of God? Ultimately the whole earth. "The meek shall inherit the earth." When speaking of the children of Israel by the prophet Ezekiel, the Lord says: "My tabernacle shall be with them, yea, I will be their God and they shall be my people." Rev. 21: 3, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them." Again, Ezek. 37: 26, "and I will set my Sanctuary in the midst of them forever more." What is the difference between Tabernacle and Sanctuary? Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning." From the many texts written, we learn that both mean a dwelling place for the Lord to manifest His glory. He first walked with the children of Jesus in a tent and in a tabernacle," 1 Sam. 7: 6.

Afterward Solomon built him an house. David says to Solomon, 1 Chron. 28: 10, "Take heed now; for the Lord hath chosen thee to build an house for the Sanctuary; be strong and do it." According to David in Ps. 78: 34, the land of Canaan is the Sanctuary. And He brought them to the border of His sanctuary even to this mountain, which His right hand purchased. His saints are His Sanctuary. Ps. 114: 1, 2. When Israel went out of Egypt—Judah was His Sanctuary." Heaven is the height of His Sanctuary, Ps 102: 19. Dan. 8: 14, "Unto 2300 days shall the Sanctuary be cleansed." This was the one Daniel was so much interested about—the land on which the temple or house was built—the house in which his people had worshipped and the Lord had manifested His glory, and which was defiled and trodden down.

Luke 21: 24, "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword and shall be led away captive into all nations. And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Then shall Jerusalem, the land of Canaan, the true Israel be cleansed—saved. Then will the Deliverer come out of Zion and turn ungodliness from Jacob. Then shall David's prayer be answered Ps. 14: 7, "Oh that the salvation of (literal) Israel were come out of Zion." Ezek. 34: 26, "And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them—and I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing."

Of the land the Lord says, "O ye mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come. For behold I am for you and ye shall be tilled and sown and I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it; and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes builded, and I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit; and I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings; and ye shall know that I am the Lord. Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and they shall possess thee and thou shalt be their inheritance. And thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men," (no more death) Ezek. 36: 8–12.

Of the people he says: "Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their own way and by their doings; wherefore I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed upon the land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it; and I scattered them among the heathen and they were dispersed through the countries; according to their way and according to their doings I judged them. Therefore say unto the house of Israel: Thus saith the Lord God: I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for my holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen whither ye went. And I will sanctify my great name which was profaned among the heathen, and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes. For I will take you from among the heathen, I will gather you out of all countries, and will bring you unto your own land. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness, and from all your idols will I cleanse you. A new heart also, will I give, and a new spirit will I put within you, and I will take the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give yon a heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes and ye shall dwell in the land that I gave unto your fathers; and ye shall be my people and I will be your God." "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and shall put my Spirit in you and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land. And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my Sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forever more. And David my servant shall be king over them."

Does the Bible afford a promise of restitution to any other portion of the earth at the same time that Jerusalem is to be restored? Read the word of the Lord by Ezek. 16: 48–63, "As I live, saith the Lord God, Sodom thy sister hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou (Jerusalem) hast done, thou and thy daughters. Neither hath Samaria committed half thy sins; but thou hast multiplied thine abominations more than they, and hart justified thy sisters in all thine abominations which thou hast done. When I shall bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them." * * * When thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate." "Thou hast borne thy lewdness and thine abominations, saith the Lord. For thus saith the Lord God: I will even deal with thee as thou hast done, which hast despised the oath in breaking the covenant. Nevertheless I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, (Abraham) and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant. Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thine younger; and I will give them unto thee for daughters, but not by thy covenant, (the Law.) And I will establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord; that thou mayest remember and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord."

What is the condition of the rest of the earth from generation to generation? By comparing the 13th and 34th chs. of Isaiah we find it anti-types Babylon.

Isa. 13: 19–22, "And Babylon, the glory of Kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldeans' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there. But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there. And the wild beasts of the Islands shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces; and her time is near to come, and her days shall not be prolonged."

Why has he thus treated Babylon? 14: 1, 2, "For (because) the Lord will have mercy upon Jacob, and will yet choose Israel and set them in their own land, and strangers shall be joined with them, and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob. And the people shall take them and bring them to their own place; and the house of Israel shall possess them in the land of the Lord for servants and handmaids; and they shall take them captives, whose captives they were; and they shall rule over their oppressors."

It was the purpose of the Lord that that nation who had pressed his people beyond measure should be overthrown, and Cyrus, whom he had previously named, should be their temporal savior. This land still lies under the righteous judgment of God. Ancient Babylon had a people whose proud and self-exalted character has been strikingly anti-typed by mystical Babylon, the Roman Catholic Church and her daughters, whose oppressive spirit operates against the true people of God, and whose overthrow will be for the same reason.

Isa. 34: 1, 2, "Come near ye nations, to hear; and hearken ye people: let the earth hear and all that is therein; the world and all things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and His fury upom all their armies; He hath utterly destroyed them. He hath delivered them to the slaughter." V. 5, 6, "For my sword shall be bathed in heaven; behold it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse to judgment. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, their land shall be soaked with blood." V. 8—11, "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompence for the controversy of Zion. And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up forever; from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it forever and ever. But the comorant and the bittern shall possess it; the owl also and the raven shall dwell it."

V. 13–14, "Thorns shall come up in her palaces, nettles and brambles in the fortresses thereof: and it shall be a habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. The wild beasts of the desert shall also meet with the wild beasts of the island, and the satyr shall cry to his fellow; the screech-owl also shall rest there and find for himself a place of rest; they shall possess it forever, from generation to generation shall they dwell therein."

. In the ministration of the Law, God gave the Jews an opportunity to try what they could do to make known His Power, Goodness and Glory among the nations of the earth, and when raised to great eminence and beauty, and prospered into a kingdom, then they forsook the Lord and trusted in their beauty. "For it was perfect through my comeliness which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord God." Their abominations are recorded by Ezek. 16: 15–34. They finally sealed their doom by condemning the true Messiah, and rejecting His gospel after His disciples had been begotten again unto a lively hope by His resurrection from the dead. The Gentiles then, had the same opportunity. A new dispensation is introduced—the ministration of the Spirit, which exceeded in glory the ministration of condemnation. The body of Adam was glorious, when made in the likeness of God—so was the Law—but when God breathed into Adam the breath of life, and he became a living soul, how much greater the glory of Adam then—so is the Spirit to the law, or literal or outward. They are not independent of each other. Paul says of the Law, "I had not known sin but by the Law." And we may say, had we not known sin, we should not have known the value of a Savior.

The Jew is for all literal, and the majority of Christians now, are for all spiritual; and happy indeed are all such who are led by the Spirit, but the fulness of glory cannot be manifested by either separate.

The Gentile has alike with the Jewish Church, failed to make known the name of the Lord, but have alike profaned His name among the heathen, or those who do not profess to know the Lord. They too, have killed the Prince of Life by putting His faithful ones to death, many, literally, and many spiritually, by casting them out, destroying their influence and saying, "They have sinned, let the Lord be glorified;" notwithstanding all this, the promise of God is sure. Num. 14: 21, "But as surely as I live, the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Many in all past times have been gathered to the grave as a shock of corn fully ripe, prepared in its season for the harvest, (end of this world,) when they with those who have crucified the flesh shall be manifested —"made perfect in one"—cleansed from all their filthiness and from all their idols. —no longer trodden down. To-day we stand by faith. "Christ is a Son over His own house, whose house are we, if we hold fast the beginning of our confidence firm unto the end." All the words of Holy writ are good, and every jot and tittle shall be fulfilled. A part at one time and the rest at another and still another; and it will not all be fulfilled till the time arrives when Christ shall have put down all rule and all authority, and every creature which is in Heaven and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them."

A Soul---its Value.

By H. L. H.

As we are informed that he that converteth a sinner shall save a soul from death, and as the question has been propounded by the Great Preacher, "What is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" it may be proper to occupy ourselves a little with contemplating its value.

By the term soul, here, we are to understand a a human being; for a parallel passage represents the gainer of the whole world, as "loosing himself or becoming a castaway."

This question of the Savior, in itself, would be sufficient to awaken our attention to a consideration of the value of man—as he seems to throw him singly into the scale, and weigh him against the world—certainly he must be of immense and incalculable value.

We sometimes attach value to an article on account of its origin. And if the lovers of the beautiful, would spare no wealth to obtain a block of marble chisseled by the hand of a Praxiteles, or a picture drawn by the hand of an Angelo, what must be the value of the living specimen of Jehovah's handiwork? What must be the price of that clay that has been moulded in beauty by the hands of Elohim, and enlivened by the breath of his lips?

Or, if we estimate the value of a substance by the associations that it recalls, if we value some battered and mutilated statue because it presents not only the glory of Grecian art, but also the image of a Grecian Hero, and the story of his noble deeds, —then how highly shall man be valued—since he furnishes us with our nearest and most perfect type of Him, in whose image he was created, and also appears to us as a rich though ruined relic of the golden age that has long since passed away?

But this is an age when men are busy enquiring after the profit, the practical value, and utility of things. And in this point of view, if we value the mechanism that in its operations transcends the wildest fancy of days gone by,—if we prize the master products of human ingenuity,—if we contemplate with astonishment and admiration the fruits of human intellect, wherewith shall we value the being that has within him not only the elements of these magnificent productions, but also the germs and seeds of other and mightier ones that are yet unborn?

We value a seed because it may with careful culture expand and display a gorgeous flower, or spring upward and become a stately tree. We value a helpless child because he is the father of the man, and within that infantile mind are undeveloped powers that will grow with its growth, and strengthen with its strength, until earth shall tremble with fear, or smile with delight at the mention of his name. And if we thus value these things, how shall we value man, the noblest work of God, who, if planted in a nobler soil, and beneath a kindlier sky, and endowed with continuance there, might and would, in his expansion, as far transcend his present littleness as the tree in the branches of which all the fowls of the heaven do lodge exceeds "the mustard seed," "which is the smallest among the seeds."

Not the least valuable property of man is his capacity for enjoyment. If his ice-like heart was warmed by no kindly glow, if he was void of emotion, as the machinery that he produces—if joy never could cause his heart to beat higher, and his eye to beam with an unwonted brightness, then his value would well nigh be gone. Who would desire to preserve a race unfeeling as the stones? Who would weep to see the waters of oblivion close forever above a generation that could never be happy?

But man is not so. O, there are even in this world, days of joy that would repay long years of toil. There are hours into which the bliss of a lifetime seems to be crowded, and which make the weary son of sorrow forget his toils and repent of his murmurings, and say, "it is good for me that I have lived upon the earth." But these mountain tops with their sun-gleams are rare, and the intervening valleys are deep and dreary. But there is another world, where the gladness of an earthly life may be comprised in the period of a single hour—where all the melody of earth shall be forgotten in one glorious burst of music from "harpers harping with their harps," where all the grand and thrilling anthems of this world shall lose their harmony in that one song of "Salvation to our God." And man may be there! Man who takes so much delight in earthly joy, may share that which shall be perfect and unending. Man who wears out his life in the pursuit of a few evonescent pleasures, may share that fulness of joy, and possess those pleasures for evermore.

Yes; for ever, for man may be brought up from the dust of death—his weakness may become power—his dishonor may become glory—and that which was natural and dying in its constitution, may become spiritual and immortal by the will and power of God. And does not this render his value incalculable? The proudest works of man must pass away and moulder down. History shows us this. But while of the Temple of Jerusalem, with its magnificence, only a few pilgrim-kissed stones remain; while the Parthenon, the brightest gem of earth's broad zone, is but a heap of ruins; while the Palaces of the Cæsars have become a rope-walk, the Roman Forum a cow-market—and the Tarpeian rock a cabbage garden,—while even the Pyramids themselves are all hastening to decay—while earth and all its glory rolls on to dissolution and desolation; while the works that are in it, however costly or enduring, must kindle the fires of the burning day, man may survive them all, and though in the cycles of eternity, star after star may disappear from view, yet shall the saint of God live onward. And is he of no value?

Let us look from another point of view. Go, mourner, go and gather to thyself all the wealth of many lands. Enter the caverns of the deep and bring up the riches of sunken argosies, ransack the bowels of the earth—enter the coffers of the rich and the covetous—traverse the broad world and return and bring its gold and silver and heap it one vast and glittering pile. Go again and bring "each gem that glows amid earth's treasures of darkness," bring the sapphire and the emerald, the ruby and the crystal, the diamond and the onyx, bring up each pearl that lies hidden beneath the ocean wave, and pluck each brilliant that sparkles in the coronet of royalty—bring all these, and lay them with all the broidered robes and costly apparel, with all the fragrant perfumes and precious spices of eastern lands,—by the loved one's grave, and thus see if you can buy back a single one from the embrace of death. Yes, go and bring every gem that sparkles in the foundations of the City of God—bring every treasure that is there displayed, and bribe the grim king of terrors to let thy loved one go. And there, while the gates of the grave are yet unclosed, and while no answer comes from the guardian of those gloomy realms, learn the value of a soul!

Nay, we must go farther to learn it. We must pass by the treasures of earth as of no account—we must leave behind us the precious wisdom of the sages of olden time —we need not bring the prayers of the good, they will not avail, even the tear of penitence, so precious in the sight of God, is worthless here. We must forget all these and yet enquire the value of a soul. We must traverse every land, and survey every product of God's creative energy, and having sought throughout the universe, we must come back, and stooping down beside the cross of Calvary, we must grope amid the "darkness" that is "throughout all the land," until the returning light reveals to us the Saviour dead, and the earth crimsoned with his trickling blood. Here shall we find the value of a soul, and here standing beneath the shadow of the cross we will read—"Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot."

Here is the long-sought price—the equivalent of the soul. No wonder that the Apostle exhorted his brethren to care for the flock of God, since he had bought them with his own blood. This is the price—the blood of the Son of God for the soul—the man.

And now need I say one word to influence any to engage in the work of saving mankind? This soul once lost is lost forever. This soul must be saved "from death," or it must "die." It must live onward while eternity shall roll its ample cycles, or it must be "punished with everlasting destruction," and "be as though it had not been." These are the utterances of inspiration, the oracles of eternal truth. And that "soul" is yourself, or your brother, your sister, your wife, your husband, or your neighbor.

Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins. —Bible-Examiner.

The Reward of Dilligence.—"Seest thou a man dilligent in his business?" says Solomon: "he shall stand before kings." We have a striking illustration of this aphorism in the life of Dr. Franklin, who, quoting the sentence himself adds, "This is true; I have scood in the presence of five kings, and once had the honor of dining with one." All in consequence of his having been "dilligent in business" from his earliest years. What a lesson for our youth, and for us all!

The Seal of the Living God—The 144,000—The Everlasting Gospel—Fall of Babylon, and Third Angel's Message. Rev. 7th and 14th Chapters.

BY I. T. SWEET.

No. 3.

Having shown that the servants of God were sealed after believing the gospel of the everlasting covenant, which gospel began to be preached at Jerusalem, on the day of Pentecost, when Peter stood up with the eleven, presenting the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost to those that should believe; the receiving of which, seals them servants of God, says Paul, Eph. 1: 12, 13, we come to the conclusion, that the preachers of the everlasting gospel are symbolized by the angel having the Seal of the living God. As his work commences with the preaching of said gospel, it will, of course continue while said gospel is preached; as he commenced his mission in the east, so the gospel began at Jerusalem; at which place Jesus told the disciples to tarry until they were endued with power from on high; for, saith he, "ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence;" as much as to say, wait until you are qualified for your mission, by receiving the Seal of the living God; then commence your work of sealing my servants. "And lo! I am with you alway, (by the spirit) even unto the end of the world."

Now before we come to the falling away, these messengers or this class of messengers are represented as having ascended into the midst of heaven with "the everlasting gospel to preach to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, saying, "Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come," &c. Shortly after the apostasy, we find some of God's servants sealed in their foreheads; at the time of the sounding of the fifth trumpet and first woe; Rev. 9: 4. This was about the commencement of the 7th century. On the first day of the preaching of the gospel, there were three thousand believers. Two thousand were added soon after; so that the number of the men were about five thousand, Acts 4: 4. Says John, "And I heard the number of them that were sealed, and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel." Five thousand is about one 29th part of 144,000; so we see it would take but a short time to complete this number, even at the rate of one thousand per year; 140 years would complete the number. And if they come from all the tribes of the children of Israel, there could be but ten thousand from each tribe; how so? I will explain myself; Manasseh is named here as the head of one of the tribes—he was Joseph's son. Jacob blessed Joseph's two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, and adopted them as his own; saying, these shall be mine, but thy seed after them, shall be thine; and shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance; so Manasseh and Ephraim were Jacob's sons, Gen. 48: 5, 6 Again: if Manasseh is head of one of the tribes of Israel, so is also Ephraim; but he is left out here. He would make the thirteenth tribe. Again: Dan should be represented here, as he was one of the twelve sons of Jacob; and Jacob said of him, "he shall judge his people, as one of the tribes of Israel," Gen. 49: 16. In the 48th ch. of Ezekiel's prophecy, Dan is recognized as one of the tribes, vs. 2, 32; so he would make the fourteenth in the dividing of the land as anticipated in Ezekiel 48: 1–7. Ephraim and Manasseh were to have a portion; but in giving the names of the tribes of Israel for the twelve gates of the city, Ephraim and Manasseh are omitted; while Dan is recognized as one of the twelve tribes. Again: in the 21st ch. of Rev., it is said, the twelve gates of the city shall be called after the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. Here the names are not specified; but in Ezek. 48: 32, Dan is recognized as one of the twelve names for the gates. Dan is therefore one of the twelve tribes, while Ephraim and Manasseh make the fourteen. Hence we see that Manasseh is not one of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel; for Ephraim has the same title, yea, I may say he is before Manasseh; because, when Jacob blessed and adopted Joseph's two sons as his own, (which makes the fourteen tribes,) he crossed his hands, putting his right hand on Ephraim's head, while Manasseh was the first born; and Joseph would have corrected the old pilgrim, and have him put his right hand on the head of Manasseh, saying, this is the first born, but Jacob said, "I know it, my Son, I know it; he also shall become a people, but his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations. So we see that Manasseh is not one of the twelve, but he is the last of the fourteen. This is a demonstration, that this has no reference, to the literal tribes of Israel; but these names are only used as symbols, and the number, 144,000, is as ymbolic number, including all the saints that shall be sealed from the time of the Apostles, beginning at Jerusalem, to the time of the four angels letting go the four winds. Then the servants of God are all sealed; this work cannot be limited or confined to any particular class of the servants of God in any particular generation, for it as essential that God's people be sealed in our generation, as in another; and as to their being sealed after the day of wrath has come, Rev. ch. 6: 17; I have only to ask, what you would think of a man that owned one hundred sheep, and should let them run at large for six months, and mingle themselves with one thousand of another man's sheep, without being marked, and then, when he was to take them home to his own pasture, should first mark them before separating them from the one thousand sheep with which they had been running? Or, if he should purchase one hundred out of a stock of one thousand, which he purposed to leave for some specified time, and then should mark them when he was taking them home? You would wish to know why he marked them then, as they were not to run with other sheep after they were thus marked; why not mark them before they were left to mingle themselves with the one thousand. You certainly would think the man very unwise. God's saints, we think, are sealed from the time they become His, by believing the gospel truth. We will now compare the 144,000 of ch. 7, with the 144,000 of ch. 14.

We have affirmed that this number includes all the saints from the day of Pentecost to the time of the letting go of the four winds. After John had heard the number of them that were sealed, he says, v. 9, "I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God," &c. And one of the elders says to John, "What are these which are arrayed in white robes? And whence came they?" And he answers, "thou knowest." And he said, "These are they that have come out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." He then tells John that the Lamb shall lead them, v. 17. Now observe, here, John heard the number that were sealed, he then looks, and behold, a great multitude as the result of the sealing of this 144,000. The elder tells him, this multitude came out of great tribulation; then they did not come out of the last generation. The Lamb was to lead this multitude, then, of course, they follow Him. This multitude had white robes, then they were servants of God; and if so, they must be included in the number of them that were sealed. Again: they cried with a loud voice, Salvation, &c. This loud voice, then, came from a multitude, from all nations, kindreds, tongues and people, that should follow the Lamb. Let it be remembered, the angel with the everlasting gospel, was to go to all nations, kindreds, tongues and people. We have shewn that the believers of the everlasting gospel, were sealed with the Holy Spirit, by reference to Eph. 1: 13; 4: 30; and Acts 2: 38. This multitude, then, must have heard the gospel, and believed from the fact, they had white robes; a symbol of the righteousness of saints, Rev. 19: 8. Now we wish to demonstrate, that this is the 144,000 of ch. 14. Let us follow John in his vision as recorded in ch. 14: 1–24. He now sees a Lamb on Mount Zion, and with him, 144,000 having his Father's name written in their foreheads. He then hears a voice as the voice of many waters, a symbol of nations, tongues and people, Rev. ch. 17: 15, This 144,000 then, is from these nations, kindreds, tongues, &c.; as their voice is the same as the voice of those of ch. 7: 9, 10. And they sang a new song before the throne, that no one could learn but the 144.000 that were redeemed from the earth. Think you that the multitude of ch. 7, that cried Salvation to our God, and were led unto living fountains of waters, were redeemed from the earth? I think so. Could they learn the song? They could not unless they were included in the number 144,000. Were they included in that number? We answer, they were. Hearken, and see who this 144,000 were, v. 4, These are THEY that followed the Lamb; did the multitude of ch. 7: 17, follow the Lamb? Ans. The Lamb led them; I think they followed him; then as these are they that follow the Lamb, they must be the multitude from all nations, kindreds, tongues and people, of whom it was said by the elder, the Lamb shall LEAD them unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. But it is said also of these, "They were redeemed from among men being the first fruits, unto God and the Lamb;" then the first fruits came from among men, not from the graves, but from among men; evidently from among all nations, and they sung a new song, that no one could learn but those included in the number specified. Now if we can find that some from all nations, kindreds, tongues and people, did sing the new song, then, we shall have twice proved, that the redeemed from all nations are included in the number 144,000. Now we will turn to ch. 5: 9, "And they sung a new song, saying, thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;" we think this is enough to demonstrate, who was included in the number 144,000

Let us recapitulate. When John first heard of the number sealed, he looked, and lo, a great multitude from all nations, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and this multitude cried with a loud voice, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb; this was the result of the sealing angel's mission. He was told that this company came out of great tribulation, and they should be led by the Lamb; he next sees the 144,000 on Mount Zion; and again he heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, (a symbol of nations, ch. 17: 15,) when he is told, "These are they that follow the Lamb, whithsoever he goeth;" as much as to say, John, you was told when you saw the great multitude, that the Lamb was to lead them; yes, well now I tell you that this 144,000 that sing a new song, are they that follow the Lamb; then they must be the multitude that was led by the Lamb; for they that are led do follow; and they that follow are led, and hence we identity the 144,000 that sing the new song with the multitude of ch. 7, and ch. 5, that came out of every nation, kindred, tongue, &c., and sing the same new song of the redeemed. Once more; the number 144,000 was the number of God's servants that were sealed, ch. 7. The number 144,000 was the number of God's servants that sing the new song; these that sing the new song, had God's name in their foreheads, then they were sealed, ch, 14. Now the 144,000 of ch. 7, must be the same as those of ch. 14, or we shall have 288,000, and this is not as it is written; if those of ch. 7, are the same as those of ch. 14, then they sing the new song; if they sing the new song then they are the multitude that John saw, immediately after it was announced that the servants of God that were sealed were 144,000; were the very ones that were sealed; and he says they were so numerous that no man could number them, and hence they were numbered with a symbolic number.

The Church the Moral Conservative of the World.

BY J. HOWELL.

Matt. 5: 13, "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men."

Mark 9: 50, "Salt is good; but if the salt have lost his saltness, wherewith will ye season it? Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another."

Luke 14: 34, 35, "Salt is good: but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be seasoned?

"It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghill; but men cast it out. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

1. The word "earth" in the text is used to denote the world which inhabits it—the moral world. What salt is to the natural world, thus will the Church of God be to the moral world. This is its obvious import. For Jesus could not be understood to express the sentiment, that the Church acting in a moral sphere, observing moral law, would preserve the natural earth which is incapable of being influenced by any other than a natural agent through natural law.

2. The term "salt" was used by the ancients as an emblem of wisdom, purity, persevering fidelity, perpetuity, incorruption, hospitality etc. We read of "Attic salt: i. e., Attic wit, sharpness, mental intelligen-e," &c. In Lev. 2: 13; Num. 18: 19, it is used as an emblem of incorruptibility and permanence. "It is a covenant of salt forever, before the Lord." Salt not only gives a relish to that to which it is applied, but preserves from putrefaction and decay. Note 2 Chron. 13: 5; salt is here employed to express the perpetuity of the kingdom of Israel to the house of David. In Ezra 4: 14, where it saith "Now because we have maintenance from the king's palace," it is in the Chaldee, "Now because we are salted with the salt of the palace," (margin) i. e., we are the recipients of the king's hospitality. Thus in expressing a great moral truth, Jesus was pleased to do it metaphorically, and hence enforce it by employing for a metaphor a substance with which all are perfectly acquainted. Such a substitute is salt—a very suitable emblem of that incorruptness of doctrine, character and action; of thought, word and deed, so very essential to secure our acquital in the scenes of judgment. How very important is the knowledge of our acceptance with God; and how very essential that such knowledge be derived from only those evidences which God declares as valid, as only adequate to convey such knowledge. May no deception surprise us in the judgment. Our dear Savior has announced a truth of the greatest magnitude, and fraught with interests and consequences the most blessed or the most fatal to all those who claim alliance with "the Church of the living God," in that short sentence: "YE ARE THE SALT OF THE EARTH." Let us then with personal heart-searching, investigate this truth, praying to God for aid. Lord apply it to our hearts; Amen.

1. The first particle of moral salt which we shall analyze, essential to constitute "the Church of the living God" what our Savior affirms it to be, is, the salt of heavenly Wisdom. By an examination of its amiable and invaluable qualities, we shall ascertain its true nature.

A. "The wisdom that is from above is first pure"—unmixed unadulterated—free from pollution's lightest stain, its gentlest touch. Purity, unblemished, unsullied in principle, and action. Eph. 5: 27, "That"—"blemish." A singleness and simplicity of intention, of thought, word and deed." A purity, moulded according to the heavenliest purest pattern: Hence, a Christian purity, the purity of Christ, He is the great Archetype of purity; indeed, He is His Father's great Church model. Did He "endure the cross and despise the shame for the joy that was set before Him," too much detached from the world? Did he ever ripen into maturity any principle of moral excellence, isolated from the world, in a state of perfect seclusion? Ah, no. As saith the great Apostle, "this thing was not done in a corner," but God raised Him up and shewed Him openly," as he had ever exhibited his purity. He could be no model for us, if moral purity depended for its perfectness on permanent, personal retirement from the world. Indeed, he prayed differently. Not that his followers should be taken out of the world, but kept from the evil. He was in the world, not of it; we are to follow him or not be his. His moral purity shone with greater brilliancy amid the moral pollution which encompassed it, and proved it to be a gem of the richest, heavenliest lustre. It proved itself adequate to combat the corruptness of the world, by retiring from the combat untainted. Pollution's heaviest charges were made upon the purity of heavenly wisdom, manifested by Wisdom's heavenliest Son, but without effect. He has retired from the battle-field in triumph, still pervaded with the purity of that "wisdom that is from above." Was his purity of an higher order, than was really essential to secure such a triumph? Would his Father have been pleased with less? It clearly developed the legitimate effect of truth in those whose activities correspond with it. Is not such a purity essential to our safety and triumph, dear reader? Note, 1 Jno. 3: 3, "And every man that hath this hope in him," of being like him, "PURIFIETH himself even as (Gr. kathos) in the manner that he is pure." Note, Matt. 21: 6, and 26: 24, where this word is employed. In Matt. 21: 6, we perceive that "the disciples went and did as (kathos) in the manner that Jesus commanded them." Did not the action of the disciples perfectly correspond with the literal meaning of the words employed to express the requirements. Compare Matt. 21: 2, with Matt. 21: 6. Their guilt would have been apparent, had they done otherwise. In Matt. 26: 24, "The Son of man goeth as (kathos) in the manner that it is written of him." Did he go thus? See Ps. 22; Isa. 53; Dan. 9: 26; Zech. 11: 12, 13. Had it been otherwise, would he not have disproved his Messiahship? If perfect correspondence in action and event, was so very essential in the quotations from Matthew, is it not equally so in 1 Jno. 3: 3, And every man purifieth himself, that hath this hope in him, even in the manner that he is pure. Even in the manner that he is pure, every man purifieth himself that hath this hope in him. Finally, as in the text, "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Dear reader, is it possible for us to avoid the following conclusions:

First. That the moral purity of Christ is attainable by "every man."

Second. In order to this attainment, a specific hope is essential.

Third. This hope is, "that when he shall appear, we shall be like him." v. 2.

Fourth. As the words "hath" and "is" are in the present tense, so this purity is attainable, while we hope "that when He shall appear, we shall be like him:" Therefore "in this present world," Titus 2: 11.

Fifth. Can we possibly have this hope in us, if we have not the purity? And vice versa.

O merciful Father, aid us by thy grace, or we perish forever. The equity of thy requirements is as perfect, as thy mercy is infinite. Therefore we can hope for nothing from thy mercy, which infinite equity would not confer upon us, for thou wilt judge the people with equity," Ps. 98: 9. Hence, if "when He shall appear, we" would "be like him," our only alternative is to conform in thought, word and deed, to the requirements of the Gospel in their nature and extent. A pure heart, Matt. 5: 8; a pure conversation, 1 Pet. 5: 2; a pure action, 1 Jno. 2: 6; indeed, a pure life, Rom. 6: 4; 2 Cor. 5: 15, is essential to attain eternal life. Such "pureness," or life of purity, was that by which Paul approved himself as the minister of God. 2 Cor, 6: 4, 6. A precious quality of moral Salt. It must pervade him, who would impart it to another, and enter the New Jerusalem with the redeemed Church.

"Those holy gates forever bar pollution, sin and shame,
None shall obtain admittance there but followers of the Lamb."

My heart's echo from the far West is, be "Christ-like." O God, "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow," Ps. 51: 7.

"Little children, let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousnesss is righteous, even as he is righteous," 1 Jno. 3: 7.

B. "Then peaceable." Disposed to peace and concord. Gr. Harmony, agreement. Unity, to cultivate peace. "The wisdom that is from above is * * * * then peaceable." And will it not extend this amiable, priceless quality to all those who are its recipients? Such "wisdom" permanently established in our hearts, would be an acquisition worthy of an "heir of God." How "peaceable" in ourselves, and hence toward others. How earnestly we would "follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another," Rom. 14: 19. How faithfully will all such "Depart from evil, and do good; seek peace and pursue it." Ps. 34: 14; Heb. 12: 14. To encourage such a pursuit, the reader is invited to the consideration of two arguments.

The first, is from the context, in Jam. 3: 13–16. The apostle compares, two kinds of wisdom, as different in their qualities, as they are their origin. He therefore inquires, "Who is a wise," prudent, discreet, "man and endued with knowledge among you?" How shall we know him? By great professions? No! "Let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness" (Gr. Prauteti) lenity, mildness, forbearance, a forgiving spirit, gentleness, kindness, a benevolent spirit, "of wisdom." How precious! With lenity of wisdom—mildness of wisdom—forbearance of wisdom—a forgiving spirit of wisdom—gentleness of wisdom—kindness of wisdom—a benevolent spirit of wisdom. Certainly, this is heavenly wisdom. Note the contrast. "But if he have bitter envying," (rivalry, Wakefield) "and strife" epitheam, love or desire of contention or altercation, warm contention in words, a contentious disposition, "in your hearts, glory not" or boast not one's self against, i. e., to boast in such a manner as to imply disrespect to another, "lie not against the truth." Let not such make any pretensions to Chritianity; their glorying is vain, and their profession opposed to truth. The source is wrong; the streams are the same.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 23, 1856.

Our Affliction.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: Bro. Merriam has been obliged to leave the Crisis office, on account of a painful weakness in his eyes. Some years since, he was confined in a dark room, most of the time for three years, with little expectation of recovering his sight again. But for the last two or three years, he has felt special help from the Lord in answer to prayer. At present, he is in Lowell, with the intention of seeking some place where he can have the fresh air from the country hills.

We know that the above announcement will give a gloom of sadness to the readers of the Crisis, who have waited with anxiety for its weekly visits, and have felt it to be a friend indeed in these times of deep trial; but, dear Brn. and Srs., there is hope. The God of Jeshurun still lives, and yet answers prayer. We are aware that we hardly need say, pray for our dear Bro. Merriam, that the Lord may restore his sight, and again enable him to take charge of our interesting paper.

Those who have suffered the loss of eye sight occasioned by weakness of the optic nerve, as in our brother's case, know how to sympathise with him in his deep affliction. Bro. Merriam has felt willing to spend, and be spent for the purpose of feeding the flock of God in the last fleeting moments of time, until he is now almost exhausted; but may the united prayers from all alters where Christians bow, who love Jesus, and those who are begotten of Him; who have felt benefitted by the self-sacrificing labors of our brother; ascend to the ears of Him, who has taught us to "ask and receive." We trust our affliction will soon be past,—yes, past forever; and we, with our Bro. Merriam, and all the dear saints, shall be companions in bliss in paradise restored.

M. Grant.

To our Patrons.

We feel thankful to our brethren who have responded so cheerfully to the proposition of Bro. Burnham, in No. 33 of the Crisis. We fondly hope that the old debt will be cancelled at once, and that every reader of the Crisis, who loves its weekly visit, will do all they can consistently to help bear the burden, both by material aid and contributions for its columns.

Let me entreat my brethren in the ministry, (and all others who love Jesus,) to write accounts of their travels, the state of things where they labor, the results of their efforts and words of comfort to the tried, tempted, sorrowing and afflicted saints of the Lord, who are longing for the glad hour to arrive when they can "see the King in his beauty."

When you speak through the Crisis, you address a large congregation. Let the articles be short as a general rule; well seasoned with prayer as you write, having the heart full of the love of God, so that every word may be warm with its heavenly influence.

Never dip the pen in gall, but on the contrary, let us provoke one another to love and good works.

Come, dear brethren, take up the pen, lift the heart to God, and begin to write. It may comfort many a poor widow and orphan who hear no preaching for months, save what they get through the paper.

If you have not time to write a whole page at once—write a few lines; and thus improve the spare moments. Rise a little earlier in the morning, and in this way secure time to send an epistle to the saints scattered abroad.

Brethren, I am in earnest about this. Delay not another day.

Do not try to say something new, or unthought of before, but set down to write, as you would to talk.

Write in the simplicity of the gospel, and be assured, it will be read with interest.

We need your articles. Let them fly from all fields like bees to the hive laden with honey.

The Passover.

According to the Jewish Calender for 1856, the month Nisan, which is the first of the ecclesiastical year, began the 6th of April; and the Passover is at the full moon on the 20th inst.

"The Feast of Weeks," or "Pentecost," will happen on the 9th of June.

The seventh month of the ecclesiastical, or the first of the civil year, begins Sept. 30th; at which time the Jews keep "The feast of the new year."

"The feast of Reconciliation," or "Atonement," is on the 9th of Oct., which is the 10th day of the 7th month.

"The feast of Tabernacles," occurs Oct. 14th, which is the 15th of the month Tisri.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. G. D. Simmons.

Iowa City, April 1st, 1856.

Editor of the Crisis:—Although a stranger to you, I take the liberty to express a few thoughts, respecting the cause you are endeavoring to serve, and the present state of the professed friends of our coming Lord. I saw with some pleasure, in your last number, the proposed visit of our dear Bro. Pratt, informing us that he would by divine permission, make another effort in Iowa soon. He came to our city last December, and gave us several able discourses, upon the final state of the dead. Yet such is the selfishness, and stupidity of our community, that there were but few in attendance, notwithstanding we made laudable efforts to give them due notice. There are but few, very believers in the Advent doctrines; and especially in the truth respecting the final state of the dead, either in our city, or State Worldly-mindedness, and a coveting to be rich, has eaten out the piety of our Churches, so that little else is to be seen, or heard among them but a "form of godliness;" and many, even deny the power of Advent doctrines, and mock at serious things. It is heart-sickening to the pious, to meet so much bigotry among the professed disciples of our Lord; like that among the ancient Pharisees who condemned the Savior for eating with sinners and mingling with common people.

Yet the gospel, and its advocates, have in all ages, met with both open and secret opposition, and the clenched fist of wrath; and the secret dagger is often returned for the most benevolent acts of Christian love. And as "time grows grey," and sin is almost finished; "Eternal death begins to roll up the dark pall; and we are looking for the speedy wreck of nature, and the crush of worlds; and the setting up of the Everlasting Kingdom of our Lord. My cry has been for many years, "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly."

I have been holding protracted meetings this winter, and have seen most signal displays of the divine power, in converting scores of openly avowed skeptics.

I have tried to preach the Advent doctrines so far as practicable; yet could say but little at the first on account of the "ignorance of foolish men:" who make it a virtue to oppose every new sentiment, with haughty neglect, and an utter refusal to search the Scriptures, inquiring whether these things are so. I have been a firm believer in the prominent truths held by Adventists, for many years. The utter destruction of all the finally impenitent, together with satan, and all his allies, has been my faith for some fifteen years past, Yet I hold every Bible truth to subserve the great end of the holy ministry, viz.; the conversion of sinners; and not to dispute with those who are contentious. Had all the dear Brn. labored with this object most prominent, and held on patiently to the "old paths," we might have seen more accomplished, both in the saving of sinners and the awakening of a stupid, selfish Church. I have at least deemed this my course of duty and expect to pursue it.

My Lord called me to preach the gospel, and labor night and day to convert sinners; and immerse the true believers in Christ and add them to his Church; and feed the sheep and saints with the "sincere milk" of the gospel, until they can bear "strong meat;" and when he comes to set up his Everlasting Kingdom all who have immortality and eternal life will be found with him in his Kingdom although they may never have understood where their final home would be, or have never fully understood the final doom of the wicked. O that all Christ's disciples would, in view of the shortness of time and the certainty of the coming Lord, engage with me in weeping over the pathway of sinners and in laboring specifically, for the conversion of the impenitent world, instead of laboring to indoctrinate the Church.

Excuse this plainness of speech, and believe me a warm friend to all who truly love the appearing of our Lord; hundreds of whom have but little knowledge of "time and place" and are found among the different Christian denominations.

G. D. Simmons.

P. S. I have just returned from Muscatine city, where I have preached seven weeks. Upwards of 80 additions to the Baptist Church, with whom I labored—and the work rolls on with great power.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. E. Blanchard.

North Adams, Mass. Feb. 18, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—I am glad we have the blessing of our heavenly Father in supplying our wants while on our journey home to the better land, where no sickness sorrow, pain or death can ever come; no chilling winds, nor poisonous blast shall ever enter there. All tears will be wiped away. O, what a glorious rest. Praise the Lord, for it remains for his saints. The apostle Paul said, that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached, entered not in, because of unbelief. Dear Brn. and Srs., let me exhort you to fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into His rest some of us should come short of it. Let us fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life. Let us take heed, lest there be in any of us, an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God. Let us believe God, that it may be accounted to us for righteousness and be heirs according to the promise. Not every one that says, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in Heaven. If we do His will; we must do something more than to pray in the family circle; we must live right at home, or it will do no good to pray. We must do something more than make a public profession. We may go to meeting and pray, sing and exhort before our Brn. and Srs., and the world; and if we do not live right from one meeting to another, our profession is good for nothing; it is as the tinkling of brass, or sounding of cymbal; f we are but stumbling-blocks in the way of others, a reproach to the cause of Christ, and an abomination in the sight of God; for we draw nigh to Him with our mouths when our hearts are far from Him. To do His will, is not merely to give to the poor; we must give with a cheerful heart, and the Lord will love us. It is said in His word, that "He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth to the Lord." Now Brn. and Srs., if you like the security let all that have this world's goods give to him that needeth, and the Lord will pay you at the resurrection of the just. We may do these things outwardly, and still be lacking; yes, we may give to the poor, talk like angels, understand all mysteries, and yet be lacking. We may visit the sick, the afflicted, and administer to their wants, and not have pure religion. There is something for us to do for ourselves, in order to have pure and undefiled religion; we must keep ourselves "unspotted from the world." If we do this, we have hope, faith, and charity, but the greatest of these is charity.

Let us examine ourselves and see if we lack any of the Christian graces. In the first place, let us see if we lack charity. Charity suffereth long, and is kind. If it is lacking, we shall love to talk about some Bro. or Sr., who has some failings, forgetting the beam in our own eyes; and when we meet with some one that is in the same condition as ourselves, we shall make great ado about something we have heard concerning a Bro. or Sr., not knowing whether it is true or not; and thus we injure them, and ourselves. And when we pray, it seems to us that the Lord is very far away, and hard of hearing. Why is it so? It is because we love not one another according to the commandment. But how do we get so far off from the Lord, that He will not hear and answer us? 1, we lose charity; 2, brotherly kindness; 3, godliness; 4, patience; 5, temperance; 6, knowledge; 7, virtue; 8, faith; and when faith is gone, we cannot please God, for without faith it is impossible to please Him. If we have these things in us, we shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of Christ; and if we do these things, we shall never fall, and we shall enter the kingdom of Christ. But he that lacketh these things, is blind, and cannot see things afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Be of good cheer, beloved pilgrims, we are almost home. The land is nearing, we soon shall meet on Canaan's happy shore. If the Lord delight in us, we shall possess the land.

Your Bro. waiting for the Lord of lords, and King of kings.

Prosperity—Church Organization.

By J. Howell.

Bro. Merriam:—The Crisis of March 26th, I received to-day, and having perused it with very great interest, as well as with thankfulness to the Author of our good cause for favoring me with its profitable communications, I should be pleased to contribute a mite to its columns. The article of Bro. Nehemiah, on the subject of "Prosperity," especially arrested my attention, and revived very many of my own reflections on the same subject. Bro. Nehemiah propounds three questions, which I desire briefly to notice; in doing which, my only object is the glory of God; the peace and harmony of the Church, and the salvation of men.

I. "Is Church Organization in any form right?"

To this I reply, heartily—"Yes."

My reasons for this reply, are:

1. That Church Organization was first established under the immediate influence of Divine inspiration by the Apostles, Acts 6: 1–4; 13: 1–3.

2. That God acknowledged their work and gave His visible seal to the same, Acts 6: 5–8. Note v. 7. "And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith" Acts 21: 20.

3. It was made subject to no limitation in the history of the Church, but is designed to be continued to the end. Eph. 4: 7—16, "But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith. When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.) And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

4. The meaning of the term is quite sufficient to prove it right—viz., "The act of forming or arranging the parts of a compound or complex body in a suitable manner for service. Suitable disposition of parts which are to act together in a compound body;"—Webster. Certainly it is right for the Church to be thus. Indeed, in it lies her strength, for without a union of its parts, it can never secure that end which can only be secured by such a union. But I must pass.

II. Is it expedient for us in our present circumstances?

1. It is quite as expedient as good order is preferable to confusion; as proper means to accomplish an end are preferable to no means; and as the Church will be held responsible for the loss of the end God has proposed to be attained by it.

2. As in the Primitive Church Organization, no provision was made for its suspension under any circumstances, therefore it is expedient in our present circumstances. When indeed is it improper for the Church to be in a position to secure the greatest possible good? Is not its organization as essential to effect permanent good now as in apostolic times? Where have we any evidence, that the organizations established by the Apostles, was productive of anything else than good to the Church? If not then, why should it be now? Do I hear "that some one may abuse it?" And because it is susceptible of abuse, would you despise it? The long-suffering of God is susceptible of abuse. Virtue the same, and indeed, what is not? Shall we despise God's long-suffering because of this susceptibility? Shall we abandon virtue for the same reason? "Order is Heaven's first law;" and what has God ever attempted to accomplish without it? Did he not form the earth to be inhabited? Isa. 45: 18. Was it not God that organized the Jewish Church, and has not their opposition to it brought upon them untold evils under which they now writhe? Did He not through his Son and Apostles, organize a Primitive Church, and are not many of our own troubles attributable to our opposition to it? Every violation of order has for its sequel, confusion, &c., and for my own part, I long, I sigh, I pray for Organization, that at least some of the time, talents, influence, and health of us as a people, may be preserved from utter waste. With you, Bro. Nehemiah, "I think that our condition is not the consequence of mining against the rocks of divine providence in our denominational existence" No! no! I believe with all my heart that it is "of heaven," and not "of men." But have we not run against the rocks of divine Providence in as you remark, "organizing against organization, and preaching against preaching?" Much, very much has been said among us about apostolic piety; success and power; while we have perhaps inadvertently opposed apostolic order essential to its existence. And can we manifest the moral power of the Primitive Church without it. If Church Organization were not essential to success in the Primitive Church, why its existence? Why did it receive the Divine sanction? Why did men under the immediate inspiration of God, constantly urge, and in every place establish it; and that too, without one rebuke from heaven, if it was not expedient? What reasons are there for its expediency, then, that we cannot enforce now in proof of its expediency. Were they few? So are we, comparatively. Were they weak? So are we—exceedingly so. Were they the reproach of the multitude? So are we. Was it essential to concentrate their entire energies in order to success, and is it not for us? Was it productive of peace and harmony? And is not this indispensably necessary for us now? Indeed, that it is expedient is perfectly evident from the consideration.

3. That the terms employed to designate the Church in all its history are expressive of organization in the clearest sense. It is a house, Heb. 3: 4–6. A temple, 1 Cor. 3: 16, 17, fitly framed and builded together, Eph. 2: 21, 22. A body, Eph. 5: 23–32. A large quantity of lumber thrown promiscuously together is not a house. Brick and stone in large or small quantities do not constitute a temple. Bones, muscles, ligaments, tendons, arteries and veins, &c., are not a body. These are materials only, and to be either of the above, they must be organized. If our head was distracted, as is the body, the Church, where would we be? Thank heaven, that it is not susceptible of being thus, and while the body is, it reflects dishonor upon the head. For my own part, long have I desired a permanent Church Organization, and have wept over our state, and prayed that we might have gospel order among us. As to the form of organization necessary to our success, that which the Apostles established, is the only right one, with the good wholesome New Testament discipline, suggested by Christ and the Apostles. With this, I presume most are acquainted, and if otherwise, I hope Bro. Nehemiah or some one else more capable than myself, will write on the subject.

You ask, "does it not appear that * * * we can put ourselves in a position to prosper?"

Indeed we can, if we will submit ourselves one to another in the fear of God. Eph. 5: 21.

"Can we not as at first, agree to differ on theological questions?"

We can with grace enough, and a good share of meekness and humility.

"Can we not forgive and forget all offences, and ask forgiveness of the offended; lay aside our personal preferences, forgetting the past; letting by-gones be bygones forever, and come together like a band of noble brothers?"

We can; praise God we can, if we have the spirit of Christ, and expect to be forgiven, or ever calculate to pray the Lord's prayer with sincerity—"Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." Indeed, I from my heart, request the forgiveness of all whom I may have injured in any respect in thought, word, or deed. If I have prejudiced one against another by any unkind, unguarded remark, forgive me. And wherever or whenever among my brethren, any position which I have taken has contributed to disorganization, or confusion, I ask forgiveness. I have forgiven all from my heart, blessed be God. We all can. We will. Think of the good we can do, by so doing, and of the evil which must result, yea, has resulted from a contrary position for which we shall be responsible.

O let us rally as Israel did; after their return from the Babylonish captivity; restore the ordinances of God's house; appoint its proper officers, and put away everything defiling and strange from among us. Neh. ch. 1 to ch. 13. Come brethren in the ministry and in the Church, let us begin the good work of harmony and peace. Let us plant ourselves on the divine platform, and go forth one united, heaven originated, and heaven disciplined Church. From the Atlantic to the Pacific; from the extreme East to the wilds of the far, far West, whence some of our brethren are wending their way, let us speak the same language. "Mind the same things;" Seek the glory of only the one God and Father of all. Then can we "look forth as the morning, fair as the moon," exhibiting virtue's mildest rays, by which we will invite all to the investigation of the principles that originate them; "clear as the sun;" dispelling error's darkest shade, and disseminating the softening, enlivening, and enlightening influences of the blessed gospel; "and terrible as an army with banners," withstand the armed legions of vice, and opponents of our blessed hope. Come, come beloved, haste thee away from scenes of confusion and strife; to wait for that glorious day; the day that will bring us new life.

In conclusion, Bro. Nehemiah, I am with you to suffer, labor, weep and pray for union, permanent Christian union. I pant for it, my whole heart earnestly prays for it, and I have pledged myself before my heavenly Father, on my knees to labor for it continually. May God grant it. Amen. "O Lord, I beseech thee send now prosperity. Ps. 118: 25.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. B. P. Manning.

Goffstown, April 14, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—We are still pilgrims and strangers in this world of sin and wickedness, but O, the blessed promise to them that endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. Dear Brn. and Srs., the Lord is coming. I cannot see why the 2300 days do not end this year. The Bible gives us the starting point for the 70 weeks. Now them if the 2300 days begin with the 70 weeks, and are connected together, why will they not end this spring. But if the 2200 begin with the restoration of the daily sacrifice, which is found in the 8th ch. of Nehemiah; it will be seen that the days cannot go beyond next fall, if the chronology of the Bible is right. We find the daily was restored in the 7th month, 445 B. C. This interpretation is in harmony with the ending of the 1260 days in 1781,—with the state of the nations and all the signs. O what a state of things this world is in, not only the world, but what a state of mind many of the professed Advent people are in; some say it was wrong to ever preach time; well, I do thank my heavenly father that ever I heard the time of Jesus' coming preached. Glory be to God for the time; time has separated a class of people from the world, in a great measure. We took our Bibles and went forth to meet the bridegroom in 1843–4, on time; then at midnight there was a cry made, and it was on definite time; well then, one more time, and Jesus will come. Three different times to be preached in all, and Jesus will come. Look at Elijah; there were three different places to which he went before he was taken up, also three invitations to supper brought to view in the Bible. Dear Brn. and Srs. do not be deceived by any mortal man or woman. Look to the Lord for light. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all liberally, but let him ask in faith," Ja. 1: 5–6. Paul, in Heb. 11: 1, tell us, that faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. O Brn., how little true, living faith there is at the present time; there is a great talk about religion in this day, but there is but a very little true, heart-felt, Holy Ghost religion lived out in these times of peril. Dear Brn., search the Scriptures to see if these things are so. O Brn. God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble; therefore we will not fear, though the earth be removed, and the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea. "There is a river, the streams thereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High." God is in the midst of her: she shall not be moved: God shall help her and that right early. The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved; he uttered his voice, the earth melted," Ps. 46: 1, 2, 4–6.

O how truely the last verse has had a fulfillment in the war in the east. O Brn. have faith in God. James tells us in ch. 2: 26, "For as the body without the spirit, (or breath,) is dead, so faith without works is dead also." Brn., be strong in the Lord, hold fast whereunto you have attained that no man take thy crown.

Your Bro, expecting to see Jesus this year, and be made like him,

B. P. Manning.

Letter from Br. T. T.

Concord, Jan. 29, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—I have often had my mind refreshed in reading the Crisis, and while musing, one of the sayings of Jesus came to my mind—"No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."

Solemn words indeed to every one that has enlisted to serve the Lord, and has gone back to the world and its vanities, that will starve the soul.

I believe the signs are most all in the past, and are given for our encouragement, teaching us when the Savior is at the door. My prayer is that we may all live and hope to the end, that we may be found of Him in peace.

Your unworthy brother,

Obituaries.

Fell asleep in Jesus at Worcester, Mass., on the 30th day of March 1856, Sister Lois R., wife of Brother Abraham Flagg, aged 34 years, 7 months.

Sister F., since 1842, has looked for and loved her Lord's appearing, maintaining a consistent faith and deportment in his service, so that having learned in the school of Christ while in health, when sickness came, it was endured in Christian resignation and meekness, and in faith that though we should sleep in unconsciousness until the morning of the resurrection—yet then, she would awake to a glorious immortality. A day or two previous to her death, she took an affectionate leave of all her family and friends, exhorting them one by one to meet her in the kingdom. To her husband and children she was much devoted, bidding them farewell with many tears. Having done this, she seemed like one, who, standing by an untried sea, and turning her face from the shore, gazed out on the dark waters, ready and wishing to depart. She then met the "enemy" with Christian calmness, and on the first day of April, just seventeen years to a day from the time she left her home to be a bride, we carried her back to that home in Sterling, to be buried in the village graveyard with her fathers. There the great Unsleeping watches her dust, and she rests in sure and certain hope of a speedy resurrection.

She has left a helpless infant aged 2 months, with three other children and a husband to mourn their loss. May the consolation of the gospel of Christ be theirs in their affliction.

Still sin triumphs. Still evil predominates. Still affliction overrules. Still death riots and devours. O when will the Lord appear!

We're travelling through distress and gloom,
And night will last till thou dost come!

Claremont, N. H., April 18, 1856.

Fell asleep in Jesus April 10th, 1856, Laura E., wife of John K. Paine, aged 27 years. Her disease was consumption. She had her senses to the last, and with a firm faith that she should soon be raised in the likeness of her Savior, to die no more.

Thrilling Incident—Rev. Mr. Jacobs, the Ojibway Missionary now in Boston, related the following incident at the Bowdoin St. Vestry, on Fast day afternoon:

There were two brothers, he said, among the Ojibwas, who were conjurers. One of them having become a convert to Christianity, renounced the practice of his art. This gave great offence to the other brother, and he declared that he would tomahawk the Missionary the first time that he saw him. A threat of this sort by an Indian is not a vain thing. The conjuror came into a meeting where the Missionary was to officiate, with his tomahawk in his hand. One of the Indians came to Mr. Jacobs, in the midst of his sermon, and requested him to stop, for the man had come into meeting to kill him; but he still kept on. The conjuror started from his seat to carry into effect his murderous design. Mr. Jacobs requested him to stop until he had finished his sermon, saying that after that he should be ready. He closed his eyes, expecting every moment to feel the stroke of the tomahawk. After a few minutes he heard a cry of distress; and opening his eyes, he saw that it was the conjurer prostrate, and crying for mercy. In about two days, he obtained peace in believing.

He is now a preacher of the faith which he once endeavored to destroy.—Traveller.

Review of the Week.—We learn from Italy that the city of Parma has been placed under seige, the immediate cause being an atrocious attempt to assassinate the Minister of War. We referred some little time ago, to an attack upon French residents at Madagascar. Louis Napoleon has directed his immediate attention to that part of the world, and it is now announced that he has determined to send an extensive "expedition of colonization" there, and that England does not oppose.

The commercial advices by the Baltic show as the first result of peace an advance in consols. Cotton had gone up in price; breadstuffs have still a tendency to decline.

We are also in receipt of a fortnight's later intelligence from California. It is unimportant; but the same steamer brings us news of an exciting character from the Isthmus, the first detachment of Walker's troops having been defeated by the Costa Ricans. It appears that Col. Schlessinger with 400 men had reached San Jose and taken up a strong position, when they were unexpectedly attacked by a force of 500 Costa Ricans, under President Mora, and had to retreat, leaving many dead upon the field. The Costa Ricans, it was said, were about to enter Nicaragua, and Walker was rising from a sick bed to oppose them. His fortunes seem already desperate, even if there be no truth in a rumor that both the French and English governments propose to interfere.

The petty insurrection at Puebla, in Mexico, appears to have been suppressed, the revolutionary forces having surrendered, although their leaders, Haro and Castillo, have effected their escape. Insurrection, however, is a chronic condition of that unfortunate nation, and we dare not hope for a week in advance any continuance of perfect tranquillity and peace.

Advices from St. Domingo, go to the 15th of March, state that the Dominican Senate was about to ratify a treaty of commerce and extradition with the United States, notwithstanding the intrigue and opposition which appears to have been offered by the representatives of France, England and Spain.

We have received accounts from the colony of Liberia to the 20th of Feb., from which it would appear that three of the native tribes had risen in arms against the Americo Negro settlers, and had committed great ravages by fire, pillage and war. President Benson had placed himself at the head of the government troops, which had marched against the savage aggressors.—Ev. Traveller.

The Pacification of Europe.—At length the war in Europe is ended. A treaty of Peace has been signed which, it is said, "by settling the question of the East, establishes the repose of Europe on solid and durable basis." How that question is settled, or what security is afforded for the permanent peace of Europe, are matters which for the present must be left to conjecture, as the stipulations of the treaty will not be made public until the exchange of the ratifications. The rejoicings incident to such an event have been somewhat checked by the doubt as to the nature of the terms which have been agreed upon. The announcement of the conclusion of the treaty has been received with comparative indifference in England, notwithstanding the assertion of Lord Palmerston, that its terms were such as would be deemed satisfactory, and fully accomplished the objects for which the war was undertaken.

The Earl of Clarendon in a dispatch to the Home Secretary, announces that the treaty provides for the maintainance of the "integrity and independence" of the Ottoman Empire; and the Times declares that this event secures "the integrity and independence" of a weak people against the schemes of a powerful neighbor. The promise made by the Allied Powers has then been fulfilled, if these assertions are true; but we are inclined to doubt that such is the case. We cannot believe that the allied Powers have been willing to "relax their hold upon Turkey."

We are certain therefore of thus much, as the result of the war. England has learned a lesson of humility; France has gained military glory and the dynasty of Louis Napoleon additional security; Turkey is no longer in immediate danger of Russian aggression; Russia after severe reverses and great military losses has, for the present, at all events, abandoned her designs upon Turkey. We have as yet no information which leads us to conclude that the oppressed "nationalities" of Europe have derived any benefit from this contest. Poland, Hungary, and the Indian States still languish under despotic rule; and liberal principles, for which so much was to be effected, still remain unaided.—Evening Traveller.

The Tornado in Pennsylvania.—As the mails arrive from the interior of Pennsylvania, we contiuue to receive additional particulars of the destruction of property effected by the tremendous hurricane of last Saturday night, one of the most terrible that has swept over that State.

At Frankstown the Lutheran Church was destroyed. At Williamsburg a distillery was blown to the gronnd, and a buggy blown entirely away from a horse to which it was attached. At Harmony, in Butler county, sixteen houses were destroyed, unroofed or badly damaged, and two boys are reported to have been killed. The Catholic Church, on the Franklin road, near the borders of Alleghany county, was demolished.

In Beaver, the observatory on the new Methodist Episcopal Seminary was blown away. But the storm appears to have been most serious at Kittanning, in that State, and at Alliance in Ohio. At Kittanning especially the storm laid waste almost everything in its course, and struck terror into the hearts of the citizens. The wood work of the bridge across the Alleghany, which was only completed a short time since, was lifted by the violence of the storm and hurled into the river a perfect wreck. A man who was on it was carried for two miles down the river and with difficulty rescued. So violent was the wind that many persons were lifted off their feet. Houses were unroofed and levelled with the ground. "Slabtown," with the exception of one or two houses, is literally a mass of ruins. Mr. Baker's barn, on the west side of the river, was blown down and two horses killed. Many houses and barns have been blown to atoms.

The Tornado.—The Cleveland (Ohio) Herald says the hurricane extended its track along the line of the Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad from ten miles south of Alliance to two miles north of that place, and along it fences and trees were scattered.

Near Alliance a barn was blown to pieces and six cattle killed—a man in the barn escaped unhurt. In Alliance a Church and fifteen houses were destroyed. At Damascus a man was killed. Upon the Cleveland and Zanesville road, between Millersburg and Akron, a tree fell across the train, disconnecting the cars, and at the same time trees fell at either end of the train, fairly hemming it in.

A freight train standing on the track at Alliance was blown down upon the track and off a switch, as though propelled by a powerful steam engine.

On one of the railroads the locomotive of a train struck an oak tree two feet in diameter, which had been blown upon the track cutting it enirely in two. The engine was thrown off the track. Great numbers of trees were thrown across the railroads.

The damage to property in Alliance is estimated at $15,000 to $20,000. In several other towns considerable damage is reported to buildings, trees, &c. New Chambersburg, Columbiana County, is reported a mass of ruins, and fifteen persons killed or wounded, but the account is probably exaggerated. Several lives are said to have been lost at Old Enon, Penn.

The Rush to the West.—A Chicago correspondent of the New Hampshire Patriot speaks as follows of the emigration Westward:—

Many families of fathers and mothers, and any number of children, take the car, along upon the lines of your eastern railroads, with huge baskets and boxes of cooked provisions and cans of milk, and do not leave them till they arrive at their various places of destination, upon some of the various roads checkering the wonderfully progressing States of Illinois, Wisconsinand Iowa. During the forty-eight hours ending Saturday morning, the eight trains on the Michigan Southern Road brought eighty-one cars, containing 4050 passengers, and in the same time the six trains on the Michigan Central brought sixty-three cars, containing 4662 passengers, nearly 9000 in all, arriving in two days over these two of the fifteen roads terminating at Chicago, and nearly equal to the whole population of your lovely city.

Persecution in Tuscany.—We learn from Italy, that the persecution of the native Protestants in Tuscany has re-commenced. We confess we were not prepared for the statement of our crrrespondent, that ten thousand persons have, on the admission of the government authorities, left the Romish Church. And yet other intimaiton run in the same direction. The Supplement to the Austrian Concordat, published the other day, recommends on very flimsy pretexts, greater stringency in the prohibition of heretical books in Italy than in Austria. We suspect the real reason for this is concealed, and only makes itself apparent in the more outspoken persecutions of the Protestants at Pontedera. Who shall measure the depth or the velocity of that under current of feeling which has set in against the Church of Rome, even within the boundaries of "the seat of the Beast?"

Tornado at Guam.—Capt. Baxterr of the schooner Harrison, arrived at San Francisco, from Guam, one of the Ladrone Islands, reports that there was a terrific tornado, accompanied by a slight shock of an earthquake, at that place, on the 23d of September last. Within twenty minutes from the commencement of the storm more than eight thousand persons were left without a house or a roof to protect them. Nearly all the houses upon the island, with the exception of ten or twelve stone buildings, were destroyed and scattered in every direction. The rain fell in torrents, and as it touched the lips it tasted as salt as though it came from the ocean. Nearly all the cocoa and orange trees were desiroyed.

Liberty of Conscience in Prussia.—The Elberfield Gazette publishes a letter from Nordhausen, which exhibits the position of Prussian dissenters as one not to be envied. It concerns a decision issued, on the 26th of November last, by an officer of the temporal executive against Edward Baltzer, a clergyman of a free congregation. By this decision, adverse to his plaint, he is bound, although a minister of religion, to send his children to receive religious instruction in the public school of the place, or otherwise from duly qualified private teachers. The reason of this is, that the religious instruction he himself may impart to his children is not recognized as able to replace the religious iestruction which the authorities require in the name of the law.

Pilgrimage to Jerusalem.—Extensive preparations are making on the Continent for getting up pilgrimages to Jerusalem. According to the Galignani, a fresh departure of pilgrims for Jerusalem and the Holy Land was to take place at Marseilles toward the end of February. About the same period another caravan, formed in Germany, was to sail from Trieste for the same destination.—Advent Herald,

The Meteor in Maine.—We have already mentioned that an ærolite lately fell, with a tremendous explosion, in Maine. Persons in Belfast distinctly saw the smoke and flame. In some parts of the State the people were so generally startled by the explosion, that the telegraphic lines were put in requisition to ascertain if there had been an accident at the Camden Powder Mills.

During the year 1855, there were seventy-three battles fought, or more than one a week, with an average loss of a thousand men killed in each, excluding those who have fallen by disease or skirmishes. The number swept out of existence must have been about 300,000—the bloodiest year since the battle of Waterloo occurred.

Another Earthquake in Japan.—Accounts from Japan, received in California, report that on the 12th December another severe earthquake visited Jeddo, destroying houses and temples, burying nearly 3000 people beneath the ruins. At the previous earthquake, in November, many of the Japanese nobles perished.

Another Pervert.—A recent letter from Rome says:

The Rev. Dr. Oldham, of the University of Oxford, has publicly abjured Protestantism. Dr. Oldham had very shortly before officiated in the English church of the Porta del Popolo.

Rev. Charles G. Finney, so well known for his writings and his efforts as a revival preacher, is about to visit Great Britain, with the view of addressing public religious meetings.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Four Days Later from Europe.

Arrival of Steamship Baltic.

New York, April 17.—The treaty of Peace has been signed by all the Plenipotentiaries.

FROM PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE BALTIC.

The Peace.—The great question that has kept all Europe in suspense for weeks past, is at last resolved. The treaty of peace with Russia was signed between 1 and 2 o'clock on Sunday, March 30. The guns of the Invalides announced the fact to the population of Paris, and the tidings were born on the electric wires to the remotest part of the French territory.

A Council of Ministers was held at the Tuileries at half past 11 o'clock, and remained sitting till a quarter past 12. The Emperor presided, and gave his last instructions, and Count Walewski returned to his official residence to receive the Plenipotentiaries. They appeared in full uniform, and wore all their orders and decorations.

They assembled in the Salle des Conferences before half past twelve, and after the treaty was read over, proceeded to sign it in the same alphabetical order in which they have been wont to take their places during the Conferences. Crowds of people had been out from an early hour, as it was known that something important was to occur, and numerous groups of spectators gathered on the quays opposite and close to the Foreign office to see the Plenipotentiaries enter and issue from it. These were received, both on going and returning, with marks of respect from the people. The moment the signatures were completed, the expected signal was given, and the cannon from the Esplanade of the Invalides, proclaimed the news before the Plenipotentiaries had quitted the hall.

Soon after, the following notice was posted up on the walls of Paris:

"Congress of Paris, March 30, 1856.

Peace has been signed this day at one o'clock, at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The Plenipotentiaries of France, Austria, Great Britain, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia and Turkey, have affixed their signatures to the treaty which puts an end to the present war, and which, by settling the question of the East, establishes the repose of Europe on solid and durable bases.

(Signed) Pietre, Prefect of Police."

The Plenipotentiaries were to continue to meet during the week, as before, for the settlement of other matters, not of a light or unimportant character, which have not yet been settled. The treaty will not be made public until the exchange of ratifications, and as Constantinople and St. Petersburgh are distant from Paris, the Plenipotentiaries remain bound by their obligation of silence for two or three weeks to come.

When the news of the signing of the treaty was announced to the Emperor Napoleon, he expressed himself to the following effect:

"He thanked the Plenipotentiaries for having come in person to him with such agreeable tidings. He observed that the result of their labors during the conference, was the complete realization of the speech delivered by Lord Clarendon in the House of Lords, and that the peace which the allies were determined on concluding was one which carried with it no humiliation to Russia, and which did not compromise the dignity or independence of any one.

"It was, in fact, such as a great nation might propose or accept without degradation; and it therefore, had all the elements of solidity and durability. And, he added, that so favorable a result was, in a great measure, owing to the conciliatory spirit, and the moderation which marked the policy of England, and which was particularly felt in the course of the present conferences."

On Monday, 1st, the Lord Mayor of London, accompanied by the civic officers, appeared, in citizens' costume, on the portico of the Mansion House, and read the following letter:

"Home Office, March 31, 1856.

"Mr. Lord Mayor,—I have the honor to acquaint you that a despatch has this morning been received from the Earl of Clarendon, dated, Paris, March 30th, announcing that a definite treaty for the restoration of peace, and for the maintenance of the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Power, was yesterday signed at Paris, by the Plenipotentiaries of her Majesty, of the Emperor of the French, of the King of Sardinia, and of the Sultan, and also of the Emperor of Austria, and the King of Prussia on the one part, and the Emperor of all the Russias on the other.

(Signed) G. Grey."

After cheers for the Queen, army and navy, and allies, the spectators dispersed.

At noon a large crowd assembled at the Exchange, in expectation that the heralds would appear in full pageantry, as in days of old, to proclaim peace. No one appeared, however, except the Mayor, who again read the above letter. At one o'clock, the Tower and park artillery fired a salute of 101 guns. Flags were generally displayed in the city and from the shipping. In the other cities, the same displays were made—quietly and without enthusiasm.

Lord Palmerston announced the conclusion of Peace in the House of Commons, on Monday evening, the 31st ult., as follows:

"The House is perfectly aware from the Gazette, that yesterday, at 2 o'clock, a treaty of Peace was signed at Paris—(cheers) The House will have seen by the announcement in the Gazette, that it was determined by the Congress that the particular conditions of the treaty should not be made public until the ratifications had been exchanged.

And that, indeed is the usual course, for it is a mark of obvious deference to the Powers who are parties to the treaty. At the same time, without going into any details of the conditions, the main substance of which is already known to all the world, because it has been embodied in protocols and published in every country in Europe, I may say at least that my conviction is, that that treaty of peace will be deemed satisfactory by this country and Europe. (Cheers.)

Sir, it will be found that the objects for which the war was undertaken have been fully accomplished. It will be found that by the stipulations of that treaty the integrity and independence of the Turkish Empire will be secured, as far as human arrangements can effect that purpose. (Cheers.) It will be found that that treaty is honorable to all the powers who are contracting parties to it, and I trust that, while on the one hand it has put an end to a war which every friend to humanity must naturally have wished to see concluded, on the other hand it will lay the foundation of a peace, which, I trust, so far at least as regards the circumstances out of which the war began, will be lasting and enduring. (Hear, hear.)

Sir, during the negotiations which have led to this peace, I am happy to say that the same cordiality that has prevailed among the Allies in carrying on the war has also mainly contributed to the conclusion of peace, and that we shall leave off at the conclusion of this war in a stricter and closer alliance with them—and in a more extended alliance—than existed during the continuance of the war; and that, therefore, the future permanence not only of a good understanding, but of an intimate connection between the great Powers of Europe, will have been cemented and strengthened by the communications that have taken place during the negotiations. (Hear, hear.)

Sir, I have nothing more to say, except that it must be gratifying to the country to know that nothing could exceed the ability with which the British negotiators have performed their arduous and difficult task during the negotiations—(cheers)—and that Lord Clarendon and Lord Cowley have not only maintained the honor, dignity and interests of the country they represented, but by their conciliatory conduct have secured for themselves and their country, the respect, esteem and good will of those with whom they had to do. (Cheers) The ratifications are to be exchanged as soon as they can be received at Constantinople and St. Petersburg. The limitation of time has been four weeks, but I should hope that at least within three weeks the ratifications will be exchanged at Paris. (Cheers.")

Miscellaneous.—One of the first results of peace will be that the Austrians will evacuate the Danubian Principalities. The ill-feeling between them and the authorities and inhabitants has grown to such a point that their longer stay would produce an insurrection. The Porte and the Hospodars will unite in calling for the immediate withdrawal of the Austrian army of occupation.

The Czar has left St. Petersburg on his tour of inspection to Finland.

The commercial activity that will follow the declaration of peace will be unprecedented. The public of France expect vast undertakings, where profits will be insured by government assistance and supervision.

THREE DAYS LATER.

Arrival of the Africa.

The Africa which arrived at New York on Saturday afternoon, brings our European advices down to the 5th inst. The confirmation of peace has essentially diminished the interest with which we have for two years been accustomed to look for intelligence from Europe.

The advices by the Africa are of little moment. The rejoicings for peace had not subsided.

The French army will, it seems, return from the Crimea in bodies of 20,000, with corresponding materiel. The Bretagne is capable of transporting 2000 men at a time, and 150 guns by way of ballast. About six months will be occupied in the evacuation. It will begin in May and last over October.

Italy.—Accounts from Italy represent the Duchies of Parma, Modena and Tuscany as being in an alarming state of fermentation.

Miscellaneous.—An English Church is to be built at Constantinople by subscription, as a memorial of the British who perished in the war.

The downward movement in the corn trade is making fresh progress in France. The appearance of the crops is most promising.

The Dresden Journal mentions that some magnificent horses, coming from Russia, and supposed to be a present to the Emperor Napoleon, passed through that city on the 25th.

The London evening paper the Sun, was seized on Saturday, at the French Post-office in consequence of its appearing with a black border as a token of mourning for the peace, which it considers disastrous and disgraceful for England. The Daily News and Morning Advertiser were also seized.

Fifty persons have lately perished from earthquake shocks in and around Cuenca in Ecuador.

APPOINTMENTS.

The Lord willing Bro. John Couch will preach in the Free Chapel, corner of Lowell and Causeway Streets, Boston, Mass. the fourth Sabbath in May.

The Lord willing, Brn. S. G. Mathewson, and Edwin Burnham will meet with the Church at Waldo Hall, Worcester, Mass., the first Sabbath in May, and commence a series of meetings to be continued through the evenings of the following week and over the second Sabbath.

If time continue and the Lord will, I will meet the Brn. and friends as follows:
At Freeport, Sunday, May 4.
West Falmouth, Sunday, May 11.
Brunswick, Sunday, May 18.
Durham, (Parker's school-house) Sunday, May 25.

R. R. York.

Br. John Couch will preach at Lawrence, Mass., on Sunday, April 27.

F. Flanders.

Eld. D. T. Taylor will preach in Champlain, N. Y., Sunday April 27.
Friends will address me at Rouse's Point, Clinton Co., N. Y., till May 20.

D. T. Taylor.

Eld. J. Turner will preach in Salem, Mass., Sundays, April 20 and 27.
Br. Partridge, May 4 and 11.

T. Hardy.

Conference.—If time continue, a Conference will be held in West Brattleboro', Vt., to commence the second day of May and continue over the Sabbath. The meeting will be at the Hall of the Melrose Seminary, which has been rented for a permanent place to hold meetings. We are desirous of commencing our meetings by holding a Conferance, so that the way may be opened for Preachers that have the truth.

We invite all our Brethren and Sisters who love the coming of the Lord, and other truths connected with that event.

I am requested to ask Brn. E. Burnham, S. Mathewson and H. Pratt to attend the meeting, and as many more of God's ministers as the Lord may send.

We wish the above named Brn. to inform us through the Crisis whether they will come.

D. W. Miller.

WITH AN APPENDIX ON

THE STATE OF THE DEAD,

By John Milton,

Author of "Paradise Lost."

1 Vol. 12 Mo., 310 Pages. Price 75 Cents.

This is one of the most important works ever issued upon this solemn subject. Clear, forcible, and sometimes eloquent in his language, the author surveys the whole field, and presents his arguments and examines objections with the facility of "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The style is calm and Christian, a rare excellence in a controversial work. The Universalist, the skeptic, and the infidel, will find here that while the truths they hold are admitted in all their force, yet the reasonableness of revelation and the retribution therein revealed cannot be denied. And the believer in the doctrine of the Eternal agony of the multitudes of the Lost, will find that objections to that opinion exist in the word of God, no less serious than those which arise from the calm consideration of the subject in the light of human reason.

Let all obtain and read this work with care, and we shall await with confidence the verdict of the candid and unprejudiced.

The volume is an elegant 12mo., and contains besides the views of the poet Milton, who, with Luther, Tindale, Bishop Law and Archbishop Whately, defends the doctrine of unconsciousness in death.

It will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the price, 75 cents.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may perhaps subserve the cause of humanity to present his advertisement to the public. Praise the Lord!

"My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed; I will sing and give praise." Psalms, 57: 7.

As ope's the golden portals of the day,
When close night's silver curtain's borrow'd light;
Bend low the knee, in gratitude and pray;
For watchful angels guard thee day and night.

O praise the Lord, when snow-wreaths glitter bright;
And when the reapers chant the harvest song;
The promised seed-time, harvest, cold and heat,
Can never fail—Jehovah's word is strong.

O praise Him still, when sickness bends the form,
And dims the eye; 'though faltering, and weak;
Then lean more trustingly on Jesus' arm,
And more confidingly His guidance seek.

When sheaves are garnered, and the fruits are stored,
Thy neighbor's barns, with groaning plenty burst;
But thine are empty—scanty is thy board,
Still praise the Lord; and in His promise trust.

The little birds are objects of His care;
He clothes the lily with its beauteous dress;
Much more, His children shall His bounty share,
Replenished by the riches of His grace.

And should some golden ore your coffers strew;
Its bright links twined with love, and mercy's tear;
Then praise the Lord, there's work enough to do,
The orphan and the widow's heart to cheer.

Yes praise the Lord! beneath the sun's warm ray;
Praise Him! when lightnings flash, and thunders roll—
He'll lead His little flock to realms of day;
And satiate with joy the humble soul.

VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

Charlemont, Mass.

March of Intellect.

A parent asked a priest his boy to bless,
Who forthwith charged him that he must confess.
"Well," said the boy, "suppose sir, I am willing, what is your charge?"
"To you 'tis but a shilling."
"Must all men pay, and all men make confession?"
"Yes, every man of Catholic profession."
"And who do you confess to?
"Why, the Dean."
"And do the Deans confess?"
"Yes, boy, they do! confess to Bishops, and pay smartly, too."
"Do Bishops, sir, confess? If so, to whom?"
"Why, they confess, and pay the Pope of Rome."
"And does the Pope confess?"
"Oh, yes—to God."
"And does God charge the Pope?"
"No," quoth the Priest, "God charges nothing."
"O, then, God is best. God is able to forgive, and always willing—to Him I will confess, and save my shilling."

Consistency taught by the Savior.

BY B. MATHEWSON.

All seem raady to admit (in words,) that men should be consistent with themselves—but when shewn that they are not so, often seek revenge on those who have meekly portrayed these facts.

Some time since a spirit of inquiry was awakened in my mind relative to the teachings of the Savior in Luke 4: 25–27.

Believing the Savior to have been, not only in possession of truth, but of wisdom, when and where to utter that truth, I besought the Lord to know what I was to understand, what lessons of profit derive from this language which so incensed the only professed people of God, as to determine them to put an immediate end to His life by casting Him down a fearful precipice!

First, I was led to contemplate the people and circumstances that drew this language from Him who knows what language it is most proper to address to every heart—which in brief are the following:

He had been some time absent from Nazareth, the place where He had been brought up—had produced a great excitement in the different places through which He journeyed, not only by His wisdom and eloquence, but by the wonderful miracles He had wrought—particularly in Capernaum! Here He effectually healed the raving maniac while interrupting their worship in the synagogue. Then entered Simon's house and immediately rebuked the "great fever" with which his wife's mother had been prostrated, which so increased confidence in his ability to heal, that by the time of sunset, all the diseaed persons in the place were brought to Him; "Whereupon He laid His hands on every one and healed them of whatsoever disease they had!"

These wonders were noised abroad, and of course did not fail to reach Nazareth. Therefore when He returned, the Nazarites seemed filled with a kind of curious disquietude. They were much dissatisfied with Him, though his preaching was of so extraordinary a character as to attract universal attention, and no one could deny that they were "gracious words" that proceeded out of His mouth, yet they murmured against Him—not audibly—but Jesus well knew the sentiments of their hearts, and took this opportunity to express it in the following language:

"But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land:

"But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

"And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet: and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian."

It is evident from this language that they had entertained these deep murmurings and indignation against Him, because He did not manifest the same power at home that He had abroad, as if He were under obligation to perform the same works in every place. Though His wisdom at that time concealed from them the reason why no more of the power of God had been manifested in that place—Matthew and Mark distinctly state that "it was because of their unbelief!"

But what adduced their murmurings and madness to desperation, was the ostensible proof that their requirements were inconsistent and unscriptural. They professed great reverence for Elijah, and conceded him to be a pattern of godliness; hence Jesus refers them to him for example, showing that Elijah did not perform the same works in every place, or, to use a common expression, his "Charity did not commence at home!"

He shows them that Elijah wrought a miracle for the benefit of one outside of his denomination and country, while many cases of the same dire disease existed in his own land of Israel! Yet not one case of leprosy in Israel was benefitted by an interposition of his miraculous power. He also wrought a miracle to sustain a widow residing in a Pagan city during the famine occasioned by drought in answer to the prayer of Elijah, though at the same time the home of Israel contained many widows, "but unto none of them was Elijah sent."

This simple exegesis and truthful reasoning cut them to the heart; but instead of humbling themselves and confessing the truth—being unable to produce any argument against it, they fell into a rage like many in the last half of the 12th century, who, when light is elicited from the unerring Word of God to prove the untenableness of their position, rage and imagine vain things. It is one clear sign that a man has not the truth on his side, when he urges instead of reasoning.

But often when destitute of the right kind of weapons to defend their reasons and conscience, like the Nazarene Jews—they determine to put those out of the way that give them the trouble of unanswerable arguments.

Sometimes circumstances forbid using violence on the person of those who wound with the sword of the spirit, but they must be maimed, if not by being cast down a fearful precipice, by branding those who preach against the false theories and practices of the present day with ignorance, intolerance, fanaticism, etc. But in spite of all the ingenuity exercised to give these stains upon the character an indesirable impress, they fade. Yes, more; they turn deadly pale as they come in contact with the great heavenly Eradicator.

In conclusion, may I not hope both writer and reader may derive some benefit from this lesson of consistency taught by the Savior? Never eulogize in one what what you condemn in another. Never oppose, unless it is plain the word of God opposes.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. B. Spaulding.

PORTLAND Me., April 11, 1856.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I feel just like writing a letter for the Crisis. Do not know as it will be worth printing, do as you please with it.

I feel well, thank the good Lord, and everything seems to be praising the Lord, both animate and inanimate. The sun shines bright and clear, the birds sing merrily; with cheerful notes they warble forth their great Creator's praise.

I hear the whistle of the locomotives "those strong ones" whose neighings make the land to tremble, I hear the rumbling of Nahum's chariot wheels, while they run like the lightnings, raging in the street, I hear the puffing of those strong iron horses, while they drag the chariots after them, I hear the peals of the church bells, and the city clock striking. I see the city three miles diatant, and its lofty spires pointing, (not to Heaven) but to the sky; and the smoke is curling as it rises upward, with the dense black smoke of the steam engines, giving interest to the scene.

Casco Bay lies spread out before me, like a smooth looking-glass, with vessels in every direction, some at anchor, others with their white canvass unfurled to the breeze are cutting their way through the water.

Before me on the south is the great, wide, blue sea, extending as far as the eye can reach, filled with fishes of every name, size and shape, sporting and enjoying life, all showing forth the wisdom, power and goodness of their great Creator.

And in the back ground, (the north,) I see the White Mountains raising their heads like giants, white as snow, adding sublimity and grandeur to the scene. And O, it leads my mind up through nature to nature's God. How can I, or any one else be an infidel, with so many evidences of the existence, the power, wisdom and goodness of God? People used to tell me. I should be an infidel after '43. Well, '43 has passed, and '54 too, and yet I am not an infidel, praise God, and have no temptation to doubt the being, the power, the goodness, the mercy, the promises, and threatnings of God or his prophetic declarations. I feel a confidence in God, I know I love Christians, and choose their company; I know I love his word, and his commands, and they are not grievous. And is it too much to say, that I know I love God, and that He loves me, leads me. gives me access to many minds? Is it wrong to have so much confidence in God? If so, then I am wrong.

I feel like praising God with all my heart, and like consecrating myself wholly to him, soul, body and spirit, I had rather be a servant of the Church, than a king on a throne.

There has been a very distracted state of things among the brethren for a year past, but there is an improvement of late, a coming up. They have been cut off from confidence in leaders, by the time's failing, and now they lean upon the Lord. They cannot take any man's say so, but must have a thus saith the Lord for what they believe. There is less of censure, less of the testing, judging spirit; and I think more confidence in God, and more humility.

I have observed a great spirit of enquiry with regard to the thousand years, or the space of time between the first and second resurrection, and the work to be done in that space.

Some think the thousand years are in the past, and that there will be a general resurrection.

Others think it is the future; and that the earth will be desolate and without an inhabitant during that time, and the saints gathered with Christ in the air, to remain there during the thousand years.

Others again think it is in the future, and that Jesus will come and gather all his saints to the valley of the mountain, spoken of in Zechariah, 14th. And that then the sanctuary will be cleansed, Dan. 8: 14, "Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thy hands have established," Exodus 15: 17. The wicked nations being upon the earth, will now be given (in this space) to Jesus, and the uttermost parts of the earth; and he will rule them with a rod of iron, and dash them to pieces as a potter's vessel, (or in other words) they will be destroyed by sword famine and pestilence, which is a work of time. It cannot be done in one year nor two; for it wlll be done by human agency. And this work will go on until the slain shall be from one end of the earth to the other, not lamented nor buried.

"And from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, and from year to year, (more than one year) shall all flesh come up to worship the King, even Jesus." Up where? not in the air; for Jesus is not there; but up to Jerusalem, where Jesus is with his saints. Will all go up to worship? Nay, even as all did not go up and worship Jesus 1800 years ago, when he came just according to the prediction, so probably it will be now; for the hearts of men will be the same; but such as do come up and worship Jesus and obey his law, will be accepted.

And such texts as these will be fulfilled, "They shall go forth and look upon the carcasses of those who have transgressed;" "Seven months shall the house of Israel be burying the dead, that the land may be cleasned." "Seven years shall those who dwell in the cities of Israel, be burying the weapons of war; so that they shall not need to cut any wood out of the field or forest." Eze 39: 9, 10, 11, 12.

May the good Lord bless you Bro. Merriam, in your arduous duties and make you faithful. You need a great deal of wisdom, boldness, faithfulness, and every grace. You occupy a trying place; be faithful, never seek the honors or applause of men, but that which comes from God alone.

And to the Brn. scattered abroad, let me say, be humble, faithful and elevated, be pitiful, kind and courteous; love as Brn. walk together as heirs of the grace of life, keep the unity of the spirit, overlook each others imperfection, and the God of peace be with you.

Your Bro. waiting for the Kingdom,

For the Crisis.

Truth making its way.

Theo. Sem. Fairfax Co., Va.
April 11th, 1866.

DEAR SIR:—The question of the state of the dead has recently been discussed in the Rhetorical Society of this Institution. For various causes, after its first adoption, it was put off from week to week, for nearly a month.

Much anxiety was manifested among the students to hear the disputation, and they, together with a large number of ladies and gentlemen resident in the vicinity, assembled in Prayer-hall on the night finally determined upon for the trial.

The first speaker on the affirmative of the question; "Is there a conscious state between death and the judgment," began by assuming half the argument only; the existence of an immortal essence called soul. He further spoke of Christ preaching to saints in prison, and of the thief on the cross.

An answer to what he brought forward was submitted to the people, and sixty-five texts from the good Book appeared to take a position on the other side.

But little more was said during the night, as the first two disputants took up nearly one hour and a half. Rev. Dr. Sparrow was present at the meeting.

Many confess themselves open to the truth, boldly some now espouse it. Glory to God. The question of a temporary Millenium comes up next week, and then we hope for a discussion of the doctrine of annihilation.

Half the Seminary are inclined to Millinarian views—one quarter are thorough believers.

The shackles are falling; O rejoice!

C. A. SUMNER.

We rejoice with our brother to know, that the glorious truths of the Bible are spreading among those who are preparing to preach the everlasting gospel. May the good Lord continue to scatter light and truth.

We hope to hear again from our Bro. and receive farther particulars relative to the progress of truth in the theological Seminary.—ED.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. C. H. Morgan.

JOHNSTOWN, N. Y.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I have oft times had a desire to pen a few lines to the Crisis; but have never allowed myself to harbor the idea of doing so. But this evening in my loneliness I pen a few thoughts. For several months past I have been from home and friends, secluded too from the society of our Advent Brn. My location has been with those who, although "professors," and members of a church, seemed to care for little else than the comforts of this life, and the things of earth. They are chiefly engaged in a very lucrative employment and all must conform to their wishes in order to do right. As they have all heart could desire to afford them comfort and the enjoyment of the things of this vain life; of course, they cared little about exchanging it for another, or for the chance of gaining a better one. They cannot consequently love the "glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ;" nor those who advocate his revelation in their day, or the day of their children. Of course their (not God's minister must not believe it; or if he does and preaches it, he will lose his $1000, a year and be driven from his mansion to seek the despised of earth, and live more as his divine Master did. I have now left that place and am located in a large village noted for its immorality and vice. It contains 7 churches, several "rum-taverns," a court house and jail. Each has a liberal patronage. I am now surrounded by theological works (belonging to the pastor of the M. E. Church, a fellow-boarder and room-mate,) still I feel not at home, many a lonely and lonesome hour have I experienced, especially on the Sabbath.

The Crisis has been truly a welcome messenger as it has made its weekly visits. This with my "Milerite Bible," and hymn book are my only compunions in tribulation.

Yours, waiting for the ending of the days, C. H. MORGAN.

Orthodxy partially right.

"How loud, how deep, how piercing are the sounds sent forth by the archangel's trumpet! How does LIFE, at his bidding, find its way to the deepest, securest holds of death; and how do countless forms, beaming with beauty, come forth from the abodes of desolation."—Dr. John Brown's "Resurrection of Life."

In a previous article, entitled "Jesus the Life," we endeavor to unfold the doctrine that the Savior is the appointed eternalizer of his servants, in opposition to the common idea that they are already by creation partakers of a common immortality. We ventured to suggest that the prevailing theology that represents him as the bringer of happiness, and not an endless being does sadly misrepresent the design of his mission. This painful fact must be pressed distinctly and high into view, that the multitude who unintentionally limit his glory may be compelled to acknowledge its truth, and begin with contrite hearts to exalt him in a more suitable manner. What interest have they in exhibiting him as less than he is? None; and we are convinced among those who bear his name, and up to the extent of their knowledge mention it with love and honor, there are many who would gladly hail a clear statement of his sublime functions and prerogatives. The influence of names, and companies, and creeds—the terror of reproach, and the dread of worldly loss, may induce many to turn aside from the Scriptural facts we are proclaiming, but all are not so enthralled, so weak, so selfish. These powerful influences are neither slighted nor ignored by us. Who would not feel for a neighbor when he was sorely tempted; yea, when he is seen unresistingly to suffer himself to be tied hands and feet with cords and withs. Truth is the great emancipator, and hence we must speak it with fulness and love.

We accuse our friends and brethren of substantially setting aside the sublime fact that our common Savior is the life-giver to his friends, in the most literal sense of these terms. This is no "railing accusation," since we present it in kindness, and with a true desire to share with them a happiness from our views, as undeniably we divide with them a happiness in theirs. In our opinion they "substantially" do what we affirm of them; yet as we allow in the title of this paper, they are "partially right." The language in our motto is just such as we would employ; and yet, after all, it may be understood to express more than its distinguished author would consent to. Indeed, we feel sure, that were he questioned as to the meaning of his lines, it would come out that they imported much less than a reader of them, by themselves, might suppose. Such language is common in the lips of popular theologians and Christians; and though it is scriptural, it does not, when employed by them, embody the idea that is lodged in it by the sacred penmen. Be plainer, so one whispers; and we shall.

According to the common notion, the souls of believers are at death made perfect in glory, and their bodies being united still to Christ, tarry in their graves till the resurrection. Some may prefer to have the word "spirits" instead of "souls;" at present they may be taken as identical, and of course as being what they are generally understood to designate. The soul of the believer being in fact the man himself,—since as we often hear the soul, and not the body is the man,—is incapable of death, and of course had no necessity to exercise dependence on Jesus for life. If the language "immortal soul" means anything, it signifies that it—more correctly each human being—must have lived forever, even if the Lord Jesus had not appeared in this world. The body may require life from him; all that the soul needs is happiness, and if God judges proper, reunion with a material frame. Man then essentially and substantially requires no gift of life—no resurrection—no revival from complete desolation. Life he never lost; life he does not need to have restored. He is beyond the dominion of the King of Terrors, and requires no deliverance from his sway. As has been Orthodoxically said by Addison,—

"The soul, secure in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.
The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sing in years,
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter and the crash of worlds."

It is long since the Apostle John, for example, died. But when he expired the dissolution of the saint was seeming not a reality. He die! The idea is scouted by the generality of Christians. At this moment he is viewed in the blaze of heaven, having a crown of fine gold on his head, and his eye kindling with unutterable ecstasy. What life—we don't mean happiness—has he found from Jesus? Why is it not admitted that had Jesus Christ failed to redeem the world, that at this hour John would have been as really alive, though of course dwelling in a very different portion of the universe? Life! What life does he need? His body requires to be re-built and re-animated by the power of Jesus. His body! and that is confessedly not himself; it is only life only to a body that he requires from the Redeemer—a body in which he will dwell—a body without which, as representations go, he is very blessed and very dilligent. The archangel's trumpet is to be the signal, then of life to bodies—not to men. Partially true the common doctrine is, but how insignificant its compass compared with that of the Bible announcements? On the one hand, it tells us that men die, and not their bodies merely,—"Man dieth and wasteth away"—man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou"—not a portion of him,—"return;" his breath (his breath, or spirit of life) goeth forth. he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

On the other, and of necessity, we read that it is men who are to rise, and not a part that is to be connected with them as an appendage or organ of activity. "Thy dead men shall live—I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness—the dead in Christ shall rise first—them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him—in Christ shall all be made alive, but every MAN in his own order." Assuming that the soul of man is capable of disembodied existence, and of an immortal nature, the Bible statements about death and the resurrection have been modified, and in many cases exhausted, of meaning altogether. The golden vessel is there, but the wine of truth is gone. As soon as it shall be acknowledged, and we confidently believe the day for this is coming, that the soul of a man is just the organized being himself, and that his spirit is the breath of life which is in his nostrils, and which, at his dissolution, returns to God who gave it. In a word, when it shall be confessed that man is a UNITY, the teaching in the Book on the subjects of death and resurrection will be much more easily apprehended—much more consistently explained.

It is reverence for God that keeps our friends from declaring that the entire man needs life. Thinking that the Book announces the dogma of immortal soulism, what else could we expect them to do? They declare Jesus gives life to what needs life, and a miserable conveyance it is, since it is not life to a man, but to his future habitation, which is quickened, not so much by any actual infusion of life from Jesus, as by his conjoining to the refined corporiety the deathless soul whose presence vitalizes and warms it, like a fire in the centre of a dwelling. Jesus is the life-giver, then, as a conjoiner of soul and body, not as infuser of vitality into a resurrected, sainted being. So worketh the heatheninsh doctrine of immortal-soulism; it misrepresents death's results, and the Redeemer's conquest; tempts a thinking man to believe that if all Jesus does as a life-giver, and the resurrection, is merely what orthodoxy in its blindness assigns him, there are in the Volume a great many words about a very small matter. The church of God will yet blush that this beggarly account of the Savior's life-giving glory was ever held forth by her to the world. When Paul shall take the place of Plato, that hour will arrive.

The final era has come, and the Savior descends to exert his power. He leaves yon fair mansions, and with him are troops of souls—things of life and things of light—needing to be incorporated, and on the eve of entering a fleshly abode! The archangel's trumpet sounds, and forms, after the ancient model of humanity, though excelling in beauty and majesty, start forth from the plains of the astonished world. Each body has a soul thrust into it, as a sword is sent into its scabbard, and the animating force of the sometime exile from materialism, pervades the trunk and limbs as the electric influence diffuses itself through rocks and trees. Eternal power has labored at this humble task; and this we are taught by orthodoxy is the grand triumph of Immanuel—this is his unveiling as the Life!

Time brings on the appointed hour when the Lord Jesus shall revisit this weary world. He comes attended with squadrons of blessed angels, to be the ministers of his will, and the spectators of his glory. He comes with a conqueror's might to do a conqueror's work, and the grandest victory earth has ever witnessed is about to be accomplished. The pious ones who fell asleep in the ages past, are held in bondage by the arm of death. They are in the enemie's land; hushed are their voices; still their hearts; their very thoughts are long since perished. Can these DEAD MEN live? They shall.

The trumpet peals through space; "life at His bidding finds its way to the deepest securest holds of death;" and the innumerable heirs of the first resurrection have awoke—they are clad in the garments of incorruption—they are radiant with the morning flush of perennial youth. Behold the resurrection and the life illustrated and confirmed; the long standing promise literally executed, and the family of the redeemed emancipated from the noisome grave. All heaven is jubilee; the new creation, the sons of the resurrection, take their place on the angelic level, and send forth a triumphant hymn to their glorious Benefactor. "O death where is thy sting, O grave where is thy victory. Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Let it be written, remembered, and pondered, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power."—Bible Examiner.

For the Crisis.

The Church the Moral Conservative of the World.

By J. HOWELL.

No. 2.

"This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish." It is swayed by the affections and passions of human nature. "For where envy and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work." How unlike the piety of the Bible; "the wisdom that is from above." For God is not the author of confusion, but of PEACE, as in all the Churches of the saints, 1 Cor. 14: 33. And can that possibly be one of them where confusion is rife? Note again the contrast, as the Apostle leaves this dark picture. "But the wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then peaceable." "Peaceable," the opposite to "bitter, envying, strife, vain glory, rivalry, deception, confusion, and every evil work." Peaceable wisdom; the one from above—the other from beneath. The one from God; the other from the devil. The one is then peaceable; the other "confusion and every evil work."

Dear reader, will you seek that "wisdom that is from above?" Will you pursue its peace?

The second argument, is from James 3: 17, "But the wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then peaceable." "First," Gr. Proton: first in time; in the first place, Mark 4: 28; 16: 9. First in dignity, importance, &c., i. e., before all things, Matt. 6: 33; Luke 12: 1.

"Then," hepeita Gr. Adv. It denotes sequence or succession of events, etc.; afterwards, then, thereupon. "Proton, first," pure; "hepeita, then, next, thereupon, after that," peaceable. How very evident it must appear to every one, that the "first," great prerequisite to peace, is PURITY. Here is the great cause of strife and contention. Where this is not, peace cannot, does not reign; for "there is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked," Isa. 48: 22. "But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. There is no peace, saith my God to the wicked," Isa. 57: 20, 21. How blessed is the volume of divine truth: how faithful its record of human nature, and how true. The causes of all moral consequences are plainly set forth in it, and sometimes, they compel us to blush with shame. Think of this, ye contentious ones; ye who delight in altercation, wrangling and war—were it not for you, the Church could put on her beautiful garment of peace and quietness. Think you, ye are pure? Deceive not yourselves in this important matter. Come, to the light; to God's faithful word, and remember that "the wisdom that is from above is first PURE, after that PEACEABLE." If it is in us, will not we be so too? Has this the appearance of severity? Could it indeed be so, it is only the severity of truth.

Note James 4: 1, "From whence come wars," contentions, quarrels, "and fightgins (morgu, brawlings) among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war (are in a state of hostility)—in your members?" Ah, yes, this is it. Like begets like. Contention, strife, rivalry, are inside before they are seen out. It works from within, outwards; and the above truthful picture drawn by inspiration's skilful pencil, ought to lead us to the most rigid self-disciple; self criticism possible. Is it I? Lord is it I?" May God assist us to faithful, impartial examination.

"Gentle." "The wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then, after that, * * * GENTLE." Thus was Christ, and hence saith Paul, 2 Cor. 10: 1, "Now I Paul beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ," etc. Such ought the servant of the Lord to be. 2 Tim. 2: 24, "And the servant of the Lord must not STRIVE, but be GENTLE unto all men, apt to teach, patient, (margin forbearing,) in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves." Thus was Paul, 1 Thess. 2: 7, "But we were gentle among you, even as in the manner that a nurse cherisheth her children." Nourishing, counseling, and preserving you. When you were falling, saved you; stumbling, took you up; meekly and patiently watched all your goings with the gentleness of faithful, Christ-like love. Thus ought every one of the Church to be. Titus 3: 1, 2, "Put them in mind * * * to speak evil of NO man, to be NO brawlers, but GENTLE, shewing all meekness unto all men." It is a fruit of the Spirit. "The fruit of the Spirit is * * GENTLENESS," Gal. 5: 22. It is a characteristic of "our Father which art in heaven." Ps. 18: 35, "And thy GENTLENESS hath made me great." Kind reader, let us cultivate this heavenly grace—grace of heavenly wisdom, and may the Lord assist us. It is that mild, placid word and action, that impresses all who come in contact with him who possesses it, with the conviction, "I am for peace." O that we all may possess more of it, which may our Heavenly Father grant for his mercies' sake. It is the gentleness of purity; hence, "the gentleness of Christ."

"Easy to be entreated." First pure, then * * * EASY to be entreated," practicable, pliant—easily persuaded from vice—not obstinately engaged in any pursuit opposed to religion and virtue. At such times as we perceive ourselves to be the objects of divisions, our characters traduced, and injury follow injury in quick succession, until our patience is almost exhausted, then look out. Heavenly wisdom is manageable. It is "easy to be entreated"—is not obstinately disposed; does not become very much exasperated; does not refuse to speak to those who have occasioned it; seek their injury, and then call it a Christian trial. Poor human nature. How it will justify itself in acts that it would condemn another for, and even itself when standing without any connection with vice. The judgment of God is the same at all times. Let us then take heed; be yielding, and "submit ourselves one to another in the fear of God," Eph. 5: 21. Another amiable quality of "the wisdom that is from above," is to be "full of mercy." "First pure, then * * * FULL of mercy and good fruits." Compassion for all. The offender in its hands is kindly treated. When he has no means of self-defence, and expects the heaviest stroke of wrath, then mercy smiles upon him. Trespasses and injuries it delights to forgive, and in this it displays its benevolence, mildness, tenderness and meekness of temper. If it must employ the rod, it is merciful, and makes the offender realize that stern necessity impelled it to chastise. Be "full of mercy." Every variety of fruit that is good is Wisdom's to confer. Hence the tree must be good. "Pure, peaceable, gentle, pliant, merciful and good fruit, the wisdom that is from above," originates: "Fruit of the Spirit; of righteousness; which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God," Phil. 1: 11. If these exist, and continue in us, they will keep "us without offence till the day of Christ." In Eph. 5: 9, the Apostle sums it up as follows: "For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, which is that quality or disposition which is contrary to malice and wickedness; or it may mean benignity and bounty.

2. Righteousness, "which is opposed to injustice, whereby one becomes hurtful to another, through deceit, covetouness, oppression and violence."

3. Truth, "which is opposed to errors, lies, heresies, hypocrisy, both in common affairs, and also in matters of religion."

"But the wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then * * * without PARTIALITY. Undiscriminating, undistinguishing and impartial. The "partiality" here referred too is evidently that to which the Apostle points—Jas. 2: 4, "Respect of persons." He there affirms it to be, having "the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory with respect of persons," and hence cautions the Church against it; teaching us all, that it is a violation of "the royal law according to the Scripture. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself;" and if we do it, we, having offended in one point of that law, are "guilty of all." Hence we must not discriminate between things that are alike; between the little ones of Jesus; of their "Father." On the same ground that we would shew favor or honor to one of Christ's little ones, we would show it to another in like circumstances, there being no valid reason why we should shew "partiality." Such preferences as those forbidden, are founded in, and are characteristic of impiety. By a careful investigation of James 2: with other Scriptures, it will be clearly demonstrated to every mind.

Finally, "The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then, after that, without HYPOCRISY. Affecting to be what one really is not. For the benefit of the reader, I will transcribe the observations of Mr. Cruden on this subject. He remarks that "our Savior frequently accused the Pharisees of hypocrisy, Matt. 23: 13, 14, &c. Their character is drawn out in that chapter, as

1. They say and do not, v. 3; their practice was not agreeable to their doctrine, and therefore their example was not to be imitated; for they imposed many strict injunctions over and above what the law required, and severely exacted obedience thereto from others, but did not observe the least part thereof themselves, v. 4.

2. What good things they did, were only for ostentation, to be seen of men, v. 5.

3. They ambitiously affected titles, vain applause, and the precedency at entertainments, v. 6–12.

4. They hid their crying sins under an appearance of virtue, and pretended to holiness, that they might sin with less suspicion and more security, v. 14. These our Savior compares to whited sepulchres, that within contain sordid dust and rottenness, v. 27, 28.

5. They were exact in light matters, they tithed mint and cummin, but neglected substantial duties. They were zealous in the outward parts of religious worship, and neglected righteousness and mercy, thinking to compensate for their defects in the duties of one table, by strictly observing the duties of the other, vs. 23, 24.

6. They studied rather an external purity, than the inward purity of the heart, v. 25.

7. These hypocritical Scribes and Pharisees pretended a great deal of respect to the ancient prophets, and to disallow what their fathers did to them, and yet were as ready to practice the like themselves to Christ and His Apostles, v. 29, 30, 31.

8. Hypocrites pray to God only in the time of sickness and danger, when, by their afflictions they are driven to it, but shew no love to prayer or delight in God in time of prosperity, Job. 27: 8–10.

9. They judged and censured others severely for smaller faults, being in the meantime themselves guilty of greater crimes, Matt. 7: 5.

10. They were more for outward ceremonies and human traditions, than for the true and spiritual worship of God, Matt. 22: 1, 2, 7; 15: 2, 7–9.

11. In worldly affairs, they were quick-sighted, not so in spiritual and heavenly things, Mark 3: 4; Matt. 16: 1–3.

12. Hypocrites in public calamities are fearful, Isa. 33: 14. * * * Hypocrisy also turns the means of Salvation into poison; for the frequent exercise of religious duties, which is the means to sanctify others, confirms and hardens hypocrites."

May all be saved from the awful reflection in the judgment, "I was a hypocrite on earth."

II. The second particle of moral salt which we will analyze, essential to constitute "the Church of the living God," "the SALT of the earth," is CHARITY. 1 Tim. 1: 6–7. "Now the end, scope, design, object, of the commandment is CHARITY out of a PURE heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned: From which some having swerved, (not aiming at,) have turned aside unto vain jangling; idle, trivial disputation, desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor wherof they affirm." Those who have not deviated from "charity," do not this. The above presents three sources from whence springs true charity, and these three securing the end or object of one great "commandment." These three sources are essential to secure true charity.

First, "a PURE heart." Pure, unsoiled, unalloyed heart.

Secondly, "a GOOD conscience." That faculty of the soul which distinguishes between right and wrong, and prompts one to approve of and pursue the former and to disapprove of and avoid the latter.

Thirdly, "Faith UNFEIGNED." "Without hypocrisy." Such qualities of salt must be productive of the best results. "Charity out of a pure heart," must be pure. "Charity out of * * a good conscience," must be true and equitable. "Charity out of * * faith unfeigned," must be real and sincere. It is the fulfilling of the law. "Owe no man anything, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law," Rom. 13: 8–10. "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; AS I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another," Jno. 13: 34, 35. And will not "all men" know that "ye are" not His disciples if brotherly love is not manifested? Its amiable qualities are presented in a group, in 1 Cor. 13: 5–8. Here is the fruit of Charity in one rich, pure, heavenly cluster, proving itself worthy of its reign. It is long-suffering and kind toward all under every provocation, and without envy in all its history; is no arrogant trifler, neither does it "play the braggadocio." It is not proud, vain, insolent: its manner is becoming, and hence not impatient of censure; it is opposed to covetousness and selfishness in all its forms; is even-tempered, not excited to indignation, and angry dispute. It invents no evil against another, and seeks no overthrow of foes, neither rejoices in their overthrow; or in iniquity of any kind, as injustice, falsehood, or deceitfulness; but ever rejoices in the truth, rectitude and probity. How patient in every emergency; faithful in all its course; and its reliance upon God. It hopes on; hopes ever; unfading, unfailing in its nature. Would you acquire such fruit? Possess the tree. Firmly grasp and permanently retain it, and in its history you may read your destiny: you, like it, will never fail. O for a "pure heart, a good conscience, a faith unfeigned," from whence proceeds a virtue of such inestimable worth, filling the heart of its recipient with its precious fruit; inviting all, even the most discriminating, to an investigation of its amiable qualities. Sacrificing for the benefit of its foes, the object most intensely dear to itself, an "only begotten son." "For God is love," and that Son the very embodiment of love; casting its benign influences upon all; developing its secrets to its real friends; and it knows them; and ennobling all of poor degraded humanity who will, to an eternal realm. Will not all seek it? All secure it? And will not all those who expect its benefits, practice its virtues. It is a sacrificing love. I do not mean that it will sacrifice the moral character of another to its caprice, because of a supposed injury; one which, perhaps, never lived, only in the domain of jealousy and evil surmising. No! no! Charity is of heavenlier origin. It has no such fruit. It sacrifices its ease, for the comforts of others; its substance to supply other's wants. It seeks not how much it may give and not feel it. It loves to feel it, and hence gives liberally that it may feel.

Covetousness is not among its virtues, but among the most notorious vices it has to oppose. And why not? It is "the love of God, of Christ, of the Spirit." It is this love in the Church, and can those who have it not belong to the Church of God. It is a faithful, meek, forgiving love. Faithful in all its efforts for the good of others, and in none more so, than those put forth for the safety and harmony of the Church, and the salvation of men. Meek, patiently suffering wrong rather than do wrong. Free from retaliation at all times. Forgiving others the sufferings they inflict upon us, the injury they do us. This forgiveness is from the heart. "Even AS Christ forgave you, so also do ye," Col. 3: 13. And we must be "Christ-like" in order to live with Christ in his kingdom. These two great principles, Wisdom and Love, which involve every Christian grace in their development, we must posses, if we will be the Church of which Christ declared, "YE ARE THE SALT OF THE EARTH," world. The salt of heavenly wisdom; of heavenly love, can alone season poor human nature, so as to make it possible for God to relish humanity at all. Their qualities must be diffused through our entire being. Possessing these, we will possess "the fruit of the Spirit," Gal. 5: 22, 23, and those precious graces essential to our having "an entrance ministered unto us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ," 2 Pet. 1: 1–12. Dear Lord grant it. Amen.

To be continued.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. A. Mussey.

FISHERVILLE, N. H., April 9, 1856.

BRO. MERRIAM:—As the Crisis comes weekly, filled with comfort and consolation to the household of faith, I am reminded of the golden rule, "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them," and as I have been often refreshed with the epistles from my dear Brn. and Srs. through the Crisis, perhaps a word of comfort from me may not come amiss at this time. Although weak and frail, I do desire it may be said of me in the day of accounts,—"she hath done what she could." The storm is still raging, the chilly winds are blowing and the waves dashing against the old ship about to land her faithful crew in the Harbor, yet all is safe! (blessed be the Lord our great Pilot!) if we abide in the ship; said Jesus, "if ye abide in me, and my word abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

As I read a short epistle from Bro. Higgins, in a late No. of the Crisis, my soul responded Amen. Truly, much has been written of the way the children of Israel were led, and the way Adventists have been led; but I think it much more profitable to understand the way Jesus was led, for he has given us an example that we should follow in his steps.

I have often felt sad and disheartened, and sometimes almost discouraged, while so many conflicting views and elements have been raging, but He who calms the raging tempest speaks peace to my troubled soul, and then all is fair weather for a little while; Oh, then how pleasant after a storm to have the clouds disperse and the sun shine again. I rejoice that I have been a believer in the coming of the Messiah to reign on the throne of his father David, and to sway His sceptre over all the earth; and although my expectations have not yet been realized, there is still cheering intelligence from the Prince of peace—"fear not little flock for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom!" O, my heart is made glad to-day while I write, that the word of God has not failed,—thank the Lord! My dear Brn. and Srs., the Kingdom is ours if we hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, firm unto the end; for He is faithful who has promised to give the Kingdom to Israel, and he that believeth hath the witness in himself, so we need not fear. My own mind is fully made up to cease from man and cling to Christ; He is the Pilot, and I am resolved to keep my eye on Him, and what though the billows roar and all is commotion without—"Thou, O God, shalt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee because He trusteth in thee."

Our Bro. H—— asks the question, "cannot some one give the way in which Jesus was led?" I answer yes, for He has given us the way Himself,—has left it on record, and all may learn the way by His blessed Word.

In the first place, after His baptism, He was led by the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted by the devil; and did He yield to temptation? nay verily, but bade the tempter begone, and angels came and ministered unto Him. And what if we (by following Him) have been led into the hour of temptation which has come upon all the world to try us, shall we listen to the tempter and turn back from whence we came? No, never! What saith the Word? "resist the devil and he will flee from you"—"draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh unto you." What if we are told, this is the way, walk ye in it, or that is the way, or you must believe this or that or the other? said Jesus, "I am the way the truth and the life"—"I am the door, by me if any man enter he shall go in and out and find pasture—he that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them," &c. Lord help us all to do, as well as say, and listen to that prophet which the Lord our God has raised up, which is Jesus Christ, our great pattern, prophet, priest, and King; and as many as follow Him, peace be upon them and the whole Israel of God forever, for there is nothing that can harm you if ye be followers of that which is good. What if the world reproach us? they called the Master of the house Beelzebub, much more they of his household; He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; shall we not follow in His footsteps? He was reviled yet He reviled not again;—have we enough of His spirit to do likewise? He was persecuted but threatened not; are we like Him? He was led to Pilate's bar as a lamb to the slaughter, "and as a sheep dumb before her shearers, so opened He not His mouth"—can we bear all things, suffer all things, endure all things? Lord fill us with that love that never faileth. He died upon the cross, the just for the unjust, He laid down His life for us that He might bring us to God, and by His stripes we are healed; and can we lay down our lives for our Brn.? O for more of the mind of Christ! and the mind of Christ was to do the will of His Father which is in Heaven, and the spirit he possessed was a spirit of love; and said Jesus, "he that doeth the will of my Father in Heaven the same is my mother, my sister, and my brother"—let us do likewise.

Dear Brn. and Srs., the long looked for day is coming when the great Shepherd of Israel will gather His sheep who have been scattered in this dark and cloudy day, into one fold, and reign over them forever. Then the Watchmen will see eye to eye—peace will be restored and all the captives will be free! O Lord hasten the time! is my prayer, speed on the glorious day, let thy kingdom come, bring immortality, awake the sleepers under ground and give them life, dry up the mourner's tears, bring back the loved ones from their graves. O let Zion be redeemed—cheer our lone hearts with thy presence, O thou great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls, bring us to mount Zion the city of our God, the capital of the great King; let us behold thy glory, and unite with angels and all the redeemed host of the Lord in giving thanks to thy holy and righteous name. Here we are scattered over mountain, hill, and dale—here we have trials, temptations, sorrow and tears,—there, will be none;—"here we grieve the friends we love and they in turn grieve us;"—but there, we shall be at peace and our rest will be glorious; here death reigns and our loved ones are hurried away to the silent prisonhouse, awaiting the summons—"awake, ye dead, and come to judgment!"—there in that world to which we journey, will be no more death neither sorrow nor crying. Come, then, thou great Life-Giver! remove the curse and restore the earth to its Eden beauty!

From your unworthy Sr.,

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 30, 1856.

Question.

"Is there any Scripture to prove that man has an immortal soul, and that the wicked will be raised in a state fitted to exist forever in eternal pain? What are we to understand by Rev. 20: 10; and Mark 9: 44. Yours seeking after truth.

L. LEAVITT."

ANSWER.

1. Our most FIRM belief is, that there is not a SINGLE text of Scripture that teaches, man has an "immortal soul," unless it be the saying of Satan to Eve, in Gen. 3: 4, "Ye shall not surely die." Paul teaches us in Rom. 2: 7, that immortality is to be obtained "by patient continuance in well-doing;" that it is something to be sought for, not that which we have already in possession; for none but an absent-minded man, will "seek" for that which he has obtained.

The Savior tells us in John 6: 40, that "this is the will of Him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life; (not has got,) and I will raise him up at the last day." No promise of raising him up at death. The word immortal is found but once in the whole Bible, which is in 1 Tim., 1: 17, "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory for ever and ever. Amen."

If we ever have eternal life, it will be received as a gift through Christ. Says Paul in Rom. 6: 22, "The wages of sin is death; but the GIFT of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Then it follows, as Paul declares in 1 Cor. 15: 17, 18, that if Christ our Life Giver is not raised, "they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are PERISHED." This can not be true if men go to their reward at death, before the resurrection. Paul says in 1 Cor. 15: 32, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die."

It is plain that Paul's only hope of a future life was through the resurrection "at the last day;" "For," said he, "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the arch-angel, and with the trump of God; and and the dead in Christ shall rise first."

2. In answer to the second point, we would say, we would think the Bible speaks in very plain terms, showing that the wicked never become immortal; but on the contrary, after their resurrection and judgment, they die the "second death."

Let us inquire of the Holy Spirit that moved the prophets to write the mind of God, and abide the answer. What becomes of the soul that sinneth?

Ans. Ezekiel says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." In Rev. 20: 14, 15, we find what is meant by the death experienced by "the soul that sinneth." It is being "cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." Death is the end of dying, and when the sinning soul is dead, it is no longer alive, but the act of dying is closed, and unless there is another resurrection for the sinner, after the second death, he can never live again; this being true, his death or punishment would be ETERNAL; hence for this reason, the Savior declares in Matt. 25: 46, "these shall go away into everlasting, (eternal) punishment; but the righteous into life eternal."

But let me inquire of Paul what is the wages of sin? Is it eternal misery? Note his answer. "Rom. 6: 24, "The wages of sin is DEATH." This is plain, and as the Bible does not teach the affirmative and negative of the same question, when rightly understood, we are satisfied that the sinner will never rise from the second death, which is experienced after judgment; for if he should, his punishment, which is death, would not be eternal, as the Savior declares, in Matt. 25: 46.

Our inquirer asks, "What are we to understand by Rev. 20: 10, where it is said, speaking of the devil, 'and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.'"

The whole verse reads, "And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever."

We find, as admitted by all who have carefully studied the Bible, that the words, ever, forever, and everlasting, are used some two hundred times in the Bible in a limited sense; and signify, as acknowledged by some of the best Bible students, the longest possible duration of that to which they are applied. We have only time to note one or two examples. Jonah, in speaking of the time when in the belly of the fish, says in ch. 2: 6, "I went down to the bottoms of the mountains; the earth with her bars was about me FOREVER." But Jonah is not there now. That forever has ended.

In 1 Sam. 1: 22, we read, "But Hannah went not up; for she said unto her husband, I will not go up until the child be weaned, and then I will bring him, that he may appear before the Lord, and there abide FOREVER." Here, forever lasted during the life of Samuel, as may be clearly seen by the context. His mother says in v. 11, I will give him unto the Lord all the days of his life;" and in v. 28, "As long as he liveth he shall be lent to the Lord."

We return to Rev. 20: 10. The torment of the devil in this verse must continue so long as the devil exists.

We now inquire, does the Bible teach that he will exist eternally?

See 1 John 3: 8, "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might DESTROY the WORKS of the devil."

If the devil continus working eternally, and all the wicked too, how will the Savior accomplish the great enterprise he has undertaken. Satan would then be forever in advance of the Son of God. If the devil himself were destroyed, then his works could all be demolished. Let us look at Heb. 2: 14, and we think the matter will be made plain. "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might DESTROY HIM that had the power of death, that is the devil."

Thank the Lord for this Scripture, for it plainly teaches that our great enemy will die himself for introducing death into our world.

Let us look a moment at the meaning of the words "destroy" and destruction. They signify "to kill, to devour, to consume, to extirpate, to annihilate a thing, or the form in which it exists."

"Destruction consists in the annihilation of the form of anything, that form of parts which constitutes it what it is," Webster.

Then it follows that when the devil is DESTROYED, as the Bible declares he shall be, 'that FORM of parts which constitutes him what he is,' no longer EXISTS. This looks like the work of the Son of God. To his name be praise, for ever and ever.

Our Sister asks one more question, to wit:

"What are we to understand by Mark 9: 44, 'Where their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched.'"

This passage has been thought to prove the doctrine of eternal misery, because it is said that "their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched."

If these expressions prove that whatever is cast into an unquenchable fire will exist externally, we think it proves more than would be admitted by those who introduce this passage to prove eternal torment.

Let us examine a few other passages where these words occur. "Isa. 66: 24, "And they shall go forth and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched."

If unquenchable fire proves the eternal existence of what it receives, then these "CARCASES of the men are eternal.

Read Jer. 17: 27, "But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the Sabbath day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the Sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched."

Here is an UNQUENCHABLE FIRE, DEVOURING the PALACES of Jerusalem. Does this prove that after the city is set on fire it will burn ETERNALLY? Just as much as it is proved that men will burn eternally, when they are cast into fire that cannot be quenched.

The fact in relation to Jerusalem, is, that a fire was kindled in it about A. D. 70, and was "not quenched," consequently it was consumed, as we are taught ALL the wicked shall be.

We look upon the passage in Mark 9: 44, as a very strong one to show that the wicked will cease to exist in consequence of being cast into an unquenchable fire.

When we see a house on fire, and say, "the fire cannot be quenched," we do not mean that the house will burn eternally, but that it will be burnt up. So with the wicked.

Mal. 4: 1, "The day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them UP, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

This is precisely what an unquenchable fire would do.

If the fire could be quenched, then a part of the burning object might be saved from destruction.

Says the Savior in Matt. 13: 40, "As therefore, the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world."

When tares are gathered and burned, they no longer exist as tares; so when the wicked are "burnt UP root and branch," they no longer exist as wicked men. As the prophet Obadiah says, "They shall be as though they had not been."

M. GRANT.

Question.

BRO. MERRIAM:—Will you, or some other Bro., explain Ezk. 29: 4, and 34: 25. Yours, seeking for the truth.

M. A. C.

ANSWER.

1. Ezek. 29: 4, reads, "But I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales; and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales."

This prophecy was given in the tenth year of Jehoiachin's captivity in Babylon, under Nebuchadnezzar, about B. C. 588.

The second verse of this chapter requires the prophet to set his "face against Pharaoh—(Hophra,) king of Egypt, and against all Egypt.

In the third verse, he is called "the great dragron, that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, my river is mine own, and I have made it for myself."

Here the pride of this king of Egypt is compared to a great dragon in the rivers, holding control over all the smaller animals in the waters, and claiming a right to decide who shall dwell in the streams, because he was the Creator.

Like Nebuchadnezzar, this dragon, which represents the king of Egypt, is saying, "Is not this great, Babylon, that I have built?"

Like the king of Babylon, he has forgotten "That the Most High ruleth," and his humiliation is illustrated in the fourth verse, by the dragon with hooks in his jaws, and afterwards thrown out upon the banks in the wilderness, as in v. 5, in a helpless condition—some like Nebuchadnezzar, when his reason departed, and he had "his portion with the beasts of the field."

The fish in the rivers occupied by this haughty dragon, are represented as sticking to his scales, and sharing the same fate as their great master.

We think this illustrates the fact, that the people of Egypt possessed the same spirit as their king, and consequently adhered to him, and became "a base kingdom," as declared in v. 14.

Herodotus, the oldest historian whose works are extant, says, that the king of Egypt "Proudly and wickedly boasted of having established his kingdom so surely, that it was not in the power of any God to dispossess him of it." We see then a reason why this prophecy should be uttered against the king of Egypt.

2. Ezek. 34: 25, "And I will make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness and sleep in the woods."

In v. 22, the Lord compares his people to a flock, and in the preceding verses he represents them as having received very unkind treatment from their shepherds. Like a flock of sheep in the wilderness wood, left by their shepherd among devouring wolves to be scattered and lost, mangled and killed; even so has the flock of God, or his saints been treated by their professed shepherds.

From v. 22, to the close of the chapter, he represents the saints in the kingdom, in their glorified state, by a flock feeding and quietly resting where there are no "evil beasts" to molest their repose, as in the 25th verse.

For the Crisis

Letter from Bro. Geo. A. Barker.

WASHINGTON CT., March, 28, 1856.

BRO. MERRIAM:—For some time past, I have felt that I would like to speak a few words through the Crisis; but not being a grammarian, I have refrained from doing it, till my heart is full; but as I wish to say only a few words, I will venture to speak, and I pray that my mind and pen may be guided aright.

I was a firm believer in the time movement, and now it is past, I do not charge the Lord with any mistake which we have made in preaching the time. Still I believe the Lord was with us, and blessed us in our honest endeavor to preach what we thought was truth. But I never made it a test of fellowship, but have been condemned by some, for having so much charity for those who did not see, as I did; but condemning and being condemned, are alike to me. Brn., time is short; what good can we do by using carnal weapons, such as harsh words, condemning those that differ in some points from us. O Christian! Bible Christian! where art thou? May the good Lord help us to purify ourselves, that we may be found of Christ in peace when He comes.

I wish to say to all of like precious faith, that I am still among those that expect to endure unto the end. O for grace to stand. I have had many a trial the winter past while looking over the rations that fell to me and mine; when I have seen the small portion with which we were to be supported, my heart has been made almost to sink within me; then it was that I had a chance to trust in God. Ah, Bro. Pratt, you are right. Of the many who talk about trusting in God, how few know how to do it, or what it is to trust Him. Often have I thought I could preach no more, and that I should be obliged to sell my old horse and wagon; but by selling my watch, and with the Lord's blessing on our scanty stores, we have lived through the winter. How we have lived I cannot tell, unless you allow me to say, the God that kept the widow's meal and oil from diminishing, blessed the little we have had, for we have not been allowed to suffer, nor to apply to the town for help; thank the good Lord forever; but no thanks to those who have seen their Bro. have need, and have virtually said, "be ye warmed and filled." No thanks, did I say? We do thank them for their good food which we were permitted to share; but their "God bless you," and "when are you coming again," and, "be sure and come again," cannot keep us alive: but no need of my writing on this. Dr. Hastings has done his duty, and if his letter gives offence, surely mine would. But one word Brn; the Scriptures provide for those that preach the Gospel; the time of raining manna for God's people to eat, is past, and catching fish with money in their mouths to pay our taxes, gate fees, or fare on the cars, is also gone by, but think not I am begging, or am too lazy to work. The Lord has given me a little better health, and I have taken wood to saw, that I may add a little to what I get for preaching.

Your Bro. GEO. A. BARKER.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. Merriam.

WARNER, N. H., April 26, '56.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Supposing my Christian friends are desirous of hearing from me, I dictate a line for the Crisis. Since leaving the Office, my eyes have been, for a part of the time, exceedingly painful; but a kind Providence having led me to the hospitable mansion of Bro. Couch, I am now attending to my health in the use of medicine, and as much of air and exercise as my health and sight will permit. I now feel somewhat relieved; thank God, and have reason to praise the Lord for his protecting care and the kindness of endeared friends. How soon the eye may so far recover its accustomed tone as to enable me to read and write, it is, of course, impossible for me to say. Shall I not have the prayers of the Church in my behalf?

Yours in the blessed hope,

J. MERRIAM.

Patience.

BY EDWIN E. BURNHAM.

Who among us is it that asks the question, "is the Lord among us or not?" Did not the anger of Jehovah burn against his people formerly, when they came out of Egypt, for asking such a question? and did not he afflict them sadly? Why will we tempt the Holy Spirit in this unbelieving manner? Who but the Holy God would ever have begotten in us such burning desires for the appearing and kingdom of the blessed Redeemer? Who but Himself would, and could have sustained us in our holy, eager, persevering waiting for this, year after year, until now? Why have we not, ere this, hungered and thirsted after the foolish things of the world to such an extent as to have gone away entirely from the interest of this great question of the Kingdom near? Because God has been with us, and kept us. Why have not the contentions and tumults among us, driven us to discouragement and dispair in regard to our cause? Because God has been with us to give us patience, hope, encouragement, and help. Praise His name! Why have not our repeated disappointments destroyed our confidence in the veracity, and truthfulness of His word? Because the Holy Spirit would not suffer it, while it was among us. Why have we been made to hunger and thirst after righteousness ever since we engaged in this cause? Because the Spirit of righteousness is among us. Why are we daily striving for holiness of heart and life? Because a Holy God is in our midst. Are we not wonderfully helped in preaching the Word? Does not the blessing of the Lord rest upon us in our conference and prayer meetings? Do we not have seasons of unspeakable refreshing in the closet? Does not God supply all our temporal necessities? Do we not have sweet and holy communion with saints? Of what, then do we—shall we complain? Do you say there are some—have been some—bad men and women among us? So there were some bad persons in the family of God's patriarch Jacob—some bad people among the Israelites—some bad people in the early Church—a Judas among the twelve —some angels fell from Heaven! The hive with the honey—the thorn with the rose—the husk with the kernel. But you say we stand in an unhappy position before the community. Yes, but not quite so unhappy a position as our Master did —the position of a "co-operator with the devil," "a glutton," "a wine-bibber," and "beside himself." We want patience, my brother—sister—and in the fulness of time all will be well. Yes, yes, "let patience have her perfect work." "The husbandman hath long patience." So, then, there are two kinds of patience, long and short. Well, we want the long kind. Come, come, put on patience, and wait for the finale of this matter. If you become impatient and go away, where will you go? To the world and perish in its vanities, and corruption? To the fashionable Churches, and attempt to fill your belly with the husks of "spirit-lands," "immortal souls," "death-bed stories," forms, ceremonies, traditions, a "vissionary heaven," and an "ideal Christ?" Go, you that will, I loathe the thought! I would rather dwell alone "in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods!" Let me rather die, and be quiet, than to endorse, and countenance the solemn, fashionable mockery of what is now generally called religion. Put on patience, Bro. and stay where you are. You cannot better yourself. It the truth is not here, where is it? If the Book does not mean what it reads, who knows what it does mean?

Patience, Bro., it does mean what it reads! Every jot and tittle will be fulfilled in its time. Our God will right soon come. HE WILL COME! He will deliver his people, and pour destruction on his foes!

Have patience—have patience!

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. P. B. Morgan.

MOLINE, Ill. April 10th, 1856.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I have for some time hoped to be able to prepare some articles for the Crisis, but for want of time have been prevented; and not knowing when I shall have the leisure I wish, I send you this which may suffice for an apology. For the last six months past, my time has been increasingly occupied. I am thankful that the Messenger is off from my hands, —not that I did not delight in the work of its publication, but because I delight in, and can preach the more; while you can send them a paper; and I think if the Crisis can be made what we need, the most of the western Messenger subscribers will, without doubt, renew their subscriptions for the Crisis.

Since I last reported my labors, I have preached in Dekalb Co., where our cause is doing well under the faithful labors of Brn. Spencer and Jaynes. In Chicago I spent two or three weeks, but to little effect. The door does not seem to yet open in Chicago, although I preached repeatedly in a seminary, and once in one of the churches; but could obtain no place for an uninterrupted and continuous effort, without which, very little can be effectually accomplished in Chicago. During my stay there I experienced much kindness beneath the roof of Bro. A. Verder, who with a few other ardent lovers of the truth are earnestly desring the time when the glorious truths of the soon coming Kingdom of God shall be effectually proclaimed there. In Vermillionville, where I had preached once when on my first tour in Ill. (now nearly three years since,) and where a few Brn. had been collected—I spent four weeks, preaching nearly every evening, and on Sabbaths. And although we had an immense prejudice to contend with at the first, we felt when we left that the Lord had so far given us the victory, that from hence while time continues, we should have a permanent interest in Vermillionville. Other places in Lasalle Co. are opening; and under the united and fostering care of Brn. Calkins, Lathrope (late of the Baptist Church) and Bro. Teeple (late of Ct.) I think with time we may expect much from this region. At Paynes-point, Ogle Co., I attended the Northern Illinois semi-annual Conference, (Dec. 8th,) and though in conference we had the most melting seasons—which was indeed sitting together in heavenly places in Christ—yet were sad to find the interest in this Co., declining. This, though attributed in part to a diversity of reasons, is I think owing for the most part to a want of suitable labor; a man sacrificed, but living—and filled with faith and the Holy Ghost, is what they greatly need.

In January I held a series of meetings in this place, but did not so effectually route the erring as we had hoped to have done, although the result appeared salutary among our Brn. My most recent labor (except a single discourse in the city of Davenport,) has been in the new but promising town of Princeton, Iowa, where I commenced a series of meetings about six weeks since, and where by the blessing of God we now have a Church of about thirty substantial men and women. This was an entirely new field, except two or three discourses that had been preached there by Bro. Chandler—but if we may judge from present appearances, the truth has taken a very deep and permanent hold of this commnnity, and not a few we shall hope to find with lamps trimmed and burning at the appearing of our Lord. About nine hundred dollars I am told has already been pledged for a chapel which it is intended to build when about as much more has been subscribed, which it is thought will be so nearly raised as to warrant the effort of building soon.

God willing, I shall again visit Princeton next Sabbath, and next week go to the Central Illinois Conference that sits the 18th in St. Albans, Hancock Co.

My faith in the soon coming King of glory—so long away from His mouurning and afflicted Church—remains unshaken. Whatsoever may be the course of events in Europe, it seems to me that not knowing the precise day or hour, we are nevertheless warranted in looking for the immediate revelation of our Lord. My greatest lament is that that part of the Church which can discern the signs of the times is so poorly prepared for the glorious expected epiphany—that the spirit of worldly-mindedness and world-likeness is so rife amongst my Brn. of like precious faith. Still we have the everlasting assurance that God will never forsake those that trust in Him. And it does appear to me that our Deliverer will either speedily appear, or we shall soon see a more effectual binding together of the faithful.

Brn. Chandler and Pratt are yet in the field, although the former is obliged to give his attention somewhat to secular things to support a large family. Bro. Pratt is wholly devoted to the work of an Evangelist, and is laboring to good acceptance.

Thus you will see we are doing what we can. There are some things that look forboding, but feeling that we are engaged in the cause of Almighty God, we have nothing to fear; He will give us victory.

I remain very truly, your Bro. in Christ, P. B. MORGAN.

Letter from Sr. S. P. Green.

PLYMOUTH, Vt., April 22d, 1856.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I desire to send you my thanks for being so kind in continuing to send me your paper without any compensation; and I can truly say, it has been a source of great comfort to me. I would say that I am, and always have been willing to pay something, but have not the ability so to do. I do really feel too unworthy to ask for so great a boon, on the account of my unfaithfulness, and short comings to my blessed Redeemer,—I am

"In the midst of temptation, and sorrow, and strife,
And evils unnumbered, of this bitter life;"

but hope, by bearing the cross, and denying myself, I shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. I am striving to purify myself, "even as He is pure;" for without the spirit of Christ we are none of His; but the way at times is so hedged up, and obscure, that I know not how to get along or what to do. O Brn. and Srs. in the Lord, pray for me, yea, let us pray for one another, that we may gain the victory, and be overcomers at last. There is no other way for us, but to hold on to God—cling fast to His word—pray much—be ever on the lookout, for without are foes, and fears within. Let us go to Him in secret, and pour out our complaints. "Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear Him, upon them that hope in His mercy; to deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine. Our soul waiteth for the Lord; He is our help and our shield. O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt His name together. Let us not fret ourselves because of evil doers, for they shall be cut off; but the Lord preserveth them that trust in Him." My dear Brn. and Srs. let us travel on together in the way our Leader trod. My heart is sad to see such a declension in spiritual things, and so much conformity to the world; but all these things are speaking loudly of the near approach of the day of judgment. Oh! what will become of poor sinners here, even here in Plymouth, where there has been so much done,—but alas! deep anguish will soon, and too late, take hold on them, when God reveals Himself in flaming fire, taking vengeance on the ungodly, and them that obey not His gospel. Dear Brn. and Srs. my heart bids me rejoice in view of the time that has long been foretold by the prophets, apostles, and all God's servants. None of His servants have ever been ashamed of Christ, or of his words, they have ever been willing to preach this gospel of the Kingdom. This gospel was to be preached among all nations for a witness, and then the end should come. I well remember the time when Bro. Miller labored in Rochester, the meeting-house was crowded each successive day; all attended, great and small, rich and poor, pastors, deacons, universalists and infidels. "The world at large was stirred!" Who can say the hand of God was not in it?

Well, let us hold fast to the professions of our faith without wavering, firm unto the end; and soon all the redeemed will be where—

"The splendid arches glisten,
Within God's sacred dome,
With waters clear as crystal
Proceeding from the throne;
The tree of life so healing,
On either side the stream,
Whose branches gently waving,
Add grandeur to the scene.

Come all ye thirsty—fainting—
Drink from life's cooling stream,
Which, when you once have tasted,
You ne'er shall thirst again;
O! be constrained to enter,
Through Christ the living way,
Then you can live forever,
In realms of endless day."

Your Sr. in the bonds of love and charity, SOPHRONIA P. GREEN.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. S. F. Leavitt.

DANBURY, April, 22, 1856.

"Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness," 2 Pet. 2: 11. In this chapter we have a descriptive account of the great day of God, the burning day when the heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. We are also informed how we may know we are in the last days. "There shalt come to the last days, scoffers walk ing after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of His coming." O ye loved ones of God, is it not even so now? We are living in the last moments of time. And O how lamentable it is to see so many that have been shining lights in the work of the Lord, becoming dozy, and falling asleep over their eternal interest, and drinking deeply of the spirit of this present evil world; the grace of God leaking by degrees out of their hearts; their conversation becoming filthy and worldly. Many that once enjoyed their Lord and believed His personal, literal coming to be near, are now smiting their fellow servants, and eat and drink with the drunken. O Brn., this is too true; come, let us arouse ourselves, and shake off the entanglements of this life, that we may be found of the King of kings, without spot and blameless.

Praise the Lord, we have the promise that "unto them that look for him, he will appear the second time without sin unto salvation." S. F. L.

Danbury, April 22, 1856.

WHAT IS TO BE THE FATE OF ITALY?—It seems to be pretty well understood that the Italian question will occupy the attention of the Conferences now in session at Paris, the discussion in regard to the power of the Congress to entertain this and other subjects relating to European affairs generally, having resulted in a determination to take them into consideration.

The evils under which Italy has so long suffered, resulting from foreign domination, ecclesiastical misrule, and the tyranny of some of its own sovereigns, have secured for that unfortunate land the commiseration and sympathy of the friends of human freedom everywhere. Now that peace has been declared, the hopes of the friends of Italy are in some measure revived; for with the general arrangement of the affairs of the European Continent which will result from the peace negotiations, it is impossible that the affairs of Italy should be overlooked. Austria of course does not wish to have the Italian question brought forward, and its introduction in the Conferences was strenuously resisted by Count Buol, the Austrian plenipotentiary. But Louis Napoleon, it is said, will see this question mooted without displeasure, and the British Government have long entertained the opinion that the independence of Italy is necessary in order to secure the peace of Europe. Russia, by consenting that the affairs of Italy should be discussed in the Conferences, and by the friendly feeling she has of late manifested towards Sardinia, has evinced a disposition to interpose no obstacles to the settlement of this question.

It has indeed become evident that the tranquility and security of Europe demand a rearrangement of the Italian Peninsula, by emancipating the Italian States from foreign rule, by destroying the temporal power of the Pope, and by establishing Italian unity and rationality. England and France have an interest in aiding to bring about such a state of things. England as a Protestant nation, cannot regard with indifference the efforts of the ultramontane party of the Romish Church to bring all Italy under their dominion, an effort in which that party is sustained by Austria, who has bound herself by the recent Concordat to maintain the most outrageous ecclesiastical pretensions and demands. A desire to be relieved from the necessity now devolving upon her for frequent interference in order to sustain the unnatural order of things now prevailing, also induces England to support the Italian movement. France has no inducement to continue her occupation of the Roman territory.

There are three parties of Italians, who seek the liberation of Italy. First, there is the moderate or constitutional party, of which Count Cavour himself is one of the leaders. They wish to unite Italy in one kingdom, under a constitutional government similar to that of England.

The second party, represented by Manin, the Governor of Venice, is the Federal party. They wish to see Italy consist of several distinct republics, each with its separate capital, but bound together in a confederation, like that of the United States of America.

The third party is that of the Republicans, with Mazzinni for their leader. This party wish to make Italy an undivided Republic, with Rome for its capital.

These parties, though entertaining different political views, are all striving to accomplish the one grand object of the Independence and Unity of Italy.

Their first desire is to rescue their country from the Austrian yoke.

The next step towards Italian freedom is the dethronement of the Pope. Priestcraft, so long the curse of Italy, has proved fatal to the national progress and development. There can be no freedom of thought, speech or action in the dominions of the Pope. His government has long been detested by the Roman people, for nowhere is the Pope himself more despised than in Rome. Once they compelled him to flee from the City, and he would still be a fugitive if he were not protected by foreign bayonets. The people of the Roman States, repressed by Austrian and French power, are now compelled to submit to the government of Pius Ninth; but the deplorable condition of the papal territories cannot long continue. It is to this matter that the attention of the Paris Conference has been particularly called, and they cannot well avoid some action concerning it.

What the Conferences may do for Italy remains to be seen. They will be compelled to insist that Rome shall be no longer occupied by French troops. The reconstruction of the Roman Government, and the abolition of the temporal power of the Pope will, as we have remarked, most probably receive their attention, and some decisive action will be taken upon this matter.—Ev. Traveller

FACTS WORTH NOTING.—The whole number of languages spoken in the world amounts to 2,523—viz: 587 in Europe, 396 in Asia, 276 in Africa, and 1,264 in America. The inhabitants of the globe profess more than 1000 different religions. The number of men is about equal to the number of women. The average of human life is about 33 years. One-fourth die previous to the age of seven years, one-half before reaching 17. Of every 1000 persons one reaches 100 years of life; of every 100 only six reach the age of 65, and not more than one in 500 lives to 80 years of age. There are on the earth 1,000,000,000 inhabitants. Of these 333,333,333 die every year, 91,824 every hour, and 60 every minute, or one every second. These losses are about balanced by an equal number of births. The married are longer lived than the single; and above all, those who observe a sober, industrious conduct. Women have more chances of life in their favor previous to being 50 years of age than men, but fewer afterward. The number of marriages is in the proportion of 75 to every 1000 individuals. Those born in Spring are generally more robust than others. Births and deaths are more frequent by night than by day.

MATTERS IN JERUSALEM.—Letters from Jerusalem give great credit to the new Pasha of that province, who is said to be carrying out with energy the liberal views of the Porte towards Christians of all creeds and denominations. With his suite, he attended service in the English Church on Epiphany Sunday, and visited the English hospital and the English school, leaving handsome donations for each.

The Turkish Governor of the district of Nablous having become obnoxious to the inhabitants, the Pasha at once deposed him, and has installed a native Syrian in his stead.

The Greeks are cultivating land to a great extent in and about Jerusalem, planting olive and mulberry trees, and building silk-mills.

Almost all travellers now succeed in visiting the Great Mosque of Omar, the site of the Temple, though they have to make large presents for the privilege. The Jews, however, are still unwilling to enter the Temple, from fear of defiling it, because they believe that the Ark of the Covenant, containing the two Tables of Stone, was buried on that spot by Jeremiah when Judah was carried away captive to Babylon.

THE BIBLE IN SPAIN.—A private from Madrid, of the 15th mentions the following facts:

"We are rather in a curious state here about the Bible—a subject in which the people of England take a deep interest. There have been lately some attempts at Protestant doctrine in Barcelona, which have aroused the Catholic spirit of the people, stronger at this moment than it has been since the war of independence—a fact the explanation of which I am unable to give, and which I leave to more philosophical or metaphysical inquirers. The government partake—whether out of conviction or fear—in this revival, and are determined to oppose vehemently all attempts of English Bible or proselyting societies to introduce the wedge, by which through hammering hereafter 'orthodox Spain' is to be transfered into a 'heretic community.'"

FOREIGN ITEM.—The old story of a union between the Greek and Roman Catholic Churches is revived. An ecclesiastic has published a work on the subject at the expense of the Pope, and, with the patronage of his Holiness, has left Rome on a mission to the authorities elsewhere. He declares the union to be the easiest thing in the world.

RUSSIAN IMPERIAL MANIFESTO.—In the imperial manifesto published at St. Petersburg on the 1st of April to announce the signing of the treaty of peace, the Czar says, "The future condition and the privileges of all the Christians in the East are henceforth guaranteed. The Sultan solemnly recognizes them, and, consequent upon this act of justice, the Ottoman empire enters into the family of European States."

FOREIGN NEWS.

Four Days Later from Europe.

Arrival of Steamship Arabia.

HALIFAX, April 23. The Royal Mail Steamship Arabia, Capt. Stone, from Liverpool, about 1 P. M., Saturday, 12th inst., arrived at this port at 7 A. M. this day.

THE CONFERENCES.—The Paris correspondent of the Post says the telegraph is constantly employed on the Italian question, between Rome, Naples, Vienna, and Paris, Count Cavour's propositions having been referred to those Courts, and, on the answers being received, France and England will take decision.

The Plenipotentiaries continue to engage in festivities. Ali Pasha was to give a grand ball in Christian style. The banquet by the Emperor to all the Plenipotentiaries is appointed for the 12th.

Paris authorities state a journal of the proceedings in Congress is to be published.

The commission of Russian and Austrian officers to rectify the Moldavian frontier are now in Paris, awaiting orders.

It is said the Russian Plenipotentiaries proposed that Count Buol, Ali Pacha and M. Bourqueney should comprise the commission to definitely arrange the Moldavo-Wallachian government, but the proposal was rejected, and persons who have not taken active part in the conferences will be selected.

GREAT BRITAIN.—A British order in council raises the blockade of all Russian ports, and permits the free resumption of commerce in all articles.

The grand naval review by the Queen of all ships that can be collected is postponed till the 22d or 23d, by which time the expected treaty of peace will be signed.

The Crimean Inquiry Commission continues—Lord Lucan is on trial.

Steamers are being fitted out to bring home the army from the Crimea.

Attention is active respecting more rapid communication with Australia.

FRANCE.—The expeditions against Madagascar and the Kabylies are decided. Permission will be sought to send troops through Egypt to the former, and the latter will serve as a cause for the Emperor's visit to Algeria, although he will not himself command the army.

There is some speculation as to who shall be Minister to St. Petersburg. Marshal Villant is spoken of for France—also Canrobert and Bosquet. Gen. Marmora is spoken of for Sardinia.

The Moniteur contains the following:—"In consequence of unfavorable accounts from Paraguay, relative to the treatment of emigrants, the French government has suspended granting passports thereto, and colonists are recommended to wait until the situation of foreigners there shall be placed under better regulations."

The energies of the Russian government are said to be now devoted to three objects, viz:—Firstly—Alliance with France; Secondly—Completion of great railways; Thirdly—The manufacture of Russian feeling on the Continent, especially in Germany.

The Russian Palace, at present a French hospital, is being cleared for the return of the Embassy.

The London Morning Post of the 8th inst., says that by the terms of the treaty of peace "the number of vessels which Russia may keep in the waters of Turkey, must not exceed 10, Turkey may keep up a considerable fleet in the Sea of Marmora, in the harbor of Constantinople, and in the Mediterranean. The presence of English consuls in the ports of Russia is guaranteed."

The London Morning Times of the 8th inst. announces that a memorandum presented by the Count de Cavour to the Congress of Paris, claims in the Roman Government the political separation of the lay and spiritual powers, the intervention of the Allies at Naples, the recognition of the national unity of Italy, the removal of foreign troops, the customs union between Piedmont and Lombardy, and lastly material amelioration, more liberal institutions in Austrian Italy, as well as more indulgence to facilitate relations with Piedmont. The chief importance is given to the deplorable condition of the Papal territory.

The London Spectator says:—"The people of Piedmont have been led by their own representatives to expect that valuable recognitions, if not concessions would be obtained from the Conference—something more than admission to privileges in the Black Sea. But it is said that the state of Italy has been formally laid before the Conference by Sardinia, on the invitation of the Western Powers. The constant struggle which certain governments maintain against popular parties in Italy is said to be the subject of these representations.

But in those struggles the governments of Central and Southern Italy are even now abetted by Austria; the Austrian Government backs that of Parma, or rather acts as the substitute for the Government of Parma, in a chronic battle with the popular party of that state. An outbreak at Padua, headed by students, exhibits the popular party of Italy as acting against Austria upon her own territory, with herself as the direct antagonist in the same perpetual warfare.

Arrival of the Argo.

NEW YORK, April 23.—The steamer Argo has arrived with intelligence from England to the 9th inst.

The treaty of Peace being signed, all measures of blockade were to be raised, and the merchant vessels of the Western Powers permitted to enter Russian ports, and all Russian vessels detained in neutral parts, liberated.

A difficulty was said to have existed in the Peace Conferences, owing to the refusal of Austria to vacate the Danubian Principalities. Later intelligence, if correct, states that the Austrian Army had commenced taking their departure.

A despatch from Paris states that the Allies have sent orders to raise all blockades which kept Russian vessels in neutral ports.

The French government denies contemplating an expedition against Madagascar, but advices from Toulon show the contrary.

The Russian Minister of Finance issued a notice April 5th, that in consequence of the Treaty being signed, the merchant vessels of Western Powers would be admitted to Russian ports.

The French army is to be reduced from 600,000 to 400,000 troops.

It is believed Russia will send an Ambassador to Turin as soon as ratifications are exchanged.

Advices from St. Petersburg state that the law prohibiting the export of Russian produce had been repealed.

The Czar has issued an uskase, stating that the two fleets hitherto maintained by Russia in the Black Sea and Sea of Azoff, are not to be reinstated.

Le Nord states that the exchange of ratifications would be effected on the 20th.

CONDITIONS OF THE TREATY.—The Opinione, of Turin, gives, upon what it declares to be good authority, the conditions contained in the treaty of peace. They are affirmed to be as follows:

1. Neutralization of the Black Sea. Russia not to keep more than ten ships of war armed for the defence of the coasts.
2. Nicolaieff reduced to a merchant port, with engagement that no ship of war shall be constructed beyond the number agreed to as above.
3. Russia to allow consuls from all the powers in the ports of the Black Sea and the Baltic.
4. Bomarsund not to be reconstructed.
5. Russia cedes a part of the territory of Bessarabia, comprising the fortress of Ismail.
6. Russia renounces the exclusive protectorate of the Danubian principalities.
7. She equally renounces the prectectorate of the Greeks of the Ottoman empire.
8. The free navigation of the Danube is guaranteed to all States without exception.

The 9th article refers to the commission to be sent into the principalities to study the questions of the frontiers and the mode of government.

The Opinione denies that any stipulation has been made in favor of Sardinia, and that the Italian question will be discussed at large by the plenipotentiaries in their supplementary sitting. Russia will, it is said, send an embassador to Paris after the ratification of the treaty.

An article in the Debats, which undertakes to unveil the proceedings of the Conference, further states, that "The Russian plenipotentiaries, it is said, did not defend either the military arsenal of Nicolaieff or their naval establishments in the Black Sea, in the Sea of Azoff, or upon the shores of the Sea of Azoff. The treaty of peace proclaims in the widest and most absolute sense the principle of the neutralization of these two seas. Sebastopol will not be rebuilt. The Russian ports and cities will be accessible to all governments, who will be free to exercise an active surveillance by means of consular agents. All the Russian forts which have been constructed upon the eastern coast of the Black Sea, along the Caucasus, until the extremity of the Russian territory, not far from Batoum, will be destroyed, and cannot be replaced."

It is also affirmed that the Turkish plenipotentiaries demanded of Russia an indemnity for the expenses of the war, and for damages sustained through repeated invasions of the Principalities by Russia. This demand the Russian plenipotentiaries rejected.

THE HOLY PLACES.—The Univers publishes the following letter from Jerusalem of the 17th of March:—

"The Holy Places are now crowded with pilgrims from all parts of the world. The religious ceremonies of the Passion Week have passed over without the usual scandalous conflicts between the Latins and the Greeks owing to the circumspect conduct of the latter.

"The Duke and Duchess of Brabant have presented several charitable institutions of the country with pecuniary gifts, and have sent a handsome snuff box to the Chancellor of the Patriarch, as well as other presents to those who were attentive to them during their late visit here. After the ceremony of the solemn greater portion of the Catholic pilgrims were present at the consecration of the Marquis de la Marche, as knight of the Holy Sepulchre.

"Of the ancient orders of knighthood, this entry celebrated on the 13th of March, the is perhaps the only one that has preserved a strictly religious character. All eyes were fixed on the sword which is supposed to have belonged to the liberator of the Holy Sepulchre, and with which the Patriarch girds the receiver, after having given him a blow on each shoulder. Amongst the members of this order are two French prelates, Cardinal de Bonald and the Bishop of Arras. On Sunday, the 16th of March, took place the benediction of the palm branches, celebrated by the Patriarch of Jerusalem on the stone which covers the Divine Sepulchre.

"Mgr. Valerga distributed with his own hand palm branches which he had blessed to the regular and secular clergy, and to all the European pilgrims. The procession of palms has lost much, however, of its pristine splendor. On the afternoon of that day the German pilgrims went to Bethlehem and the French to Bethany, where they followed the traces of our Savior from the sepulchre of Lazarus to the outside of the golden gate. There are at this moment in Jerusalem about 900 schismatic Armenian pilgrims, and the same number of Greeks. The Easter of these dissenters falls this year a month after that of the Latins."

MISCELLANEOUS.—The Empress Eugenie is entertained every day in her chamber by a concert of the choicest description.

There are said to be 122,000 French soldiers in the Crimea, and upwards of 20,000 at Constantinople.

A fresh shock of earthquake has been felt at Broussa.

Letters from Switzerland state that the weather is extraordinarily fine. The mountains are entirely free from snow, and the passages of the Alps, which last year were difficult even as late as July, are already practicable.

The Emperor Napoleon has purchased an extensive piece of ground between St. Cloud and Mont Valerin, for the purpose of erecting a model farm.

Four Russian merchant vessels, which had been for the last two years in the port of Antwerp, whence they did not venture out lest they should be captured, on the 7th hoisted their flag, and are preparing to put to sea.

From a return to Parliament, it appears that last year there were 3,840,691 gallons of British spirits exported—while in the previous year there were only 680,564 gallons.

Several meteors in the shape of fiery globes, were remarked on the night of the 22d ult., in various parts of Piedmont, especially at Ivrea and Pont St. Martin.

APPOINTMENTS.

THE SCRIPTURE DOCTRINE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.
BY H. H. DOBNEY,
Baptist Minister, of England.
Fourth Edition.
WITH AN APPENDIX ON
THE STATE OF THE DEAD,
BY JOHN MILTON,
Author of "Paradise Lost."

1 VOL. 12 MO., 310 PAGES. PRICE 75 CENTS.

This is one of the most important works ever issued upon this solemn subject. Clear, forcible, and sometimes eloquent in his language, the author surveys the whole field, and presents his arguments and examines objections with the facility of "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The style is calm and Christian, a rare excellence in a controversial work. The Universalist, the skeptic, and the infidel, will find here that while the truths they hold are admitted in all their force, yet the reasonableness of revelation and the retribution therein revealed cannot be denied. And the believer in the doctrine of the Eternal agony of the multitudes of the Lost, will find that objections to that opinion exist in the word of God, no less serious than those which arise from the calm consideration of the subject in the light of human reason.

Let all obtain and read this work with care, and we shall await with confidence the verdict of the candid and unprejudiced.

The volume is an elegant 12mo., and contains besides the views of the poet Milton, who, with Luther, Tindale, Bishop Law and Archbishop Whately, defends the doctrine of unconsciousness in death.

It will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the price, 75 cents.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough, and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may perhaps subserve the cause of humanity to publish his advertisement to the public.

Tune—"O Mother, you will miss me here."

"O death when wilt thou cease?—Dryden.

I miss thee, when the evening hour,
Returns for praise and prayer;
The sweet response I used to love,
I often list to hear;
But ah, those lips that breathed of love,
Death's chilling touch has sealed;
No more in Jesus' praise they'll move,
'Till Earth's dread curse 's repealed.

I miss thee, when we gather round
Our silent morning meal;
A vacant place is ever found,
No stranger heart can fill;
O yes, I miss thee everywhere,
While I am toiling here;
The gentle step, the empty chair,
The word of hopeful cheer.

And when I see my birdlings dear,
All gathered by my side,
Unbidden starts the gushing tear,
I can no longer hide;
O, then I miss thy precious skill,
To guide their floating bark;
But God will hear the orphan's wail,
My little tender flock.

But when the ransomed swell the song,
Of triumph on that shore,
I'll meet again my cherished one,
Where Death can part no more;
There I shall see thy suffering brow,
A golden crown adorn;
And where adoring seraph's bow,
Thoul't mingle in the throng.

The New Jerusalem.—Rev. 21.

[Br. Merriam:—The following lines, taken from the Missionary Magazine, filled my heart with so much joy, that I thought—if you were willing—I would like to have them published in the Crisis.—E. Barrett.]

"Beautiful Zion, built above,
Beautiful city that I love,
Beautiful gates of pearls so rare,
It needeth no temple—God is there.

"Beautiful trees forever there,
Beautiful fruits they always bear,
Beautiful rivers gliding by,
Beautiful fountains never dry.

"Beautiful Heaven, where all is light,
Beautiful angels, clothed in white,
Beautiful songs that never tire,
Beautiful harps through all the choir.

"Beautiful crowns on every brow,
Beautiful palms the conqueror's show
Beautiful robes the ransomed wear,
Beautiful all who enter there.

"Beautiful throne for Christ the Lamb,
Beautiful seats at his right hand,
Beautiful rest—all wand'rings cease—
Beautiful home of perfect peace."

The Old and New Creation.

By B. P. Hildreth.

No. 1.

In the Book of inspiration we find many great and unparallelled mysteries, which are beyond the ken of mortals, into which we would not presume to intrude; but as Jesus has said, "unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God, but to them that are without, all these things are done in parables," Mar. 4:11. We feel at liberty to search into all that He has revealed; for He said: "I will open my mouth in parables; I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundations of the world," Matt. 13: 35. "Great is the mystery of godliness." Paul's labors were directed "to make all see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ," Eph. 3: 9. It is a mystery to us, that the eyes of some were closed, lest they should see, hear, and be converted and healed; but it is so recorded, and we are bound to believe it; and as we know that there is also a "mystery of iniquity," we must suppose that it has some connexion with those whose eyes are closed, that they might not see and be converted; and we learn many things from the records of "the fall," which we cannot learn elsewhere; and to vindicate the justice and goodness of Jehovah, is the indubitable privilege of all whom He has chosen to salvation; which is the sole design of this communication. While I am writing I feel my own weakness; and desire that the grace of God may so direct my mind, and pen, as to bring some revenue of glory to His wondrous name.

When we compare Scripture with Scripture, it oftentimes explains itself; and by making the New Testament a key to the Old, we may obtain light. It is from the former that we learn who the serpent is, that beguiled Eve; and likewise his whole character; that it is the devil and satan who "sinned from the beginning," of whom the Holy One said, "I beheld satan fall, as lightning from heaven." With these preliminaries, we shall begin with the Creation.

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." "He spake, and it was done, He commanded and it stood fast," and "the word" by which he created all things "was (afterward) made flesh," born of a woman. All the beauties of creation were produced in six days. "And God created man, in His own image; in the image of God created He him; male and female created He them. And God saw everything that He had made, and behold it was very good." "And the morning and the evening were the sixth day," Gen. 1: "And He rested on the seventh day, from all the work which He had made." In view of the beauties and glories of creation, well might the angels sing, "Thou art worthy O Lord, to receive glory, and honor, and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created," Rev. 4: 11. The whole earth must have been extremely beautiful, being covered with grass, and herbage; plants and trees, yielding fruit; the beasts after their kind, and cattle, and creeping things, and fowls of the air, might be supposed to have confirmed the happiness of the first parents of our race. But as if these were insufficient for that purpose, "the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there He put the man, whom He had formed," "And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life, also, in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil. And a river went out of Eden to water the garden." * * * "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree in the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Such was the whole law of God, consisting of but one prohibition, but comprising all the moral law of God; and surrounded as they were by every thing below that could make life desirable, the power of God also, and the songs of victory in heaven; when "the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy;" one would suppose they never would have thought of any restraint; only to obey, with their whole hearts their benificent Creator. They might have sung, "The flowers appear on the earth, and the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land. The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Our plants are an orchard of pomegranates, with pleasant fruits. Our odors are spikenard, frankincense and myrrh, with all the chief spi--- We can walk in our garden, among thn beds of spices, and gather [illegible] rose and the amaranth, were not strangers there." They were surrounded with the righteousness of their Maker; and though "naked," they had no cause for "shame." Adorned with spotless robes of innocence, not a blush of confusion to mantle the cheek: nor a trembling nerve to agitate the frame; all was peace, and joy and glory; anxiety and solitude had found no place in their hearts. There was beauty to delight the eye, music to charm the ear, fruit of all kinds to regale the taste, and fragrant aromatics to satisfy the smell; as well as every pleasing feeling, both of body and mind, that could make life delectable. They knew no enemy, no pain, nor sorrows; and I see not how they could have enjoyed more in the flesh; for distress, anguish, death or curse, had not as yet, entered there. Every fish, bird and beast, were alike subject to them, to attend on, and obey their call. "And God blessed them, and said unto them, be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."

Thus Adam was appointed Patriarch-king of the newly created world; and what could his Maker have done more for "His vineyard," that He had not done in it? and may He not look for better fruit than "wild grapes?" Hear what His prophet announces: "Thus saith the Lord, that created the heavens: God Himself hath formed the earth and made it; He hath established it; He created it not in vain: He formed it to be inhabited; I am the Lord, and none else," Isa. 45: 18. This is the original decree of Jehovah, respecting the earth; that it should be inhabited; by the multiplication of the human species; to descend from Adam and Eve, till it came up to the number which the size of the earth required. And from His own work being performed and completed "in six days," we learn that it was to continue "six thousand years;" when, mankind, if obedient, would be advanced to the position of angels; being the "children of God," Luke 20: 36. And can this plan of Jehovah be frustrated? We think not. The earth will be filled with a holy race, made immortal in glory; and the tabernacle of God be placed among them; (as the "tabernacle of witness" was among the children of Israel,) according to the original decree.

Thus "God made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions," Eccl. 7: 29. Satan, the great adversary of God, moved with malice, laid a snare to entrap unguarded man; (for God gave him the freedom of choice;) and most artfully was it effected, by lying and deception. He chose the serpent as the most subtle instrument, by which he could accomplish the ruin of our race; who makes his appearance in the hypocritical garb of heaven, with angel wings, ("for satan is transformed into an angel of light," 2 Cor. 11: 1) and lights on "the tree of knowledge;" and there begins a parley with Eve, as if he was perfectly astonished; "yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" as much as to say, is the report true, that God has forbidden you to eat of any or of all of the trees of the garden? Eve then answers, "We may eat of the fruit of the garden; but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it lest ye die." As quick as thought, he directly gives God the lie; "ye shall not surely die; for God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof then your eyes shall be opened; and ye shall be as gods knowing good and evil."

It is probable that Eve thought, by his heavenly appearance and power of speech, that he must be a messenger from heaven; and if so, she would eat; for "when she saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eye, and a tree to be desired to make one wise; she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat; and gave also unto her husband with her, and he did eat." But she believed a lie, and it cost her her life. By disobeying her Maker, she manifested the most detestable ingratitude, and disregard for Him to whom she was under every possible obligation to yield implicit confidence; and to love with her whole heart. The inspired Apostle informs us that "Adam was not deceived; but the woman being deceived was in the transgression;" which seems to be equivalent to saying, had she not been deceived, she would not have been in the transgression. Well, to be deceived shows an untruthful state of mind; and if Eve was guilty for being deceived, what shall we think of Adam, who was not dteeived; but could stand a voluntary and silent spectator to the dialogue between his own wife, and the serpent, (for he was with her) and not interfere at all; though he must have known that death would be the inevitable consequence. But she holds a parley with the serpent, and he deceives and seduces her to disobey the great Jehovah, by partaking of the forbidden fruit, and dying, "thou shalt die," was the irrevocable sentence. Truly did the Messiah say, "he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him; when he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar and the father of it." Eve takes the fatal fruit, and behold she is naked; her white robe of innocence is lost! forfeited forever! not only to herself, but to all her posterity. Satan had represented to her his perfect amazement of the prohibition that God had laid upon them; to "not eat of every tree in the garden; as though it was very unkind and ungenerous in Him; Eve lent her ear to his, caught his hellish flame, seized and devoured the interdicted fruit; and the trap sprung and she was caught.

But most remarkable is it, that Adam, (perfectly familiar with all that had passed,) should turn, and fatally peril his own soul, by deliberately, and voluntarily, throwing himself into the same net. So completely infatuated was he when he saw his "weaker" companion lost, that he instantly framed the desparate resolution to take the fatal leap, and perish with her. "And the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked." They were morally stripped of that inherent righteousness in which they received their existence; and now they could bitterly cry, "woe unto us, for we are spoiled! Our vestments of glory are gone, and what have we left but fig-leaves? Our purity both inward and outward has fled; and degeneracy, fear and shame, are substituted in its place." Truly writes the poet,

"Down from the top of earthly bliss,
Rebellious man was hurled."

Prayer.

By Roxanna Collins.

Private prayer is a Scriptual means of obtaining a clearer knowledge of the revealed will of God.

It has been compared to a golden key unlocking the mysteries of the divine word. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and ubraideth not," James 1: 5. The knowledge of many choice and blessed truths is but the returns of private prayer. We have a remarkable instance of this in the history of Cornelius. "I was fasting this hour, and at the ninth hour, I prayed in my house; and behold a man stood before me in bright clothing, and said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God," Acts. 10: 30, 31. His prayer was not only heard and accepted, but graciously answered in the knowledge he obtained of salvation by Jesus Christ. Another instance may be adduced from the book of Daniel. He was a man who studied the Sacred Scriptures, and in answer to prayer, obtained a clearer knowledge of their contents, 1 Daniel 20: 21–23, "And while I was speaking and praying, and confessing my sin and the sin of my people Israel, and presenting my supplication before the Lord my God for the holy mountain of my God; Yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications, the commandment came forth, and I am come to shew thee for thou art greatly beloved; therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision."

To understand the matter, and have clearer views of the revealed will of God, was a great blessing, but not a greater, than that gracious assurance with which the communication of that knowledge was accompanied, namely, that he was in the favor of God, a man greatly beloved. Happy is he, who in sincerity seeks instruction at the fountain head of all spiritual wisdom. The Holy Ghost is promised to teach us all things. The promises of God should be pleaded in prayer. He loves to be sued upon his own bond, and delights to lade the wings of secret prayer with his sweetest, choicest richest blessings.

Hence the word of Christ dwells most richly in them who are most diligent and fervent in pouring out their hearts to Him in secret.

"Night is the time to pray;
Our Savior oft withdrew
To desert mountains far away,
So will his followers do."

Letter from Bro. W. Welch

Van Buren, Jan. 20, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—As a servant and obedient child of the most high God, I wish to cast in my mite for the support of the cause. Although poor in this world's goods, I care not, if I may be honored of God and his dear Son. And as I am denied the blessed privilege of hearing Zion's watchmen proclaim from the oracles of God, for my encouragement, the Crisis is a welcome messenger to me. Ah! yes, dear Bro., it is like oil and wine in a desert land. As I read from week to week from the columns of the Crisis, I feel my strength and my hope confirmed.

Still let us count the long suffering of God salvation, and hold ourselves in readiness, still striving to send out that hallowed influence that some poor alien from God may be convicted of the error of his way and return to his Father's house, and be made partaker with all the saints of that bread that never will perish.

If any of the preaching Brn. come this way, I hope they will call and give us meat in due season; and as God has blessed us, so they shall be rewarded. I live two miles from Canton station, on the N. E. Central R. R., (12 miles from the city of Syracuse,) and keep the pilgrim's home. The cause is at a low ebb here, therefore help is needed. I hope the Lord will put it in some good brother's heart to give us a call. Now my prayer is that God will sustain and give you grace that you may with honor fill your calling. The love and peace of God be and abide with you till He comes, and then I hope to meet you never to part. O what a glorious hope is the Christian's!

Your Bro. in the bonds of love, looking for that kingdom soon to come,

William Welch.

Sectarianism.

"Were the question, what constitutes a person a disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ? By what marks is his Christianity to be determined? put to the various societies distinguished by the appellation of Christians, what a host of conflicting answers might we expect to receive? Very probably we should find their replies not less varied and contradictory in character, than multitudinous in number—each sect would return a verdict different from, if not directly opposed to, every other sect. Yet, notwithstanding this distressingly conflicting variety in their decision, it would, at the same time, present a oneness or similarity. The testimony of each contending sect would amount to this,—"That man is to be regarded as a Christian who believes what we believe." And it is this similarity in their verdict that renders it so bewildering, for, the confusion is, none of them believe alike.

"Turn we, then, to the Law and to the Testimony," we shall find that the marks of true discipleship consist not in opinion, but in practice; in other words, the Bible teaches us to discern our brethren in Christ, not by their creed but by their CHARACTER. 'By their fruits ye shall know them;' 'ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you;' 'by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.' The justified by faith 'have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.' Those who are in Christ Jesus, 'walk not after the flesh but after the spirit;' i. e., their deportment is characterized by such sentiments as love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, faith, meekness and temperance, see Gal. 5: 22, 23. To sum up all, they have the spirit of Christ. The inspired record assures us, that if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his; consequently, all who have the disposition of Jesus belong to him. The feelings of our divine brother toward God and man have been beautifully manifested during his pilgrimage on earth; and may be described in such terms as the following: Unflinching obedience to his Father's will; unwearied effort for the weal of man. Unsullied piety towards God; unbroken love to the human race. A perfect abhorrence of sin; and the tenderest pity for the sinner. Blessing all men, and with latest breath; amid the most shameful, painful, and unmerited sufferings, pleading pardon for his merciless murderers. To sum up all, he had perfect love to God and perfect love to man.

"Such is the spirit of Christ, and by the manifestation of the same feelings are his disciples to be distinguished. Not that every follower of the Lamb possesses these dispositions in the same degree as Jesus, but they have their qualities of mind to such an extent, as to be distinguished by them. The germ of true godliness has taken root in their minds, and their highest ambition is to arrive at the 'measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.'

"It is a notorious fact, that a man may believe any of the creeds of the sects, and still remain destitute of the Spirit of Christ; it is also true that a man may believe or disbelieve any of these creeds, and yet possess like dispositions with the Savior. It therefore follows that we should regard, as our brethren in Christ, all who have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; whose main desire is to glorify God, to learn and obey his will, so far as as they understand it. We should test them, not by the resemblance of their opinions, but by the likeness of ther conduct to Christ's.

"The folly of testing men's piety by their peculiar beliefs must appear evident, when we reflect that God alone is the proper judge of men's thoughts and opinions. He alone is infallible. The best of men have had imperfect views of divine truth, and are daily changing their opinions; and, until we arrive at infallibility, we have no right to exclude a man from our fellowship, simply because he sees some Bible doctrine in a different light than we do.

"Yet this presumptive intolerant system of trying men's Christianity by their creed, reigns rampant throughout the whole Christian world. Wherever we turn our eyes, we see it manifesting itself in the form of petty bickerings and fierce disputes, excommunicatings, splits and an increase of sects; and the worst feature as it is, that no sooner is a new sect formed, than, notwithstanding all their complaints against the tyranny and uncharitableness manifested in their expulsion, no sooner are they constituted a Church, than they begin to exercise authority over the minds of any of their number who have learned a little faster, or it may be, a little slower than themselves; and then we have another excommunicating, or another split, and so the separation goes on till total ruin sets the splitters at rest.

"Difference of opinion among Christians, regarding spiritual truth, during the present state of things, appears to us inevitable. Where freedom of thought is exercised, and a variety of mind exists, the more active and vigorous intellect must make greater progress in the discernment of truth, than one of an opposite character; while both alike may be anxious to learn and obey the will of God. Love, guided by reason, will lead us to judge that, while many pious individuals do not think on many points as we do, this is not because they love God less, or are less willing to to do His will, but simply because their convictions are different from ours. In the spirit of love and fidelity, we should try to persuade them to the adoption of what we think right. Should we fail in this, being convinced of their attachment to Christ, still let us esteem them as brethren, cheerfully walking together so far as we are agreed.

"Acting under this idea Paul enjoined the brethren at Corinth to 'receive him who was weak in the faith; and not subject him to doubtful disputations,' but to 'follow after peace, and things by which they might edify one another." 'Twas with the same feelings that the Great Teacher bore with the ignorance and stupidity of those disciples more immediately under his care and instruction; and to whom he primarily addressed his new commandments—a command equally binding on us, and his followers in all ages—'Love one another, as I have loved you.'—Bible Examiner.

The Days of thy Mourning shall be Ended.

The days of thy mourning shall be ended. Then there is an end somewhere. Sorrow may continue long, but it shall not be forever. It may extend wide, yet it shal cease at last. It may crush and scatter and destroy, it may waste and wither and make desolate, it may cast the blight o destruction upon our earthly hopes, and lay the mould of death upon our dearest joys, but it "shall be ended," by-and-by.

The long ages of captivity and down-treading shall terminate, the protracted, cruel and unsparing reign of the King of terrors, the chiliads of blight and curse and desolation, shall find their conclusion soon. Aye, soon; for there is appendedno mighty stretch of weary ages to earth's week of wo and bitter toil. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. And the morning is at hand. No ages of dubious twilight or still more dubious torch-light shall defer its coming. It is at hand. The time for measuring this world's future by centuries or generations is past. The night speedeth along—the day-star is up and shining, and heralding the coming sun, and by-and-by the darkness and gloominess of this terriestral state shall be chased away by the flooding splendor of the uprisen Sun of Righteousness. It is near; it hasteth greatly; and unto it the mourning Church are also 'hastening,' by their earnest prayers and strong desires.

"Then shall the days of mourning be ended. The Lord shall be the eternal light; the cry of violence and of wasting shall be forever hushed, and the murmuring songs of peace shall rise and blend and swell till all in heaven and earth prolong a chorus mighty as the voice of many waters, and brilliant as the angel-anthems that ring and echo along the arches of the city of God.

"Reader shall you be there? Shall I be there? Shall our mourning be ended there? or shall the end of the Christian's sorrow be the commencement of ours? Shall the day that shall dawn in brightness upon the weary Church, be to us the long dark night that hath no morn beyond it, and no star."—Cross and Crown.

"What is in a substance cannot be separate from it. And is not all matter a compound of qualities? Hardness, extension, form, color, motion, rest—take away all these, and where is matter? To conceive of mind independent of matter, is as if we should conceive of color independent of a substance colored. What is form, if not a body of particular shape? What is thought, if not something which thinks? Destroy the substance, and you destroy its properties; and so equally—destroy the properties, and you destroy the substance. To suppose the possibility of retaining the one without the other, is an evident absurdity."—An old Writer, B. C., 307.

Nothing should excite murmurs.—Murmur at nothing; if our ills are reparable, it is ungrateful; if remediless it is vain. A Christian builds his fortitude on a better foundation than Stoicism; he is pleased with every thing that happens, because he knows it could not happen unless it had first pleased God, and that which pleases him must be the best. He is assured that no new thing can befall him, and that he is in the hands of a Father who will prove him with no affliction that resignation cannot conquer.—Lacon.

"Oceans of ink, reams of paper, and disputes infinite, might have been spared, if wranglers had avoided lighting the torch of strife at the wrong end; since a tenth part of the pains experienced in attempting to prove the why, the where, and the when, certain events have happened, would have been more than sufficient to prove that they never happened at all."—Lacon.

"If Satan ever laughs, it must be at hypocrites; they are the greatest dupes he has; they serve him better than any others, and receive no wages; nay, what is still more extraordinary, they submit to greater mortifications to go to hell, than the sincerest Christian to go to heaven."

"It is much easier to ruin a man of principle than a man of none, for he may be ruined through his scruples. Knavery is supple, and can bend; but honesty is firm and upright, and yields not."

"Envy, if surrounded on all sides by the brightness of another's prosperity, like the scorpion, confined within a circle of fire, will sting itself to death."

"Men will wrangle for religion; write for it; die for it; anything but—live for it."

"Let those who would affect singularity with success, first determine to be very singular."

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding.

The Old and New Creation.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

No. 2.

O how changed is man; from a celestial personage, luminous with glory, to a filthy stalk of mortality and corruption! And no wonder they hide themselves "among the green trees of the garden," from the presence of Him whom they have so greatly affronted. But the Judge arraigns them by calling, "Adam, where art thou?" His confusion is seen by his answer: "I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid, because I was naked, and I hid myself. And He said, who told thee that thou wert naked; hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat? And the man said, 'the woman thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat.' And the Lord said unto the woman, what is this that thou hast done? And the woman said, "the serpent beguiled me, and I did eat." Here is confession; but without so much as the shadow of repentance. Adam not only criminates his wife, but seems to cast blame on His Maker for giving him a woman. Eve throws the blame on the serpent. "And the Lord God said unto the serpent, because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle; and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. And I will put enmity between thee and the woman; and between thy seed, and her seed; It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." The sentence on the serpent, has been constantly fulfilling, from the day it was pronounced, to the present; and the last part of it will not be annulled, even in the regenerated earth;—"dust shall be the serpent's meat," Isa. 65: 25.

"Unto the woman, He said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception; in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." Had Eve successfully resisted her tempter, and maintained her integrity; (though it seems she did not know she had an enemy, but she knew that it would be an act of the basest ingratitude and dishonor; which no devil or satan could extenuate;) she probably would not have been subjected to sorrow, or inconvenience, in the production of her species; nor ever given birth to any but holy ones; which, during the six thousand years of propagation, would have peopled the world with the full complement of holy beings, as appears to have been the first design of the Creator; and perhaps she might never have had another assault from her adversary. But alas, it was not so. Eve suffered herself to be misled from her Maker; she listened to the lies and deceptions of a false one; and by the multiplication of her "conceptions," as well as "sorrows," she is doomed to bring forth "the children of the wicked one:" of which her first born son was a perfect type;—a murderer and liar; the genuine seed of his father, "the devil," John 3: 12. According to Josephus, Adam had thirty-three sons, and twenty-three daughters; of course, all by one woman; which probably was tenfold more than if she had never sinned.

"And unto Adam He said, because thou hast hearkened to the voice of thy wife; and hast eaten of the tree, of which I I commanded thee saying, thou shalt not eat of it; cursed be the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it, all the days of thy life. Thorns also, and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field;" "In the sweat of thy face, shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

O wretched man, thy glory is laid in the dust! Thou hast forfeited thy happiness and thy life; guilt, shame and remorse, are thine attendants; exposed to sickness, pain and woe; thou are doomed to toil for thy bread, till death the grim "king of terrors," shall close the scene of thy life; and the same evils must attend the many many millions of thine unborn race.

God is righteous; He is just; and His mercy is potently displayed in revealing a Savior as "the seed of the woman, who should bruise the head of the serpent;' which, though literally fulfilled daily, will be mystically accomplished when the Messiah's enemies shall be put "under His feet;" for He was sanctified, and sent into the world, "that He might destroy the works of the devil;" the commencement of which, we have just been describing; and whose whole progeny, though born of woman, will fall with him, "into the lake of fire. And the Lord God said, Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. So He drove out the man, and placed at the East of the garden of Eden, cherubims and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." Eden was paradise, in the midst of which, the tree of life was planted; and we learn from Rev. 2: 7, that the same tree, "is in the midst of the paradise of God," prepared for those who "overcome the wicked one by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony." Had Adam tasted the fruit of the tree of life, it could not have disannulled the sentence of natural death; but it might have entailed an existence of suffering, "forever;" from which now he may be exempt. The fruit of the tree of life, seems to involve immortality; and as Adam did not eat of it, we cannot suppose him, or his posterity to be immortal, (indeed, we know God "only hath immortality;" 1 Tim. 6: 16) and if man in his present state, is not immortal, I must think that God took good care that he should not become so, by His flaming guard of the tree of life.

"And thus our two first parents stood,
'Till sin defiled the happy place;
They lost their garden and their God,
And ruined all their unborn race.
So sprang the plague from Adam's bower,
And spread destruction all abroad;
Sin that curs'd name in one short hour,
Spoiled six days labor of a God."

Thus sin entered our world, "and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all men have sinned;" and Adam became a servant of satan, by yielding to his wicked devices; and satan, by usurpation, became "the god of this world, who hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, (who is the image of God) should shine upon them." He is the "king of the bottomless pit;" he is "the prince of the power of the air; whose spirit now worketh in the children of disobedience," Eph. 2: 2. How often have those children of wickedness tempted God, till His wrath arose against them, to the uttermost. Let Lot and Noah tell the tales of woe which they have witnessed, of the downfall of the wicked, and our "ears would tingle."

But God is good. He had given a promise of victory over satan, to the seed of the woman, which is Christ; and all in Him will share His victory. He had sown "good seed," in His own field; but His enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat;" and both must grow together, "until the harvest. The good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one." Would He obtain any fruit from worthless tares? Can we find grapes on thistles, or figs on "on a bramble bush?" Not one, but those who embrace His promises, trust, love, and obey Him, are "the good seed;" and consequently "children of the Kingdom." In the garden of Eden, that wicked one sowed his seed in the mind of poor Eve, and her crime has been the source of every sin that has been committed ever since; and her doom is sealed, that she shall be the mother of all his "cursed children."

But lest despair should crush her, a Savior is promised to descend from her, that "shall bruise his head;" and on this promise the church lived till the call of Abraham, though they had divers premonitions by the institutions of bloody sacrifices, pointing to the same promised "seed" as Abel, who "by faith obtained witness that he was righteous;" and "Enoch (blessed man) walked with God three hundred years" in that age of darkness. A line of patriarchs from Adam to Abraham embraced that promise by faith, who all lived and died in it, without any other revelation or hope of final salvation. Abraham obeyed the call of God, and offered his son, a striking type of "the Lamb of God." An unconditional covenant was made with him, that in his "seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed; which was ratified to Isaac, and confirmed to Jacob. All the land was given him and his righteous seed, "for an everlasting possession," Gen. 13: 14–17. "For the promise that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." Here "the good olive tree" was planted, which embraced all "the children of the kingdom," till Messiah came.

The nominal branches (when they rejected the Son of God) were broken off, and "God did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name," which were engrafted into the good olive tree by faith. The ceremonial law, given at mount Sinai, enjoined offerings and bloody sacrifices, in which could be seen types and shadows of a suffering Savior. We look back and see a "brazen serpent" lifted up on a pole in the wilderness, for a remedy to those who had been bitten by "fiery serpents;" and naturally wonder why the sight of one serpent, should cure the bite of another; but we learn that faith in the promise of God constituted the chief cure. "For as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness; even so, must the Son of Man be lifted up; That whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life."

As the brazen serpent was lifted up, in the form of a fiery serpent; but free from its poison, for relief of those bitten; so, Messiah appeared on the cross in the form of a sinner free from sin, to atone for, and relieve the penitent, lost, oppressed sinner. "And when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth His Son made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that they might receive the adoption of sons," Gal. 4: 4, 5. "For this cause He is the mediator of the new covenant, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressors that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance," Heb. 9: 15. Not "the word of promise," (for that they had received in, and from Abraham;) but the joyful reality, at the second coming of Christ "in the new earth;" for "we shall reign on the earth," Rev. 5: 10. So we see that notwithstanding the many millions of the serpent's race, who are marshalled in battle array against "the children of the kingdom," not one of the true seed will be lost. Nor will the honor or dignity of God, or His law, eventually suffer the least deterioration in consequence of the malice of satan. He will be more conspicuously manifested and glorified, for it will be seen that God required nothing more of Adam, than he was able to perform.

By the exemplary life of His Son, in the days of his flesh, is seen that it was possible for Adam in his purity, abundantly to obey the law of God, especially as it consisted of but one requirement, and even that, a negative one, though the whole moral law was comprised in it. His wisdom shines in creation, His goodness in preservation, His righteousness in redemption,—all shine with a lustre which would not have been discovered had not man fallen.

But of all the attributes of Jehovah's character, love and mercy are presented in the most luminous effulgence; in redeeming, calling, sanctifying, resurrecting and glorifying a world of corrupt, degenerate mortals, who have been born children of wrath even as others; which could never have been experienced, had not Adam fallen. And will not the honor of God and His law be exalted a thousand fold, by the manifestation of the Messiah in His humiliation for a lost world? Millions will sing in louder strains, "salvation to our God, which sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb."

But no one can know that he belongs to the family of heaven, but by the prevailing disposition of his heart, to love and obey God; by producing "the fruits of the spirit;" such as "love, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance."

And by the same rule the wicked may learn their character, (viz.) the prevailing inclinations of their heart, to "the works of the flesh;" such as "adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like, of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God," Gal. 5: 19–11.

This latter class who love sin, are the tares, who walk in darkness, and have more fear of being detected in sin, than of committing it; more anxiety to hide their sin, than to obtain pardon of God. "What is the chaff, to the wheat?" "The wicked are like the chaff, which the wind driveth away;" of whom God has no need and will subsequently destroy them, and gather His "wheat into His barn."

To be continued.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. J. Gibson.

HOUGHTONVILLE, Vt., April 7, 1856.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I feel it my duty at this time to write a few lines for the Crisis, and let my dear Brethren and Sisters with whom I have had sweet communion in days that are past and gone, know that I am still alive, in this land of the dying, and am still striving for an inheritance in the land of the living, where death cannot enter, and none will suffer pain or be sick. Is not such a land worth striving for? Now "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain; and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves, groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." O my Brethren, how many of us are truly waiting for the redemption? When the Lord cometh, will he "find faith on the Earth?" I see, that "because iniquity abounds, the love of many waxeth cold." Only those that endure to the end will be saved. Paul says, Eph. 6: 11–17, "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil, for we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the spirit which is the word of God; praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirtt," &c.

How is it, my Brother my Sister, are you all thus equipped? If so, it will be easy fighting your way through. If there was ever a time when the soldier of the cross needed the whole armor on, it is now; may the Lord enable us all to get the armor on, and keep it on, for the day of inspection is near, and all that are ready will enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb, and the door will be shut.

For the Crisis.

The Church the Moral Conservative of the World.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 3.

III. Attention is invited to the motive argument employed by our Savior.

1. The dignity bestowed upon the Church in constituting it the moral conservative of the world. By moral conservative, is meant that which preserves from moral pollution, putrefaction and ruin. This is the proper relation of "the Church of the living God," to the world of mankind. Should any object to this, I have only to remark that Jesus Christ in expressing a fact pertaining to the Church, "YE ARE the SALT of the earth," world; has both acknowledged his intention to have the church the moral conservative of the world, and the perfect adaptation of the church to that end. Would he have done this, if it were not the duty of the Church to occupy such a position?

2. There are certain attainments essential to adapt the Church to occupy the above relation, and without which she can never succeed.

A. The virtues and graces of piety are requisite to her being the moral conservative of the world. Such virtues and graces are those which we have already investigated. "The wisdom that is from above: the love of God" with all their amiable qualities, embracing "the fruit of the Spirit," Gal. 5: 22, 23, and that rich cluster of graces enumerated in 2 Pet. 1: 3–12.

B. These are to be possessed by the Church in their highest possible perfection. And does not the Bible require the perfection of Christian graces? Indeed, has not this fact been already proved? If we are to "have boldness" in the day of judgment, because as he is, so are we in this world; can we possess that "boldness" then, if we are not thus? 1 Jno. 4: 17, 2: 28.

C. For the purpose of securing the dignity to the Church which Christ hath bestowed upon it, it is essential for it to be "fitly framed together;" "builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit," Eph. 2: 21, 22. The figure is drawn from Architecture. Note Eph. 2: 15–22. Here are "strangers and foreigners; fellow citizens with saints; the household of God;" a building; its foundation —apostles and prophets; its corner stone—Jesus Christ; "in whom (Christ) all the building, fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. In whom ye also are builded together for an HABITATION of God through the Spirit." From the above, how very obvious it is, that God deigns the Church to be the depository of those heavenly virtues, graces and influences which he will confer upon, and have developed in the world. Think of this expression: "fitly framed together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." How beautiful the thought. How rich the blessing.

Contemplate a building constructed with symmetry, and each piece forming a part of a structure of which another is also a part. Report had announced that the principle of its construction was eminently calculated to secure strength, harmony and perpetuity, as well as convenience. You had read of its symmetry, beauty, and grace with which everything was adjusted. Its "health and cure" had become proverbial; indeed, you design to occupy it, and approach it for this purpose. How sad the spectacle. One part of the foundation is complaining of another because of its too close connexion, and of all above because of its weight. Another affirms, that a certain direction taken by one is radically wrong without being able to prove it. The superstructure is in a state of hostility. One part declaring the corner stone is here, another there, and a third in an opposite direction. One has said, it is this, another that, and a third quite a different one from either of the others. A part of the superstructure springs from its place, and occupying a comparatively higher position, thunders its anathemas upon those beneath; while in the mean time, slander, backbiting, tale-bearing, and sowing discord are rife. Anon, another part having become giddy by its exaltation, falls from its place and hushes all into momentary silence, until it having arrived at the foundation, very complaisantly looks up, and attempts the proof. Meanwhile, Slander, with closed lips and pent up pestilential vapors, is concentrating its forces for another deadly onset. Backbiting, is preparing its teeth, which through long use have become somewhat smooth for more effectual labor. Talebearing, in profound silence listens to catch a fresh communication with which to "set on fire of hell the course of nature," and the sowing of discord, is sleepless with inventing schemes through which to prolong "anger, wrath, hatred and malice, strife, and confusion, and every evil work." Have you looked into the building? Take heed, lest you behold the occurrence of events that would cause you to blush, if repeated in the most confidential and endearing relations of social life.

Well, now, what do you think? Will you occupy it? Turning away with a desponding heart and sickening disgust, he shakes his head negatively. Had the building have been aware of the object of your approach, it would have commanded silence long enough at least for you to have become its occupant; and if it had received the conviction that you had power to preserve or demolish it, and that you were approaching for the accomplishment of the one or the other, it would have "lain still and been quiet" at least, until the point of expectation for such an event had expired. Is such an edifice labelled, "God's building?" 1 Cor. 3: 9. It is libelous. It exposes him to public contempt and ridicule. The "habitation of God through the Spirit," is quite another building. Indeed, it is exactly the opposite. The corner stone is full of "wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption," 1 Cor. 1: 30, 31. The foundation is "holy apostles and prophets," Rev. 18: 20. The superstructure, is composed of "lively stones, built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ," 1 Pet. 2: 5. These are all "builded together for an HABITATION of God through the Spirit," Eph. 2: 22. "Meditate upon these things." God in the church; and does He not know ALL its characteristics? The church His building; and is He not acquainted with every apartment and its furniture? God is called "Father," and the Church a "family." Does He not know what are the defects as well as the virtues of each member? And should he conduct towards it as the "fathers of our flesh?" Heb. 12: 9. Would not some of us get a severe chastisement? Let us take heed to ourselves.

D. The visit of God to the Church is not designed to be fitful, but permanent. Not "as a Wayfaring man," but a resident. "Ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." It is for his dwelling place, that "the building fitly framed together GROWETH unto an holy temple in the Lord. Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God DWELLETH in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are," 1 Cor. 3: 16, 17. "And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will DWELL in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people," 2 Cor. 6: 16. What is declared of the church of God, is true of each member. 1 Cor. 6: 19, 20, "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." Thus the church becomes the "HABITATION of God through the Spirit." How evident it is that God designs his residence in the church to be permanent—and how very criminal in us to oppose that design in any respect. A cold, lifeless, insipid church, is a useless, pernicious, contemptible thing. Useless, as not securing the designed result of the church of God—purity and piety in the world. Pernicious, as it corrupts the world rather than saves from putrefaction. Contemptible, because it exposes the piety of the Bible and the Bible also to ridicule and reproach. How very unlike the true church of God, of which Jesus said, "Ye are the SALT of the earth."

E. This brings to notice, that the wise, pure, peaceable, gentle graces and influences of the church are susceptible of being lost.

This, ALL the cautions in the Bible to prevent it; the judgments denounced against it, and the motives drawn from the most enlarged promises to retain it, prove. And is not the demonstration of this afforded by our text, sufficient? "If the SALT have LOST his SAVOR, wherewith shall it be SALTED." "If it have," God does not tamper with us. He does not place an "if" in such a grammatical relation to caution us against the loss of virtue; of divine influences, when there is no possibility of our being anything else than virtuous. He does not urge motives predicated upon imaginary dangers. No! no! LOOK OUT! If you would be a part of "God's building." That the church may lose its savor is demonstrated by its history, as if written with a 'pen of iron and the point of a diamond.' Then let us beware, lest in trifling away our virtues, we lose ourselves.

F. For such a loss the church is perfectly inexcusable. She has nothing left on which to build a reasonable apology for her guilt. It requires no more effort to sustain the dignity of being the moral conservative of the world, than to insure its own salvation. Indeed, the effort to benefit the one, is the means appointed to secure the other. Hence we must benefit others if we would save ourselves. It is of no use to say, "I was overcome." Better say, "I gave it up;" for a minor power cannot overcome a major, unless the greater concedes something to the lesser. What then? Is the moral power of the world greater than his who made it? This we positively know, that "greater is he that is in you," (the church) "than he that is in the world," 1 Jno. 4: 4. Conquest is ours then, if we are his loyal followers, and apply this power. If we trust humbly in him we shall secure the victory, if not, we are criminal.

G. There are incalculable evils resulting from such a loss. These are two-fold. First, the world sustains the loss of the preserving, purifying qualities, without which, whether considered as a whole or in part, it cannot be saved. Do you say, "that God can save it without the church?" God has instituted means through which he will bring his gracious influences to bear upon man; and he will hold those means responsible. "For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe," 1 Cor. 1: 21. Is there not an institution of means for the salvation of men? Will not God hold those responsible whom He has appointed to this work? Said the dear son of God, "Ye are the SALT of the earth." "Ye are the LIGHT of the world; let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven," Matt. 5: 13–16. Is not the church here specified as an instituted means in the wisdom of God for influencing and saving the world? How will the church meet the responsibility of not having sustained this relation? Do you [illegible] "that God has saved men without the instrumentality of the church?" Suppose we grant it, what is gained? An apology for cold, heartless, formal backsliders? An excuse for the excess of vice over virtue? No! no! Could it be demonstrated that God had done this, it could avail nothing; this is not his rule of action; it is only an exception. The rule is expressed in 1 Cor. 1: 21, 2 Cor. 2: 15, 16. Matt. 5: 13–16. Think of the loss to the world, caused by a loss of the saving influences of the church. How many well disciplined heads there are associated with impure, corrupt hearts. For "by their fruits ye shall know them." Moral action is what tells the story of our virtue or vice. For whatsoever a man SOWETH, that shall he also reap," Gal. 6: 7, 8. Then as we would not be accessory to the loss of our fellow beings, let us sow to the Spirit of God, letting our light shine before men. Let us be established in the pure, perfect graces of piety—Bible piety.

"Secondly. Another loss occasioned by the loss of Bible religion in the church, is the CHURCH itself. The saving influence of the church being lost, it is a useless, hopeless affair. "It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out." It will avail nothtng to say, "Lord, Lord," in the hour of judgment. To repeat the prophecies you have uttered in his name, how many devils you have cast out; how many wonderful works you have done; or to declare, "We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets," Matt. 7: 21: 23; Luke 13: 25–27. A church without graces—Christian graces, will not be acknowledged there; you cannot make yourself known then, and it will be too late for you to seek the necessary virtues and graces to secure a recognition. How very essential it is, that we heed the exhortation: "And, let EVERY one that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity," 2 Tim. 2: 19. "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. H. H. Hodgdon.

GREENLAND, N. H., April 20, '56.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I am glad that I ever heard the joyful sound of a coming Savior, and that I was not left to turn away from the truth, and give heed to the fables of these last days. Though still a pilgrim and stranger on the earth, away from home, and subject to the trials and perils of this mortal state; yet I feel grateful to my Heavenly Father, that I am to be permitted to be numbered with the little flock who are looking for the blessed hope, even the glorious appearing of Him who gave His life for our redemption; and who will soon come and gather His scattered ones from the four winds, and dwell with them on the renewed earth.

O I long to see that glorious day when the saints of all ages shall be gathered and join the triumphant song, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing;" and when from the whole of the new creation shall arise the echo, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb forever." O blessed state! Shall I, who am so unworthy, ever attain to it? It is only through the merits of a crucified redeemer that I can hope to be there.

The world may wonder why we still cling with such tenacity to our faith, since we have met with disappointment in regard to the time, when we expected to realize our hope; but we love Jesus, and in our hearts we feel a longing desire to see Him, and be made like Him; and while we have the promise "I will come again and receive you," we cleave to it, and wait for its fulfilment. We know that millions of our Father's family who have fallen by the hand of the enemy, are sleeping in the dust of the earth, and we want to see them rescued from the grasp of the destroyer, and come forth clothed with immortality; but we know they must remain there, till Jesus the great Life-giver shall come and release them from their long captivity. And while we see the effects of the curse on every hand, and know that the whole creation, animate and inanimate, is groaning for deliverance, we desire a better state of things, and cry with all our souls, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly; take thy throne, redeem thy people, remove the curse, and begin thy peaceful, everlasting reign.

The signs which were to precede the coming of the Lord are in the past, and we believe that, according to his word, he will soon come, and gather his weary children home; and our longing hearts respond "Amen; even so come, Lord Jesus."

O may God enable us to cleave to Him with all our hearts in this perilous time, and be ready to hail our coming King, that when He shall appear, we may hear the joyful sound, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Yours, hoping for redemption when Jesus comes. H. H. HODGDON.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 7, 1856.

An Apology.

Those who have sent questions to the Crisis, will need to have a little patience with us, for the reason, that we have not found time to attend to them on account of the many cares occasioned by the absence of our editor,—Bro. Merriam.

It is fondly hoped that our Brother's eyes will allow him to return soon; and then, our patrons and friends may expect their usual feast of good things. We will try to do the best we can for you till our Bro. returns, and trust we shall have a place in your prayers, that all we do, may be done to the glory of God.

Brn. and Srs.—the times in which we live are perilous; therefore, let us proceed very carefully lest some temptation allure us from the path that leadeth unto life. "Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way," Heb, 12: 13.

Allow me to say in the language of Paul—"I beseech you to cast down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, bringing into captivitg every thought to the obedience of Christ," 2 Cor. 10: 5.

"Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth," Eph. 4: 29.

M. GRANT.

Our Paper.

It is possible that some of our subscribers who have more recently sent for the Crisis, may not understand the principles by which it is sustained and governed.

Some may think that the Crisis is the private property of the Committee,—or some one else; and that all may know the truth in the case, we would say, that no individual has any private interest in its publication. The paper belongs to those who read and sustain it; i. e. to the Church. All the profits, if there should be any, go to the paper, and not to its conductors, and are to be appropriated in sending it to the poor, and in doing "good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith," Gal. 6: 10.

There are quite a number of our readers who are not able to give anything but their prayers, which we consider invaluable, and hope, that instead of faltering, they will become more earnest in our behalf, that we may have the means to furnish them with the paper so long as they are unable to pay, and love to read its conumns.

Brn. and Srs., let us feel that we are one family, and that we will do all we can to promote the best good of the whole.

Are there not many among our readers, who are willing to give something to send the paper to the poor, and thereby gladden the hearts of lonely widows and orphan children who love "the blessed hope." Remember, "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will He pay him again."

Can we lend to an individual where we can have better security, or be more sure of receiving it again, than when we lend to the Lord? He has promised "to pay again," and His word is truth.

Let us not fear to trust Him from whom we receive every good and perfect gift.

What do you say Brn. to the proposition? Come, help us send the "glad tidings" to those who have no money to return. Let us cheerfully do all we can for the destitute members of the family of Jesus. He says in Matt. 25: 40,—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Let us show our faith by our works.

Let all remember us in their prayers, that the paper may be just what it should be,—a means of comforting, strengthening, and edifying the Church of Christ during the absence of her heavenly Master.

Jesus is our witness that we have no other object in publishing the Crisis, but to glorify Him from whom we receive every blessing; and so soon as its continuation is not for His glory, our prayer is, that it may stop.

In behalf of the Committee,— M. GRANT.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. Upham.

MONTGOMERY CENTER, Vt., April 27, 1856.

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as he is pure," 1 John 3: 1—3. But, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." We also are exhorted to "examine ourselves, whether we be in the faith." Now if we have been a professor of religion for many years, and had a name to live, yet if we have only the form of godliness, and are destitute of the life and power of religion in the heart, will it avail us anything? Certainly not. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked." We may deceive man, but God looketh on the heart. There are many spirits gone out into the world, and we need much of the spirit of Christ to discern between truth and error. Let us cry out with the Psalmist, and say, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting;" How good is the word of the Lord. "It is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path. I think I do not desire the honors, nor the riches of this world, but I desire that honor which cometh from God only. If we follow after the vain fashions of this world, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, we need not expect Christ will admit us into his presence to dwell with him in glory. He did not seek the applause of men, "but made himself of no reputation, and took on him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men. And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Are we willing to come down meek and lowly, like our blessed Savior, and patiently endure the reproaches of a wicked and gainsaying world, give up our good name, and count all things but loss, that we may win Christ, and be found in him? Or had we rather hold this world near and dear to our hearts, and say we cannot give thee up; but the word says, "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in Him.

But I believe our time is short, and what we do, we must do quickly, "for yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." May the Lord send down his Holy Spirit into our hearts, give us grace and wisdom, and prepare us for His coming and kingdom.

ESTHER UPHAM.

For the Crisis.

Letter from A. M. Stark.

GREEN RIVER, Vt., April 61, 1856.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I desire to praise my Lord for his goodness unto unworthy me. I have ever found him a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God, and I should not feel justified did I not acknowledge it to the world. I have realized this in a more especial manner since I embraced the Advent faith, thus confirming to my mind, the truthfulness of it. I have even been astonished at the wonder-working power of the Almighty, whilst he deigned to listen unto my feeble requests. "Bless the Lord O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." O ye righteous, praise his holy name, for no good thing will he withhold from you. Let him be praised in all the assemblies of the upright. Sing unto the Lord, make melody in your hearts, make his PRAISE GLORIOUS! Honor him by strong and unshaken faith in his promises, for his word is true, and it is very pure.

"Lo the winter is past, the flowers are about to appear on the earth, the time of the singing of birds is come;" shall we now hear the voice of our Beloved, saying, "Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away!"

Ah, methinks that voice would charm us away, and nothing could hinder the upward flight of a being immortalized, hastening away to be encircled in the arms of Him who is the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely.

We now behold once more the dawning of another Spring—our hearts expand with hope and joy, as we watch from day to day for Nature to unfold her charms, but ere her beauties may be perfected, our ravished eyes may behold an eternal Spring in the Paradise of God. "Even so, come quickly!" A. M. STARK.

For the Crisis.

Pago—Christianized Poetry.

BY J. E. CLARK.

"Vital spark of heavenly flame,
Quit, O quit this mortal frame!
Trembling, hoping, lingering, flying—
O the pain the bliss of dying.

Hark! they whisper! angels say,
Sister spirit come away;
What is this absorbs me quite,
Steals my senses, shuts my sight.
Drowns my spirit, draws my breath,
Tell me, my soul, can this be death?

The world recedes, it disappears;
Heaven opens on my eyes; my ears
With sounds seraphic ring;
Lend lend your wings—I mount, I fly,
O grave, where is thy victory?
O death, where is thy sting?"

In the above we have the theology of Plato, in all its sublimity! In the death scene here described, we have the vital spark, or immortal soul, "of heavenly flame"—of the divine essence, a part of the Deity. Then follows an injunction, for this vital spark to quit this mortal frame. Next the attitudes of the vital spark, which are trembling, hoping, lingering, flying, and exclaiming,—

"O the pain, the bliss of dying!"

This may pass for good poetry, but it is miserable theology. For if there is any meaning to it at all—the body is represented, or supposed to address the spirit thus:—

"Vital spark of heavenly flame,
Quit, O quit this mortal frame;"

to which the spirit replies—

"I am trembling, hoping, lingering, flying,"

—and then exclaims—mind, the spirit exclaims—

"O the pain, the bliss of dying."

According to this, therefore, the spirit trembles, lingers, hopes, flies, and finally DIES—for it is represented as saying,

"O the pain the bliss of dying."

The spirit is then represented as addressing the body thus, "Hark!" 'Did you not hear'—

"They whisper! angels say,
Sister spirit, come away."

The poor body, then already crumbling to dust is made to say—

"What is this absorbs my spirit, draws my breath?
Tell me, my soul, can this be death?"

Both DEAD!

But now comes the crisis—the eventful period when the soul takes its flight and gains kingdoms beyond the skies. The spirit therefore exclaims—

"The world recedes, it disappears,"

and

"Heaven opens on my eyes; my ears
With sounds seraphic ring."

An appeal is then made to the attending angels—

"Lend, lend your wings," with the communication—

"I mount, I fly!"

and as the ghost leaves the world, and passes through the bounds of time and space, it looks back to the grave where "its mortal coil" is deposited and shouts,—

"O grave, where is thy victory,
O death, where is thy sting?"

Such is the teaching of our day. And such is modern theology—taught in every nation under Heaven. It is taught in our Sunday schools, and proclaimed from the sacred desk as God's truth; printed on tomb stones, monuments, and in almost every religious periodical in the civilized world. There are a few exceptions, thank God.

But when we turn our attention to the pure testimony of prophets, apostles, and the great Teacher himself; we find they taught no such doctrine. That sacred volume points not to the day of one's death, as the time when the song of victory will be sung over death and the grave; but to the resurrection of the just. Pauls tells us, that then we put on immortality and shout victory over the grave. The victory and triumph is obtained through Jesus Christ, I Cor. 15. We are dependent upon Christ for eternal life and immortality. O that all might see it, and obtain pardon now, that they might have eternal life at the resurrection of the just. "The dead know not any thing."

The above I submit to the readers of the Crisis, desiring all may see the truth.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. S. A. Moore.

MONTGOMERY, Vt., April 19th, 1856.

BRO. MERRIAM:—It is the love I have for my blessed Master that constraineth me to write a few broken lines for the Crisis. I do feel to rejoice in the God and rock of my salvation from day to day, yes, it is good to trust in the living God. Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad, I believe we are all one in Christ Jesus. O let us be faithful for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. We are here in a world of sin, temptation and trial, yet the grace of God is sufficient for us. I feel like a little child in the cause of God, but I am trying to run the Christian race, although I sometimes stumble and fall, yet my heavenly Father puts underneath his all-supporting arm and raises me up, and by His word bids me try again. We that are parents know the feelings of our hearts toward our little ones when we see them fall, we lend a helping hand, raise them up; so God pitieth his children and careth for them. His ear is ever open to their cries. I feel to praise God to-day for what He has done and is still doing for my soul. I am resolved on seeing the end of the Christian race in peace. Like Mary of old let us take our place at the feet of Jesus and learn of Him who is meek and lowly in heart, that we may find rest to our souls. I love that blessed Savior who has done so much for me; my heart is often melted into love and tenderness before Him. My prayer is that I may have a closer walk with God, that I may adorn the doctrine of God my Savior in all things. The Bible is to me the best of all books; truly it is a light to our feet and a lamp to our path, teaching us our duty from day to day. Never has the Bible looked so precious to me as it has for a few weeks past; I am trying to square my life by it, but I see from time to time I come far short, yet it is a duty I owe to God to do the best I can, and then I am but an unprofitable servant.

My heart has been pained when I have looked out into the world and seen sinners and backsliders going on Gallio-like, caring for none of these things. O their end, their dreadful end! They with us are traveling to the bar of God and their souls are as precious as our own; gladly would I do them good, but my arm is too short; yet, O sinner! be entreated by one that loves you, to seek the salvation of your soul while it is an accepted time, a day of salvation. The time is at hand when he that is unjnst will be unjust still, and he that is righteous will be righteous still; but I must leave you in the hands of a just and holy God, who does not look upon sin with the least allowance or approbation. I believe Brn. and Srs., we have got almost home; by faith we can view the promised land, though we are in the perils of the last days where we have to stem the tide of opposition. God will take care of us if we only put our trust in Him, and safely land us in the haven of eternal rest. I write these lines feeling, peradventure they may be my last, but I do feel I have the blessed witness within my own breast that Jesus is mine and I am His. Glory be to God! I know in whom I believe. My prayer is, that we may all live faithful till Jesus calls us home. Glorious thought, that there is a home prepared for the children of God, but we have need of patience that after we have done the will of God we might receive the promise.

Your Sr., in the hope of soon seeing the little flock in the Kingdom,—

SARAH A. MOORE.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. C. E. Gierlow.

MACON, GA. 1856.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—As we have not yet reached our heavenly home where we can see and converse with each other face to face, I take the liberty once more to address you through the medium of the Crisis. And first, allow me to ask—how do you all do? Are you well in body and in mind—still holding on to the hope of the gospel, looking for that "inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away?" Or, having become weary of waiting for your Lord, have you almost concluded to relinquish your faith, and go back to the world? If so, let me entreat you to beware! Have we come thus far, enduring the scoffs and contempt of a wicked, ungodly world, and shall we now turn back? A long time we have listened to catch the first strain of celestial music that shall reach us from the angelic hosts, as they descend the parting skies to gather God's elect; and while the gentle breezes wafted from the sweet-scented bowers of paradise, have as it were, fanned our temples, we have by faith been enabled to see and measure the length, and breadth of that delightful country—the earth renewed—the saints eternal home.

Shall we now join with the world in crying "Peace and safety,—" Every vision faileth,"—when, according to God's word, we are to look for these sayings in immediate connection with the coming of Christ? God forbid!

By the grace of God I am determined to see the end of the Christian's journey. For worlds like this, I would not give up my hope. If I sh uld, what shall I find for a substitute? Is there anything in the riches, honors, or pleasures of this world, that is permanent or satisfactory? If so, I never found it. Is there anything here more substantial, more certain, than the promises of a faithful God? Surely there is not. Then let us not go back. Let us even not look back, but remember Lot's wife, lest we like her, be overwhelmed in the destruction of the wicked.

A prize of infinite value is befor3 us. Let us run for it a little longer—only a little longer. The New Jerusalem, with its walls of jasper, gates of pearl, and streets of gold, will soon be occupied by the innumerable company of the redeemed. If faithful to the end, we shall be there, and God shall wipe all our tears away.

Welcome, then, thrice welcome affliction, persecution, and contempt; whereby we are made partaker of Christ's sufferings, for the promise is, we shall be glorified with Him.

When I came to this place, there was not, that I know of, one individual looking for the Lord. There are now many, who, I think are interested in our blessed hope, through instrumentalities made use of since our arrival. Quite a number profess to believe, while others, for fear that it may be true, I think, are making preparation to meet it.

There have been during six weeks past, some 200 I think hopefully converted, and baptized,—though I cannot say how much our faith has had to do with it; but this I do know, many who had access to Advent publications, and who had heard the reasons of our hope, were among that number. May God keep them and their ministers, who have labored with and for them, day and night, for so long a time, safe unto his appearing and kingdom, is my prayer. I believe that God is finishing up his work,—that soon the last cf His elect will have been sealed, and what we do must be done quickly. With divine assistance I will endeavor to occupy till He come. And O, Brn. and Srs., remember me at the throne of grace. But few of you know what trials and persecutions I have to meet. As I introduce this last message here, the shafts of the enemy are hurled at me without mercy. But I know that He, whose I am, and in whom I have believed, is able to shield me from all harm, and guide me safe into His everlasting kingdom. Praise the Lord! We are built upon the Rock of Ages. Let the winds blow, and the storms rage around us, they cannot prevail. God grant that we may soon meet where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary rest.

Your Sister,
C. E. Gierlow.

We hope to hear often from our Sister in Georgia.—Ed.

Payson's Love for Preaching.—Never has the ruling passion been more strongly exemplified in the hour of death, than in the case of this excellent American minister. His love for preaching was as invincible as that of the miser for gold, who dies grasping his treasure. He directed a label to be attached to his breast when dead, with the admonition, "Remember the words which I spake unto you while I was yet present with you;" that they might be read by all who came to look at his corpse, and by which he being dead, still spoke. The same words were at the request of his people, engraved on the plate of his coffin, and read by thousands on the day of his interment.

"A man strikes me with a sword, and inflicts a wound. Suppose, instead of binding up the wound, I am showing it to every body; and after it has been bound up, I am taking off the bandage continually, and examining the depth of the wound, and making it to fester, till my limb becomes greatly inflamed, and my general health affected; is there a person in the world who would not call me a fool? Now such a fool is he, who, by dwelling upon little injuries or insults, or provocations, causes them to agitate and inflame his mind. How much better were it to put a bandage over the wound, and never look at it again!"—Jarnison.

Extract from the Allocution of Pope Pius IX., read in the Secret Consistory of the 3d of last November. It relates to the Concordat between Austria and Rome:

Venerable Brothers:—Thanks to the infinite bounty of God and to the piety of our most dear son in Jesus Christ, Francis Joseph, Emperor and Apostolic King of Austria—what we desired has come to pass, and it is for us the subject of the greatest joy. This prince, well knowing that our holy religion and its salutary doctrine are the sources of peace, security, and true honor to the nations; earnestly requested of us to conclude with him a Concordat; which solicitation so laudable, corresponding so perfectly with our own desires and those of our predecessors, is a striking proof of the love which this eminent prince bears to religion. We have concluded with our most dear son in Jesus Christ this desired Concordat, which has been signed by the plenipotentiaries chosen on both sides,—we have regularly and solemnly confirmed it.

We could not avoid communicating to you, openly and publicly in this august assembly, the extreme joy caused us by this happy event. In short, venerable brothers, in this Concordat it has been before all provided that the Catholic Apostolic Roman Religion shall be preserved and protected hereafter in all the empire of Austria, and in each of the States which constitute it, and that it there shall possess and enjoy all the rights and prerogatives which belong to it in virtue of its divine institution and of the canonical constitutions.

Therefore it has been ruled, that all that regards spiritual matters and ecclesiastical affairs, should be perfectly free, without ever being subjected to any royal authority of any kind whatever. It has been agreed, among other points, that the archbishops and bishops may publish mandates, receive clerics, remove those whom they shall judge unworthy; prescribe prayers and public supplications, assemble synods, whether provincial or diocesan, and impose censures, and interdict to the faithful bad books. It has been provided that, in all public and private schools, instruction be given to all Catholic youth in a manner perfectly conformable to the doctrine of the Church. Thus the bishops will have, in virtue of their charge, not only to direct in every locality the religious instruction of youth, but also to watch with the greatest care that in no part whatsoever of education there can enter anything contrary to the Catholic religion; all the primary schools shall be subjected to an ecclesiastical inspector. Also the direction, government, and administration of the clerical seminaries; it will never be permitted, without the authority of the bishops, to teach any part either of theological science, the science of canon law or catechisms.

The bishops shall enjoy their full right to inflict on clerics the penalties established by the canonical laws, or such others as they shall judge appropriate, and that they shall be entirely free to impose censures on all the faithful who shall dare to violate and transgress the ecclesiastical laws and the canonical prescriptions.

The religious Emperor and King himself will never permit that the Catholic Church, its faith, its Liturgy, and its holy institutions be damaged or disrespected in any manner, whether by word, writing or act; or that the bishops and sacred ministers be prevented from fulfilling their charge and their duty, especially when they have to defend faith and morals, and to maintain ecclesiastical discipline. Besides, he will lend his powerful assistance in the execution of the sentences pronounced by the bishops against the clerics, and regard with solicitude the honor due to the sacred ministers; not only will he not permit anything to their prejudice, but, still more, he will direct all the magistrates of his empire to render to the archbishops, the bishops and the clergy, the honor due to them.

Finally, it has been ruled, that all the other questions relative to persons and things belonging to the Church, and which are not mentioned in the articles of this Concordat, shall be treated and resolved according to the doctrine of the Catholic Church, and the usage and discipline approved by the Apostolic See; this Concordat is in vigor, and is regarded as the law of the State throughout the entire extent of the Austrian dominions.

The Mormom Immigrants by the Enoch Train. Seven Hundred More Coming.—The ship Enoch Train, with her load of five hundred and twenty-five Mormon immigrants, arrived up at her wharf yesterday afternoon, after a passage of thirty-nine days. This large body consists principally of English, of the agricultural and mechanical classes. There are however 184 from Scotland, and a number from Germany and Wales. None, we believe, hail from Ireland. Some of the immigrants have large families of children, and a considerable portion are persons under eighteen years of age. There are also quite a number of aged persons on board, particularly females, one of whom is nearly an octogenarian, being seventy-eight years of age. Another is seventy-three, and quite or nearly a dozen are sixty and upwards. There are not many females between the ages of seventeen and twenty-five. On the list of passengers, we notice the old national names of the Maxwells of Scotland, the Powells and Jones of Wales, and the Jacksons and Lees of England

Indian Hostilities in Oregon.—The present aspect of Indian hostilities in Northern Oregon and Washington Territory, says the Oregon Times, looks anything but flattering. There is a gloomy aspect pervading the future fortunes of the Whites. The hostile hordes in the Walla-Walla vicinity are bidding us defiance—yet it is hoped that Col. Cornelius will be able with his 600 volunteers to rout this combination. The Willamette Valley is about the only portion of Oregon at present apparently safe from the Indian murderers—and this portion of Oregon has furnished hundreds of her best men, and generously advanced its means and credit for the vigorous prosecution of the war and the defence of the frontier settlements.

On the 2d inst, five white men and one negro left the Fort, at the mouth of the Rogue River, for the purpose of securing some potatoes, and although well armed, were cut off and every man killed, since which time no persons have ventured to leave the Fort, forty men being kept on guard day and night. The whole number of persons in the Fort being 90 men (five wounded,) 7 women and 12 children.

Only about 60 guns are in the Fort, and the supplies are reduced to about six days's rations. The Indians have made three attacks, but were repulsed each time, losing some few of their number, but they have not, as yet, made a general charge; and for lack of numbers no sally has been made from the Fort.

As no communication is kept up between the parties, they learned from Mrs. Geisell, (who was a prisoner with the Indians for nine days), all further particulars respecting their views and intentions. She states that the Indians are very sanguine that they will entirely overcome the whites, and secure the immediate possession of the Fort, as it is supplied by a small running stream, which the Indians threatened to cut off, but which, as yet, has not been done.

Mrs. Geisell and her infant were received in exchange for two squaws, who were prisoners in the hands of the whites. At the time of capturing Mrs. Geisell on the night of the 22d of February, her hands were tied behind her, and she was compelled to witness the murder of her husband and children.

A house containing six of the volunteers was attacked at daylight, and not until the afternoon were all the inmates slain. Five of the volunteers got into the Fort, some of them having their feet frozen and existing without food for five days. The whole loss of the whites is about twenty-six killed, and five wounded. The names of the wounded are James Hunt, Edwin Wilson, N. B. Gregory, George Basset, and one name unknown.

Famine in the Cape de Verde Islands.—An officer in the American navy, writing to his friend at Washington, gives a painful account of the inhabitants of the Cape de Verde Islands, owing to the scarcity of rain and consequent shortness of crop for the last three years. Already from 5000 to 6000 have died of sheer famine out of a population of 120,000. At St. Jago, the Governor is doing his utmost for the poor people, by sending small vessels, as he can raise the means, to the coast of Africa for grain, which he distributes with the strictest economy to the destitute, devoting to that purpose the whole of the revenues of the islands, and his own salary he has not touched for the three years of his governship, living very poor and with great frugality. He thinks he will be able to keep starvation in check till July, after which, unless provisions are sent out from Europe and America, 20,000 persons, at the least calculation, will starve to death between then and Dec. He is about to make an appeal to our government at Washington; and the writer strongly urges the condition of this unfortunate people upon the sympathy and charity of the American public.

Curious Fossil Remains in Illinois.—The Beardstown Illinosian says:—While visiting a friend in Sangamon Bottom, in this county, a short time since, we were called to examine a specimen of stone which he had lately taken from a neighboring quarry. The curiosity consisted of two sandstone rocks, which were found joining each other in centexural form, which, when separated, the face of one presented the appearance of having been a part of the side of a vessel near the gunwale; there seems to have been an over-lapping of the timbers in the form of a cornice or moulding around the vessel. The work of art is as plain to be seen on the stone as on the floating vessel; the holes formed by the nails are very distinct, as well as the fossilized texture of the wood. There are also pieces of iron with the specimen, which seem to have been used instead of caulking between the strips of plank.

The Threatened Indictment.—A correspondent of the Rochester Tribune, writing April 6th, from St. Louis, says:

A gentleman from Topeka, Kansas, this morning says, that judge Lecompte has instructed the Grand Jury of the Circuit Court now in session, to indict the members of the late Legislature and all the judges of the election, which has been done. He fears trouble when they are arrested. Bills have been found against Gov. Robinson and Lieut. Gov. Roberts.

Distress of the Settlers.—Gen. Philip C. Schyler has stated in the Tribune that the resident settlers in Kansas have been disappointed at not receiving some help in funds and provisions, which they had been encouraged to expect from the East, and of which they are much in need. The pro-slavery settlers, he says, can obtain needed assistance from Missouri. "But not so with us. We are from one to two thousand miles from our friends, harrassed and beset on every sides. Our people generally were poor when they went out, and added to that, a poor crop—the consequence of late emigration last year and the unparalled severity of the winter, have been the cause of untold suffering. I greatly fear the effect of this state of things upon the influx of population this Spring. Many will go with only the means sufficient to get there, and not finding work, and things as prosperous as they have supposed, will turn their faces homeward, as many have done heretofore, to our great injury."

We should think this a case appealing specially to the friends of freedom in Iowa and Illinois, who are strong in resources as well as in numbers.

A Disastrous Month.—The month just expired will long be memorable for its disastrous conflagrations. So far as we have information, there occurred during this period, thirty-two fires where the loss exceeded $10,000 in each instance, (thirteen of which originated in manufacturing establishments,) and the aggregate loss resulting reaches the enormous aggregate of $1,847,000. A fire at Galena destroyed property to the amount of $300,000; one at Baltimore, $175,000; one at Philadelphia, $350,000; one at Boston, $200,000, and one at Nashville, Tennessee, $200,000. In addition, destructive conflagrations have swept through the forests of Virginia, inflicting serious losses.—N. Y. Jour. of Commerce.

An Affectionate Dog.—One day last week, a dog in the family of the late Mr. Isaac Pearson died from actual grief for the loss of his master. The dog was over ten years old, and Mr. Pearson had always taken the utmost care of him, giving him meat and drink with his own hand, at certain hours of the day. After the death of his owner, he went into the house and appeared, as much as any person there, to know the event that had taken place, and from that hour he refused to eat or drink, and went mourning about till he pined away and died, without any appearance of disease. Do dogs reason?—Newburyport Herald.

Another Planet.—On Friday last, the Director of the Observatory at Cambridge received from the Editor of the Astronomische Nachricten, at Altona, a circular announcing the discovery at Paris, on the 31st of March, by M. Goldschmidt, of another, or the 40th, planet now known to exist between Mars and Jupiter.

Sandwich Islaads.—We have dates from Honolulu to March 1. The Polynesian of the 16th February says:

By the arrival of the ship Chandler Price, from Hilo, we learn that the flow of lava continues as active as ever. The stream has now pushed its way through the woods, and is only four miles from the bay. On the night previous to the date of our last advices, it advanced one-quarter of a mile, and when once out of the woods, it will move at an accelerated pace. The stream of the Wailuku River is greatly diminished, and the remaining water so hot that it is unsafe to cross.

New York, April 29.—Arrival of the Empire city—Fatal Affray between California Passengers and Natives.—The Steamer Empire City arrived this morning from Havana, evening of 24th.

A terrible affray occurred at Panama, April 15th, between American transit passengers and the natives, in which the former had 30 killed and 20 wounded. The Empire City brings three of the wounded. A large amount of the passengers' baggage, railroad property, and property of individuals residing near the the railroad station was destroyed, and all the baggage in the freight house rifled.

From Nicaragua—Reported Defeat of Nicaraquans—600 killed.—Charleston, April 28. Steamer Isabel, from Havana, arrived here today, bringing Nicaragua papers of the 14th inst., received at Havana, per steamer Philadelphia.

It is reported that Walker had won a great battle at Rivas on the 7th of April, when the place was captured, with 30 killed on his part.

The Costa Ricans are said to have had 600 killed.

Ministerial Alliance.—A Ministerial Alliance has been formed in Lawrence, and on the Slavery question, their platform of principle and action contains the following:

Resolved, That as preachers of the Gospel we will not be deterred by any prohibition, threatening or reviling, from the supporters of this iniquity of Slavery, from testifying to it in the name of the Lord Jesus, deciding with the apostles, whenever forbidden so to, that we ought to obey God rather than man."

The Russian War.—It is estimated that the whole loss of men during the war from battles, privation and sickness, cannot be less than six to eight hundred thousand, and the entire cost of the war not less than $1,500,000,000! Does not this look like the most astounding folly and crime?

A little boy died in Bangor on Tuesday from the effects of using an old tobacco pipe to blow soap bubbles with. His little sister, who used it with him, is lying dangerously ill. It is supposed they were poisoned with the essential oil of tobacco, imbibed from the pipe which they were using.

FOREIGN NEWS.

One Week Later from Europe.

Arrival of Steamship Persia.

New York, April 29.—The royal Mail Steamship Persia, arrived last evening, making the passage in about 9 1-2 days. She brings 130 passengers, and Liverpool and London dates to the 19th of April.

The Peace Conference.—The Moniteur announces that the Conference closed its sittings on Thursday. The ratification will be exchanged at the end of the month.

Immediately after promulgation of the general treaty, the protocols will be published, and will make known the labors of the Congress in detail.

The questions considered at the last sitting were—1. Free navigation of the Danube; 2. Interior regime of the Principalities and arrangement of the frontiers; 3. Situation of Christians in Turkey. For these purposes, three Commissioners are appointed.

It is reported in Paris that diplomatic movements are on foot respecting Italy. An Austrian ambassador is to go immediately to Rome on a special mission, and it is rumored that the mission refers to the Concordat, but Italian journals say it relates to the general state of Italy.

Latest by Telegraph from London.—The cabinet of Vienna is bent on occupying every corner of Italy, where political excitements can be got up as an excuse for their presence. Events in Italy are daily increasing in interest.

It is quite possible the Duke of Tuscany will again be compelled to demand German troops, and an additional Austrian force is under orders for the Roman States, and the garrisons of Lombardy are to be increased. Austria evidently intends to permanently occupy as much of Italy as she can, in order to insult and intrigue against Sardinia. In fact, Austria is at war with Piedmont, although the armies are not face to face, and it is impossible to say what event may bring about a fresh struggle. That struggle cannot long be delayed. Austria, however, will strive to put off the quarrel on the field until the policy and attitude of France and England towards Italy no longer coincide. The work towards a division has already commenced in Paris. M. Buol seems to persuade the Emperor that any chance in Italy would end in open revolution.

Vienna, Friday.—The Emperor signed the ratification of the Treaty on the 15th.

A public thanksgiving throughout the country followed.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE PERSIA.

Close of the Conference.—The Paris correspondent of the London Times, under date of the 10th, says:—

"The Congress met to-day for the last time. Three of the Plenipotentiaries will leave Paris on Friday or Saturday, namely, Baron Monteuffel, Count Buol and Lord Clarendon. They will probably have their audiences of leave to-morrow. As the time is fast approaching for the arrival of the ratifications of peace from Constantinople, and the publication of the protocols, it is perhaps more prudent to hazard as few conjectures as possible about them; but notwithstanding the repeated denials about the Italian question having been treated in the Congress, it is now beyond doubt that it has been treated, and at some length, though it is certain that but little of what passed will be found in those documents.

Europe is not indifferent to the misfortunes of Italy. It takes the liveliest interest in the Italian question. Europe cannot tolerate the perpetual existence in her own bosom of a hotbed of trouble, disorder, conspiracy and revolt. Such a hotbed exists, however, in Italy. It is for the honor and interest of Europe to break this up.

"Italy is a great country, peopled by upwards of 25,000,000 of inhabitants, whose commotions have caused profound agitation in Europe. If in reality, there are vices in the present organization of Italy, the remedy must be sought for and honestly applied. It is urgent that Europe should occupy itself with the Italian question. The people of Italy suffer. They are in a state of repression which is irregular, and must come to an end.

"Finally, great reforms in the Italian States are indispensable, not only because the people desire and expect them, but also because they are called for by the progress of human reason and by the new relations established between the governing classes and the governed, governments being called upon to provide for new wants, which are unceasingly manifesting themselves, and not being able to make the necessary provisions without the assistance of their subjects, and the subjects being addicted to refuse this assistance where governments do not permit them to discuss the merits of the measures proposed. The complaisant submission of the populace is no longer to be reckoned upon; the people require to know why they are commanded and why they obey. This is true in almost every part of Europe, and especially so in Italy."

The following is an extract from the Paris correspondence of Le Nord, the Russian journal of Brussel:

"Dining a few days ago, with a high personage of the court, Count Cavour did not conceal his complaints against the conference, for refusing to interfere in the affairs of Italy against Austria, which power had in its favor the majority of the plenipotentiaries. He ended with saying, there will be revolution in Italy before the year is out. The minister of Victor Le Nord, uttered his prophecy with some show of reason; the moment a Piedmontese army from the Crimea is about to enter the Gulf of Spezzia, Austria brings her troops to the frontier of Piedmont. It is easy to foresee the possibility of a conflict. England will sustain Piedmont. France also would cordially interfere with the object of reconciling the revolution with the interests of the pope. Austria, who left Russia to combat singly with the allied powers, could not, in the case of a conflict in Italy, rely on Russia."

The Latest News from Italy.—The latest information from Italy indicates that the Austrian government is determined to extend its dominion in that country. As a preliminary step it has extended its occupancy of the Duchy of Parma, having taken military possession of the western frontier of the Duchy, as well as of the capital. There have been no political disturbances in the West to afford any excuse for such occupation, and this movement must therefore be regarded as evincing a purpose to incorporate the Duchy into the Austrian Empire. Since the occupancy of the capital by the Austrian General Crenneville, he has not contented himself with even the rigorous administration of military law, but has trampled on every vestige of independence belonging to the Parmesan government. Numerous arrests have been made on suspicion, and many of the persons thus ar-arrested were sent, without examination, to the Austrian fortress at Mantua. The Austrian authorities justify this treatment of the citizens of a state under the jurisdiction of another government, on the ground that they are dangerous subjects; taking it upon themselves to judge what is best for the interest of a government with whose affairs they have rightfully no concern. It is said that preparations were being made for arrests on a still more extended scale

The excitement in Central Italy, in regard to the decision of the Paris Congress on the Italian question, is reported to be intense. If the Congress has done nothing for reform in Italy, there is great danger that the exasperated state of the public mind will lead to the wildest revolutionary measure. Hitherto the wise counsels of the moderate party have prevailed, but the failure of that party to obtain the reforms demanded in the Congress, will lead the people to despair of justice from the European powers and to seek it for themselves by forcible revolution. The papal government has expressed its confidence that the Congress will be prevented by the diplomacy of Austria from making any changes in Italy. It remains to be seen whether this confidence is well founded.

Austria is declared to be virtually at war with Piedmont. She will, however, refrain from any decidedly hostile demonstrations until there is some change in the present disposition of the English and French governments towards Italy. The Austrian governments is using all its influence to induce the French Emperor to change his views in regard to Italian affairs. Count Buol, the Austrian Plenipotentiary, has been endeavoring to persuade Louis Napoleon that any changes in Italy must end in open revolution, and that the present condition of that country is such that its occupation by Austrian troops is absolutely necessary in order to preserve the interests of the European Sovereigns.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may perhaps subserve the cause of humanity to present this advertisement to the public. For the Crisis.

Don't get weary.

By Vesta N. Cudworth.

Tune—Dying Californian.

Don't get weary; brother, weary,
For the Earth is growing old;
Let the coming vict'ry cheer thee;
Soon the story will be told.

Don't get weary; brother, weary,
Choose the roughest path you see;
Bid thy weaker neighbor, freely,
Half his burthen, rest on thee.

Don't get weary; brother, weary,
Never mind the starting tear;
There'll be time to rest in glory,
Work a little longer here.

Don't get weary; brother, weary,
But with Christ expectant wait;
Death, temptations, sickness dreary,
Never pass the pearly gate.

Don't get weary; brother, weary,
Help thy brother's grief to bear;
If his heart is fainting,—nobly
Take thyself the largest share.

How 'twill cheer thee; brother, cheer thee,
When it falls upon thine ear;
Faithful steward, share my glory;
Welcome to my Kingdom fair.

Charlemont, Mass.

For the Crisis.

The Last Enemy.

"The last enemy to be destroyed is death."

Oh Death, the terror of our race,
How long shall be thy sad'ning sway;
How long shalt thou our peace deface,
By taking our loved ones away.

How long shall we in sorrow mourn
And sigh, to see thy power displayed,
As from our side our friends are borne
And laid beneath the willow's shade.

Behold on yonder hill-side green,
Those mounds on which the roses bloom;
There lieth those we oft have seen,—
Cut down in life's bright sunny June.

Oft by our side in joyful glee,
They've played through many summer hours;
And little thought this stroke from thee,
O Death; thou reaper of our flowers.

In innocence they lived and died,
For death, fierce death no pity shows;
For good and bad alike must try,
The power that in the grave lays low.

Brother and sister that we've loved dear,
Have long, long slept the sleep of death;
No more they join our pleasures here,
No more they know the scenes of earth.

Kind parents, too, have passed away,
Cut down by death's destroying power;
We'll ne'er forget that gloomy day,
Nor the deep anguish of that hour.

How long, again we ask how long;
Shall death the tyrant hold his power?
When shall he cease to spoil our song,
When cease to ruin and devour?

Hark! from the East a voice we hear—
Ye dead arise! to judgment come!
Oh Death! thy judgment draweth near,
Oh Earth! prepare to meet thy doom!

Now death deliver up thy prey,
From ocean depths and sunny plain;
Ye dead, to judgment come away,
For Jesus now triumphant reigns.

Rejoice! ye mourning ones rejoice!
For friends long lain in silent dust,
Shall from their dusty bed come forth,
To th' immortal glory of the just.

Oh glorious day! it draweth nigh!
Roll on! roll on, ye wheels of time!
Till we behold in yonder sky,
Bethlehem's star in glory shine!

Hartford, April 7th, 1856. H. H.

For the Crisis.

"The Beast that Ascendeth out of the Bottomless Pit."

By J. Bassett.

The present aspect of things in Europe, should awaken the attention of every man who is interested in the fulfilment of prophecy, and preparation for a future life.

The great day of wrath is evidently very near, and startling events are about to be witnessed.

New scenes are just opening in the bloody history of the kingdom, symbolized by the "Leopard Beast" of Rev. 13; and the scarlet one, of Rev. 17.

The opening of the closing drama preparatory for "perdition," will soon startle the inhabitants of this wicked world. "Let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober; for when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them," 1 Thess. 5: 3, 6.

This beast represents the Papal kingdom, ruled by kings, whose reign has been ratified by the popes of Rome; and embraces all of Europe, south of the Danube.

The heads of the beast symbolize the political rulers and their territories, in the different parts of this kingdom, at different times, who have reigned, and will reign from the commencement to the end of the papal power.

The "image to the beast," must be like the beast in its extent and character.

This leopard beast commenced when the popes began to crown monarchs, which they had no power to do by force, until Justin the Greek Emperor, bound himself to support and sanction his cruel laws, about A. D. 519–20.

But even then, he was without authority as a king over kings, and remained so for about 494 years from the former date. A concordat was signed by Henry V., 1122; from that date for 666 years to the breaking out of the French revolution in 1788, he had great authority. Some of those kings on the papal domains have been bad tenants, neglecting to pay tribute and homage to the pope, often quarrelling with him. The small kingdoms on papal Europe may be considered in the light of squatters upon the territory, without the pope's authority.

We now view the papal beast as attempting to rise out of the abyss, or bottomless pit. John first introduces it about the end of its career, and then goes back to speak of its past history. Stand in your imagination upon Mount Vesuvius with all of Europe before you; behold him trying to ascend out of the sea to his former exaltation, having laid claim to the thrones south of the Danube in Europe, but the deadly wound of 1788, having left the body benumbed, he requires a substitute or image, which being furnished, he will ascend out of the abyss,—chap. 17: 8. All the world will BE ASTONISHED AT ITS RISING, excepting those who will recognise it as the fulfillment of prophecy, and escape from its vengeance. But the hundred and forty-four thousand will be gathered to stand with the Lamb, on Mount Zion. O GLORIOUS DAY for those that are called to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb.

God's people will have the victory over the monster. Yes, at this very time, when success crowns the efforts to understand the beast; through the fulfillment of prophecy his number will be made plain. At that time when this great development is accomplished, then will the Lamb stand upon Mount Zion, as shown in Chap. 14: 1. This chap. to the 6th verse, seems to be a continuance of the subject, showing that when danger arises from the image of the beast, then the children of the Lord are immediately delivered. As we look over Europe, we discover that the designated members of this mighty beast, are now complete; he now has the seven heads and ten horns. The powers of Europe are at this moment arranging his members, to fulfil the testimony of Jesus to John, upon the Isle of Patmos. Mighty developments are about to be unfolded to the family of mankind. Of old the words were spoken; but this SPRING, we believe there will be an unprecedented fulfillment; we are speaking particularly of those heads, which the popes have crowned in past ages. Britain is one of them; does any one doubt it? then let him turn to the pages of history, and there learn of her submission to a mystic king; who ruled over a darkened Church, and seven blood stained kingdoms. Each of those kingdoms at various periods in their history, have been vassals to the mysterious king. Geat Britain was joined with the pope in the Crusades; and Mary, the Catholic Queen, caused rivers of Protestant blood to flow. John the III., who was king of England, acknowledged Britain to be the pope's kingdom, and swore to pay tribute while humbly kneeling, as the pope's legate sat upon his throne. John folded his hands, and while in this posture, put them into the hands of Pandolf the legate, swearing obedience, tribute and homage.

Second:—Greece, from the days of Justin, A. D. 519–20, supported the papacy to 754. The emperor Justinian, causing all the bishops of the East to submit. Hundreds of thousands of Christians were slain, and many perceiving this to be "the abomination of desolation," fled to the woods and caves. Added to the former, are those Catholic kingdoms of Spain, Austria, Portugal Naples and France. The pope has ratified the establishment of all those thrones, by crowning upon them kings or monarchs.

The next following, are the horns, or small kingdoms which have sprung up within the limits of those large monarchies first mentioned. 1. Bavaria; 2. Saxony; 3. Sardinia; 4. Belgium; 5. Sicily; 6. Hanover; 7. Holland; 8. Wurtemburgh; 9. Sweden; 10. Denmark.

To represent this symbol on a map of Europe, I would have seven necks, extending from Italy to the borders of the territory belonging to the seven kingdoms before mentioned, viz:—England, France, Naples, Spain, Portugal, Greece, or Turkey, and Austria. This would serve to illustrate my idea of the consolidated alliance of those many heads into one head; and the common affinity of all to the old papal body or beast; as it once existed, when in its prime and glory. Then the authority of the pope was felt, and acknowledged by all the others. Some writers have chosen a dynasty for a head, constructing in their imagination the head independent of territory, or reckoning the same territory twice over; such has been done with France. With as much propriety might the next dynasty of kings, who succeeded to the throne of Syria, after Seleucus, be considered a fifth head of the third beast; and such a claim no one would admit.

The kind of government in the heads, had but little to do with the fulfilment of the symbol, as in the case of the divisions made by the four possessors of Alexander's territory; if one of the four sections had formed itself into a republic, and elected their general president over it, the symbol would have been filled just as well. As the parent delights in the advancement of his children, when they fulfil his desires and obey his instructions, so the popes have designated clearly the seven heads which we have before named, as the objects of their affection and approbation, in addressing them by the appellation of sons, and crowning them princes of those seven territories. He has professed to provide for their welfare. We would inquire if it should be assumed by any that there is no prophetic MARK in his thus professing to empower those seven; why do we never find the pope crowning princes over the territories of Syria, Egypt, Russia, or Prussia? It is because that none but the seven political divisions of territory, were members of his body.

We have spoken thus much of the heads. The horns also, must be found within the limits of the territory belonging to the seven heads.

We will try to find them. Before doing so, we propose that you lay upon your map comprising those seven former kingdoms, ten kernels of corn; being careful to place each kernel within the territory, colored, to represent those seven kingdoms. This may convey my idea of the symbolic horns; each kernel representing one of them. We do not find any intimation in the prophecy that there would be any equal number of horns on each head. The last part of chap. 13, introduces an "image of the beast," reared up to the service of a power, once CRIPPLED; but the subject seems to be left abruptly, or abridged, without bringing it to any final issue. Consequently, we may with propriety look for the subject to be resumed again, in some other chapter, and its peculiar features delineated; this we find done in John's description of the "Scarlet colored beast," in Rev. 17.

Here the image beast of Rev. 13, is continued and spoken of more minutely. It comes upon the stage suddenly, as the bearer of the apostate Church to the scene of its final execution. This being composed of the same elements as the leopard beast of chap. 13; but stripped of those diadems or crowns upon its horns, being the likeness to the former beast, in fact the same, transformed. This image beast is the 8th throne which the popes will have ratified. All the old grants and oaths of acknowledgement from former kings giving the pope proprietorship, will be looked up, and signed over to Napoleon, or some prince, as so many precious deeds or patents of territory, and he will stretch his power over the whole surface as speedily as possible. The Church has been sitting upon the heads or kingdoms, but now it will shift itself to the image, having given up her spiritual grants of fealty to a prince, in exchange for promised support and ease.

Who, we inquire, are to have power as kings one hour with the beast? Look for a moment, at the FOREIGN NEWS, respecting the crowned HEADS. We copy from the New York Sun of March 13. In giving an account of the conference of plenipotentiaries; when speaking of the fifth point, the following statement is made, viz:—

"No sooner had it been laid on the table, than Count Orloff and Baron Brunen made objections to its being taken into consideration, with a view to its being decided by the conference. They proposed that it should be referred to a congress of the representatives of all the crowned heads in Europe, and if so referred, they pledged themselves in the name of the Czar to abide by whatever decision that Congress might make."

In that case, Russia would not be a party in the arbitration, as she has proposed to leave out the matter to others. When the time arrives that the ten small kingdoms are admitted to settle the affairs of Europe, they will then have, in a symbolic sense, received a kingdom or a part in a kingdom, and be what they never before have been, dominant powers in the affairs of Europe. When that Congress sits, then will commence that hour in which the ten "receive power as kings, one hour with the beast," to arrange a contemplated universal empire. Their strength will be thus given to the beast. O glorious day for those who have gotten the victory over the beast, his image, and the number of his name.

The above has been my view of the subject for two years and a half.

Letter from Sr. S. P. Green.

Br. Merriam:—I wish to say a few words to the beloved disciples of Christ, as I have an evidence that I belong to the same company.

I do feel to praise God for all his benefits to us, notwithstanding the scorn, contempt and ridicule the world may heap upon us. O yes, the Lord is good, supremely good and kind are all His ways. Come, my dear Brn. and Srs., let us all awake and put on our robes of beauteous hue.

"Church of our God, arise, and shine!
Bright with the beams of truth divine."

Soon shall thy radiance stream afar,—soon we shall see how it looks in bright glory; let us gird on closer the whole armor, and run the race with patience; yea, let us devote our ALL to His service. I do feel the need of your prayers—here I am alone, despised, "cast down, but not destroyed," for the belief of the immediate coming of the Lord from heaven. I can truly say, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly; and then there will be an end of affliction, of sickness, pain and death,—also of wars and commotions, which now everywhere abound. While God is accomplishing his work in his Church, Satan goes about with his instruments with all speed. O, what havoc he has made and is still making. Who will have him to reign over them? Well, my dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ, do we not see strong indications of our long absent friend's coming soon to give us our promised possessions and crowns? Soon we shall have gained the victory over all our foes, if faithful. O let us get aboard Zion's ship which is sailing proudly through the restless ocean, with sails well filled by the breeze of heaven. I trust we shall gain that healthful climate soon.

"Here amid life's changing scenes,
Our cup of grief runs o'er;
But there we'll share unmingled bliss,
On Canaan's happy shore.

"Here disease invades our frames,
We wither, droop and die;
But there, eternal youth shall bloom,
And bright shall beam each eye."

My heart says, glory to God, for the prospect which lies before us—our trials, and sorrows shall all have an end. I feel like coming to the throne of grace with humble boldness, since "He is more willing to give the Holy Spirit unto them that ask him, than earthly parents are to give good gifts unto their children;" and we cannot do anything acceptable without His grace. Let us be in complete subjection to Him, who loves us, and watches over us with care; he has brought us thus far on our journey—His right hand and holy arm hath sustained us. Blessed be his holy name for the gospel light and privileges, which have been spread throughout all the earth—what light, love and joy have pervaded the hearts ot all the children of the heavenly King within a few years past, notwithstanding all their trials and disappointments; truly, the Church of God has been made to pass through varied scenes; but we are to be tried and made white, even unto the end, and then all that are found written in the book, will be delivered. Indeed, it is painful to behold the contrast in the churches between the past and the present. Look at many, who a few years ago were engaged, devoted, whole-hearted Christians—where are they now? Allied, glued to the world and its pride! O they are asleep! dreaming and fancying themselves just upon the threshhold of happiness and glory. "O," say they, "I see no particular reasons for believing the Second Advent nigh; it may come in a week, or not in a hundred years; and it may not be for a hundred thousand centuries!" I would ask, could the above come from the heart of a servant of God? It did come from the lips of a pastor—one that is striving for, and seeking the good of the remnant of God's people.

Jeremiah says: "Thus saith the Lord of hosts the God of Israel; drink ye, and be drunken, spue and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I will send among you." "The Lord shall roar from on high, and utter his voice from his holy habitation." "A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for he hath a controversy with the nations, He will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the Lord." "Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth. And the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth, even unto the other end of the earth; they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried. Howl, ye shepherds, and cry; and wallow yourselves in the ashes, ye principal of the flock; for the days of your dispersions are accomplished."

Yet the scattered flock shall be gathered from all parts of the earth, whether they have been driven. "Blessed is the man who trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is." Bare with me a moment longer, my friends, and I am done.

O, that some one of God's ministers would remember us in Plymouth, Vt., and come and preach to us, and break to us the bread of life, which blessed season we have not the privilege of enjoying; do not know as we shall, until we all meet in heaven, which I do hope will be very soon. O, I do thank God, that I am weaned from this world, and am looking for, and expecting deliverance soon.

My dear friends, let us all remain in the sheepfold, until we hear him saying, "Child, your father calls, come home." Let us not wander away from God, for if we do, we shall only meet the enemy, as he goes ranging about, seeking whom he may destroy. If this reaches any with whom I have had an acquaintance, to you I would say, hold on to God—cling fast to his Word. Remember me at the throne of grace.

Come, and preach to us, ye Watchmen, we need to know

"What of the night"
And what its signs of promise are."

May the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, be with you all. Amen.

Your Sister,

Sophronia P. Green.

For the Crisis

Letter from Sr. E. M. Clark.

Hollis Me. April 19th, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—While reading a communication from one a short time since, my heart was thrilled with joy and I was led to shout glory to our God! Blessed be His name to-day, that there are so many who are willing to live out the requirements of the gospel,—keep the sayings of Jesus, and look for that "blessed hope," and the glorious appearhing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. There is a little band in this place interested about the return of our Lord, and who love His appearing. When we assemble at the house of prayer in His name, according to His promise He meets with us by His spirit, and sometimes we feel that—

"The opening heavens around us shine,
With beams of sacred bliss,
While Jesus shows that He is ours,
And whispers we are His."

Most of the nominal Churches appear to be slumbering and dreaming of a good time coming; converse with them about the coming of Christ—"yes," they will immediately answer, "coming by His spirit to enlighten the minds of the people, and convert the world." "The resurrection," say they, "is far in the future; we ought not to concern ourselves with that." How contrary to the word of God. The great apostle to the Gentiles, exhorts us to comfort one another with these truths. Truly it is consoling to hear about His appearing and Kingdom. It is about two years since I first heard the Advent doctrine preached. I earnestly asked the Lord to show me the truth—unlike Pilâte, I stopped for an answer,—I searched the Scriptures daily, to see if these things were so; I received it with joy when I saw it was Scriptural,—renounced the world with all its traditional errors, and resolved henceforth—

"To take his word for counsel,
His spirit for my guide,
And make a full surrender
Of everything beside."

I thank the Lord that He put it into my heart to search His word for myself. I saw that I had been striving to worship Him according to the precepts of men; but I longed to do the will of my Heavenly Father, imitate the example of my Savior, and be like Him. I had been sprinkled, having been taught that this was the best mode of baptism. I soon clearly discovered from the light of God's word, that there was but one way, and that applying a little water to a person's head, was not "being planted in the likeness of His death." I conferred not with flesh and blood, but went down into the water, was buried with Christ by baptism, came up rejoicing in His pardoning love and mercy. I have never seen a moment since, that I regretted the course I pursued. A heavenly monitor has been, (and still is,) whispering,—onward, "this is the way, walk ye in it." Yes, onward, for none have the promise of being saved, but he that endureth unto the end. Truly I feel crucified to the world, and the world to me; but I have a strong enemy to contend with, and sometimes when he hurls his darts, it seems as if I should sink in the deep waters then I cry out with Peter, "Lord save, or I perish"—He lifts me up, enables me to discover through the telescope of faith, the pilgrim's home. that land of rest. Methinks I hear His voice saying, "I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." How precious are His words—how sure His promises. "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." Let the miser hoard his wealth, let the worldling chase the phantoms and shadows of this vain world for happiness if they will; but give me Jesus for my portion, with the hope of an endless life with Him in the bright world to come; it is worth more than all that this earth can afford. We shall soon see Him coming down the parted skies with His shining retinue, "to take vengeance upon them that know not God, and to be admired in all them that believe." All things speak His Advent near—"peace and safety" cries we hear—and mockers are acting their part.

If a scoffer's eye should glance over these lines, I would say in the languege of Scripture, "Be ye not mockers lest your bands be made strong." Like the circles in the maelstrom in the ocean, every round draws the victim nearer the whirlpool of destruction, with increased speed,—so that the farther you advance in sin, more firmly satan has you in his grasp. O fly to Chrst, secure a hiding place in Him before it is too late! A word to our beloved editor; your valuable paper is a welcome messenger to our family,—we love the spirit it exhibits—it stands in my estimation next to my Bible,—we could uot well do without it. Yours is a high, a noble position, feeding the flock of God, giving meat in due season. What blessed promises await that servant who is thus employed, at his Master's return.

From your unworthy sister, looking for that same Jesus that went into Heaven to come again in like manner,

E. A. Clark.

The Treasure Trove.—When Alexander of Macedon was seeking realms to conquer, he met with a people who lived in a very remote and obscure corner, who had never heard of war nor conquerors, and who enjoyed their humbler cottages in profound peace. They met the Macedonian King and conducted him to their ruler, who received him hospitably, and set before him, as a feast, dates, figs, and other fruits, made of gold.

"What! do you eat gold here?" asked Alexander.

"No; but I imagine thou hadst food enough to eat in thine own country and it was a desire of gold that led thee forth from it. Why, therefore, hast thou come to us from so far a country?"

"It is not for your gold I came," replied Alexander; "but I desire to learn your customs."

"Even so; then abide among us as long as thou wilt."

While the ruler and the Grecian were conversing, two men of the tribe came in to appeal to the ruler's judgment. The complainant spoke:

"I bought a piece of ground from this man, and when I was digging it I found a treasure, it is not mine, for I purchased only the ground—I never included in the purchase any hidden treasure; but this man, who sold me the land, refuses to receive the treasure from me."

The defendant now replied:

"I am as conscientious as my neighbor. I sold him the ground and everything there might be in it."

The ruler took time to understand the case clearly; and then asked one of the parties:

"Hast thou a son?"

"I have."

"He enquired of the other:

"Hast thou a daughter?"

"Yea."

"So, then, the son shall marry the daughter, and the young couple shall have the treasure as a wedding portion."

"Perfectly just," returned Alexander, but it surprises me."

"How, then, would the case have been decided in thy country?"

"To own the truth," said Alexander, "both the men would have been taken into custody, and the treasure seized for the king."

"For the king!" said the ruler, full of astonishment; "does the sun shine in thy land?"

"Surely."

"Does the rain fall?"

"Of course."

"Wonderful! but are there gentle, grazing animals there?"

"There are, and of many kinds."

"Then," said the ruler, "it is for the sake of those innocent animals that the all merciful Creator permits the sun to shine and the rain to fall on your land; ye deserve it not." Leigh Hunt.—Household Words.

The Old and New Creation.

By B. P. HILDRETH.

No. 3.

One of the great promises of God to Abraham was, "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed," Gen. 12: 3. This is a great and unqualified promise, to him as "the father of the faithful;" and through his seed, or one descended from him, all blessings proceed, and through Him are communicated to millions of every generation; and itis rational to believe that thousands of whole families will "belong to the household of faith;" as Mary, Martha, and Lazarus; the Jailor's, Lydia's, and Stephanu's were whole househ olds.

How much encouragement parents may have from the promises of God, to bring up their children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" to pray for them "without ceasing;" to give them up to God and not hold them as idols, but resign the beloved "Isaac;" be examples to them, such as they wish them to follow. God said of Abraham, "I know that he will command his children and his household after him; that they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment. The promise is to you (Christians) and to your children." The Savior "took them up in His arms, put His hands on them, and blessed them, saying, suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." Thousands of hearts are filled with anxiety for their children in the midst of an ensnaring world; but I would recommend to all, to let no time slip when they can put a good admonition into the mind of a child; tell them faithfully, kindly and constantly, what God requires of them, what Jesus has done for them, and what blessings he is daily giving them, and talk with them of the dreadful consequences of disobedience to God, the terrible end that awaits the wicked, and with every persuasive argument that can be used, "when they lie down," and when they "rise up," and when walking by the way; and at the same time pray; and let the incense from your burning hearts ascend to heaven, and Jesus will offer it with acceptance "on the golden altar that is before the throne."

"He that spared not His own Son but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give you all things?" The conditions of salvation are brought within the reach of all. "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Here is a promise, and who will say he cannot comply with the terms?

But the supreme affections of the heart must go with the call; "Ye shall seek me, and find me; when ye shall search for me with all the heart," Jer. 29: 13. Turn, O sinner "turn and live."

The householder hired laborers in the morning, at the third, sixth, ninth, and even the eleventh hour; and though we are now on the twelfth hour of this world, yet while God's mercy spares, there is hope. The end is imminent! "Work while the day lasts," for all will soon be over.

Parents, do not get discouraged with your children, but kindly and faithfully instruct them in the ways of God; take them with you to the closet, as well as the family altar, and show them by your prayers and tears, how much you love them; and how anxious you are for their salvation. Keep a strict and vigilant watch over them, for God has given you those children that you might bring them up for Him. Let a feeling sense of the greatness of your responsibility, both to Him and to them, be always paramount to all things else, that you may not (as our first parents were,) be the unhappy progenitors of the "seed of the serpent." Soon the probation of six thousand years will terminate, when our poor bodies will become incorruptible and glorious, though the greatest part be reduced to their primitive dust. The old house must come down, having been a tenement for sin, and be "created anew in Christ Jesus;"—for even conversion cannot disannul that penalty which was incurred by disobedience.

When that decree is announced,—"Behold I make all things new," glory will dawn on all His chosen ones,—but "the wages of sin is death." Adam had no claim on the goodness of God, because of his determined disobedience; but as it was unaccompanied with enmity, he received the gracious promise of mercy, in "the seed of the women;"—while satan in the serpent, acted from pure malice. The sentence on the serpent is—"I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed, and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." This curse of the tempter covers all the blessings of the gospel; the illustrious seed of the woman conquers him, and we have no other foe to fear. The enmity between the woman and the serpent, her seed and his seed, has been strikingly fulfilling ever since; though her seed evidently referred to the Messiah,—yet all in Him, whether before His manifestation or since, are contained in the prophecy; for it was soon developed between Cain and Abel; the latter "obtained witness that he was righteous." The effect of God's spirit on the heart, is enmity against satan and his cause, and every child of God has the mind of Christ, who was manifested to destroy satan's work, and this excites the rage and malice of "the seed of the serpent," which is often seen in wicked men. They are too proud to be admonished, and whoever opposes their iniquity, or disturbs their consciences, is sure to meet with open violence. Abel's holy life was hateful to Cain, because it condemned his wickedness, hence envy instigated him to persecute his brother, even unto death; and so now the secret machinations, slanders, and temptations sometimes give the wicked a temporary success, by which they "bruise his heel."

The sufferings of Christ on the cross, the death of millions of martyrs, the constant harrassing of the children of the Lord with temptations and tribulations, both inward and outward, will neither hinder the progress of the redeemed on their way to glory, nor obstruct their entrance into the everlasting Kingdom. The same enmity existed between Isaac and Ishmael, Jacob and Esau, David and Saul, Christ and the Jews, His disciples and the Romans, and last, not least, between the true Church and "the mother of harlots." How clearly can we see the character of these two classes, and the contrast between them; the one "chosen to salvation through sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth;" the other, too proud to yield obedience, is left to perish. But says one—;*

"I see no danger; and I never felt one anxious thought about any thing beyond this world."—Then you must be one of the "seed of the serpent, one of the sottish children;" remember "if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost." Your eyes are blinded, and you cannot believe, because satan has got possession of your heart.—"Well, I have nothing to fear; and if I could raise a team, I would put down your leader with a coat of tar and feathers, and a ride on a rail."—You must belong to that class who are called "impudent children; children of your father, the devil; who is an enemy to all righteousness;" but your infidelity will not change Him, who is "the same yesterday, and to-day and forever." All your contempt He suffers only to advance His own glory, and your condemnation. He has no need of your services; He is a fountain, a fulness of infinite good, which you cannot diminish, nor can you add to His happiness or take from His final glory.

Let it be understood, that for the great and unparalleled transgression of our first mother, human nature is overtaxed to produce in the flesh, the children of "the wicked one;" and whatsoever God doeth is right; and do what you will, the redeemed He will have and bring them home to glory.

Well might the Savior say of such as —"ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can you escape the damnation of hell?" It is highly probable, that God now endures "with much long-suffering" toward you, as "a vessel of wrath," fitting for destruction, "I am surprised at your blasphemy while foaming out your own shame;" you may read your character fully delineated in the book of Jude; and "except ye repent," you can never "enter the kingdom of God."—"Well, I don't think you will have many there, the devil will get the majority."—"The Lord God will bring all that love Him into the new earth; He created it to be inhabited, but the incorrigible children of the devil, He will not have in the kingdom. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out o my hand. All that the Father giveth me shall come to me."

He will drag the monster satan in chains to the confines of the bottomless pit, and will leave him there a thousand years," Rev. 20: 3. And the wicked "shall be gathered together, as prisoners in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days, (the thousand years,) shall they be visited;" And this will be, "when the Lord shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusal em, and before His ancients gloriously." Isa. 24: 22, 23. "For as the new heaven and the new earth which I shall make shall remain before me saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. And they shall go forth and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh." Isa. 66: 22–24. Here the state of the wicked is described by Jehovah Himself, and is this "the majority" that satan will get? "These shall go away into everlasting punishment" (a place) "prepared for the devil and his angels." "He that is of God heareth God's words; ye therefore hear them not because ye are not of God. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have eternal life."

When man fell, his moral nature was polluted, the Holy Spirit forsook him, and the unclean spirit took possession. Misery, sin and death followed, and as the divine law had been broken, nullified, and dishonored by man, the loss must be retreived, and God's broken law magnified and honored. This we learn by the announcement—"Thus speaketh the Lord of Hosts saying, behold the man whose name is the BRANCH; and He shall grow up out of His place, and He shall build the temple of the Lord. Even He shall build the temple of the Lord and He shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon His throne; and He shall be a priest upon His throne: and the counsel of peace shall be between them both." Zech. 6: 12, 13. A priest is appointed to offer sacrifice, and to make atonement, which was generally made at the door of the tabernacle. Says Paul, —"But Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come; by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood. He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." Thus "He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself." Heb. 9: 11, 12, 36. And "all the children of the Kingdom," are called on by the Holy Spirit to receive Him as such a sacrifice, by faith; that is, to believe His word; and this belief creates love, their blind eyes are opened, their ears are unstopped, and their hearts are expanded to receive the truth; and when they are brought to believe the unparalleled love of the Father, and the unexampled sufferings of His Son who became a propitiatory sacrifice for sin, they are melted into contrition; they receive life and light as from the dead; they abhor sin as well as its consequences; they embrace hope in His promises, and strive to walk in the light by a holy obedience to all His requirements.

It is thus, that we are begotten again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead,—"to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." 1 Pet. 1; 3–5. Thus "all the children of the kingdom are taught of the Lord." Christ is their salvation, to preserve them from eternal death; and their righteousness to admit them to the presence of His Father, "with exceeding joy."

"Of His own will begat He us with the word of truth." James 1: 18. Thus all are called by His grace, and when they become willing to accept of mercy, to cease their rebellion against Him, and sufficiently abhor themselves, they are "delivered from the power of darkness and finally translated into the kingdom of His dear Son;" and then "we are born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever." We are clothed with His righteousness, saved in consequence of the atoning sacrifice made when He poured out His blood for the iniquities of a wicked race. On the cross, by an excruciating death, He expiated the guilt of heaven-daring sinners, and brought eternal life within the reach of all who will receive it by faith in Him, and obedience to His commandments. "We have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ;" and the promise of life eternal is made sure to all those that obey. Thus sings the prophet, "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord; my soul shall be joyful in my God; for He hath clothed me with the garment of salvation; He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels." Isa. 61: 10. Thus we are clothed in luminous vestments, whose "price is far above rubies." We then "desire the sincere milk of the word, that we may grow thereby." And as children are nourished, and grow up to the stature of men, so does the child of God grow in grace till he becomes a perfect man in Christ, being filled with His fulness.

* Something like the following dialogue was heard by the writer, not long since; and a great deal more, which is not suitable to communicate; but there was the personification of enmity against Christ.

The Revelation of Jesus Christ.

By I. K. BELLOWS.

Luke 17: 30. "Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." The day when the Son of man is revealed, and the day of vengeance of our God are identical, as appears from an expression of the Apostle. 2 Thess. 1; 7, 8 "And to you who are troubled, rest with us when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Jesus says, "the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." John 12: 48. That it may judge, it must be preached, and if we receive the truth in good and honest hearts, keeping the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, then are we righteous, and prepared to meet the Lord when he shall come to be admired by all them that believe in his name. The revelation of Jesus Christ brings the day of vengeance of our God, and the indignation of the Lord.

When the third angel's message is proclaimed, the wrath of God is poured out without mixture (of mercy) into the cup of his indignation. Rev. 14: 9, 10. And while God is taking vengeance on his enemies, he says, "come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were, for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity," Isa. 26: 20, 21. Now turn and read Isa. 34: 8; "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompences for the controversy of Zion." Read also the preceding verses.

Let us look for a moment at the time when our text is to be fulfilled. It is to be when disciples would desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man, and should not see it. O how many times have we desired to see that event, and what would be more welcome to our waiting hearts. Just then, the "Lo here, and lo there! sprung up,—he is in the desert, or in the secret chamber—"go not after them nor follow them; for as the lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven, so shall also the Son of man be in his day." Luke 17: 23, 24. This must mean that we shall know when Christ comes, as well as we know when the lightning illuminates the heavens. The lo here's! and lo there's! will lead us astray from the truth, unless we heed the word—"go not after them nor follow them." Brethren, we shall not always be in the dark. "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man."

Noah appears to be a type of God's people,—the ark a type of God's plan of saving sinners by the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. During the one hundred and twenty years, Noah built the ark and preached the end, which, in my opinion, was a type of the Advent movement.

Lot also was a type of God's people; the Sodómites a type of the wicked of these last days; "but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be when the Son of man is revealed."

"My brethren, I am anxiously looking for that day to burst on the world." Peter says, referring to the transfigation, "we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty." 2 Pet. 1: 16.

Again, Peter says, v. 19, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise in your hearts."

The Lord will soon come, "but who may abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand when He appeareth."

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. Boutell

PLYMOUTH, May 8, 1856.

BRO. MERRIAM:—We have no reason to be discouraged; we are not fighting as one that beateth the air. The true apostolic faith, founded upon positive testimony must realize the promised result. The disappointment of time cannot effect the ultimate issue What we have loved, expected, desired, looked and hoped for, will come; it is but little in the future. The Lord will come; the graves will cleave asunder, the jewels,—those precious treasures must come forth. The Heavens have not been lit up with the signs—the earth made to groan with the whole creation—and the watchmen set in motion to warn and beseech this generation all for naught. No, no; it is indicative of coming events, —the Lord is at hand. God bless you, dear Brn., we have not followed cunningly devised or any other fables, when we have made known the coming of the Lord. Some are looking sad, discouraged, trials crowd, hard times; others don't do right, have a murmuring spirit, feel bad and act bad; but now is the time for trials, we may expect them. What shall be done? Believe God, lift up your heads, toil on, rejoice, thank God and take courage. In the name of Israel's God, the truthful, reproach-bearing company are abundantly able to go up and possess the Land.

But there is a great rush for better land at this time, and they look WEST for it. The fever runs high. It is contagious. Nothing effectually can stop its progress, but a vaccination by the Abrahamic promise; and even then, you will occasionally have a case of the varioloid, and this so paralyzes the system, that the patient is unable to do anything, till he is fully restored; and not unfrequently, at a great sacrifice, he will have to take a journey to Iowa, Minnesota, or Kansas. But when he finds no soil only that which bears grain by the sweat of his brow, and that protected by "Sharpe's rifles"; he is sick, homesick, weak, faint, he groans;—next he catches a glimpse of the better land, where is no pain, no groans, no sorrow, no death, no slavery invading her territory, no deadly weapons needed there, but the soil is free. Not a stain in all that great valley. No dry bones there!! The meek shall have it, and delight in the abundance of peace. But which way shall we look for this land, this good land. Look East, West, North, South, it is all good. 'Tis the Heavenly land. O that I could see a rush for this land. Well might we sacrifice houses, shops, gold coin, honor, reputation, ease, health, comfort, and even life itself, for a prospect so enticing, so enchanting. Ah! let me belong to that beloved company that are poor in this world, but rich in faith, with a heavenly TITLE; and, glory be to God, we shall soon emigrate; the chariot are almost in SIGHT, soon you'll hear the WHISTLE. Leave all and be at the depot.

And now Brn., this is the time to show how much we love the salvation of our fellow men. Time is hasting, the sands are fast running; and the judgment is coming. Now is the time to combine all our energies and influence in this common truth, and pull those we can out of the fire. The Lord is ready to pardon and forgive; there is power in His gospel to save all who will believe. It is no time to be indifferent, lukewarm, or stupid; soon it is all over, and life, or death will be ours!

I have had good seasons of late with the faithful. I spent three Sabbaths in Providence, was heartily glad to find a little of that original faith that loves to obey the truth, and rejoice in hope of that glory so soon to be revealed.

The church seemed determined, by faith to stem the storm, and let their light shine. The Lord was indeed with them, and the meetings were interesting. There was a manifest readiness to exhort one another, and so much the more as they see the day approaching. The last Sabbath we had a communion season, which could but remind us of the time when the saints will eat bread in the kingdom of God. The spirit of the Lord was aiding them to quicken, stir up, and comfort. I left them full of hope for their future welfare.

Saturday I came to this place, where the "Puritan" pilgrims stepped upon Plymouth rock. Here I find a few who love the sound of Bible preaching, Bible faith, which believe Bible truth. I had a specially good, free time, in discoursing to them last Sunday upon the blessings of that good religion, which leads to self denial, and love of obedience; and which will give eternal life when the hope is consummated. I have concluded to stay still longer with them, hoping that good will result.

In much love, toiling, full of hope,
Thy Bro. L. S. Boutell.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 14, 1856.

Notice.

Our subscribers will please direct their letters to Bro. Merriam, as usual, until they receive farther instruction through the Crisis. M. Grant.

No Paper next week.

For several reasons, it is thought best to publish no paper next week.

1. It appears to be necessary that I should go to Conn. to remain one week at least; and as Bro. Merriam has not yet returned, it would not be convenient to issue No. 40 until week after next.

2. We wish to make some change in our compositor's room, and think this the best time to do it.

3. Our third, and chief reason is, our funds are very low at the present time, and we wait a week for the streams to flow in and fill up the treasury. We have ever found, that in time of need, there are many who are ever ready to lend their aid by extra effort, and trust that this time, we shall have a hearty response from hundreds of voices.

Brn., we need your help. Shall we be fettered, or shall we be free? We know and feel, that these are "hard times,"—but thank the Lord we are almost home, where we shall never see any oppressed in poverty's vale.

It is extremely unpleasant for us to say anything about money matters, but it seems necessary; besides, we know there are many generous hearts in the North, South, East, and West; who never put their hand to the plough and look back; who love to sacrifice for the good of others, as has been demonstrated in the past again and again,—Christians, who feel the tie of brotherhood that unites us so closely, that if "one member suffer, all the members suffer with it;" we know that they would not be at all pleased to have us keep still and be crushed for want of help, and therefore we speak. You have reduced the "Old debt" below ninety dollars, and we expect that it will soon be as though it had not been.

We believe the Lord is with us, and that the paper is exerting an influence for His glory;—if we thought otherwise we would leave it at once, but we are satisfied we are doing the will of God in scattering it among His flock. Consequently, we look with confidence and boldness to our patrons for material aid whenever it is needed.

Were the paper private property, it would be quite different, but our interests are MUTUAL. Like the poet we can say—

"We share our mutual woes;
Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear."

There are some hundreds of our patrons whose subscription has run out, or does, with this number. We presume that many are not aware of this fact, and have only to be informed, when they will gladly stretch their hand to our assistance; accordingly, we send enclosed, a note of information to those whose subscription is expired.

We may send to some who are not able to pay anything, but who love the paper;—to all such we would say,—if you will in any way inform us of the fact, you shall have it without money and without price.

Let those who can, renew their subscription immediately, that we may go on our way rejoicing in the Lord, free from all embarrassment. We make no other calculation, than that the Crisis will be well sustained, and its conductors will do the best they can to make it just such a paper as the church needs in these last day perils.

Brn., "Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

In behalf of the Committee, M. Grant.

News.

Since writing the above, we have received the following communication:

"Married, in Concord, N. H., May 1st, Eld. Jonas Merriam, to Mrs. M. C. Webster."

This news was quite unexpected to us, and if there is such a thing as rejoicing and sorrowing at the same time, then we have had the experience.

We do rejoice in knowing that our dear Bro. has "found an help, meet for him;" or to use his own language, that our "Heavenly Father has furnished him with a kind and affectionate companion, a permanent home, and to a considerable extent the common blessings of life."

May love, joy, peace and prosperity attend them through this life, and forever in paradise restored.

But we sorrow to learn that our Brother's eyes are still painful, and that there is but little prospect of immediate restoration.

We sorrow again, when we learn that he can no longer act as editor for the Crisis.

Brn., pray that the Lord may direct. If we ever needed wisdom, we need it now.

As our bark nears the shore, danger continually increases,—rocks, shoals and quicksands surround us; but we still trust in the Captain of our salvation, and expect to land soon with great shouting.

It gives us much satisfaction to know that Bro. Merriam leaves us enjoying the perfect confidence of our Brn. and Srs., in his ability and wisdom as a christian editor.

His faithful labors will never be forgotten. We thank the Lord for his acquaintance, and christian counsel, and pray that we may all meet him soon in the everlasting kingdom. M. Grant.

Correction.

In Bro. Howell's article, No. 3, in our last paper, an omission of thirteen words was made which leaves the sense somewhat obscure. The omission is little above the middle of the last column on the first page. In speaking of the part that falls from its giddy height to the foundation, he says: "it very complacently looks up, and announces its ability to demonstrate that all ought to be the foundation, and attempts the proof."

"The Key of Truth."

The friends in Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, and all other new fields, are informed that the above tract is ready for gratuitous circulation. It has been stereotyped with a design to keep the wheel rolling; hence, freewill offerings will still be acceptable. I design to scatter it by thousands upon thousands, over the new West. It contains only 12 pages, but is adapted to the wants of new places. Orders should be directed to Hastings, Minnesota, till further notice, accompanied with stamps to prepay postage, which will be only 4 cents on eight ounces—but one cent on a single copy. Let ministers and laymen send. W. Sheldon,

Letter from Sr. Mary B—.

Becket, May 3, 1856.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Waiting and weary, faint not; the Lord is soon coming to our relief; we will wait a little longer, hope a little longer, and it will all be o'er.

There are many, many temptations to endure, but if we view them rightly, we shall pray for strength to be able to bear them; and if we pray with faith, He who suffers not a sparrow to fall without his notice, will hear and answer. What a consolation that when we are tempted and tried, we can enter our closets, shut the door, and pray to our Father in secret, and he will reward us openly. "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Mary B—.

Letter from Sr. Tuttle.

Owosso, Mich. April 25th, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—The Crisis is truly a welcome visitor. It is with a thankful heart that we read its precious communications from our Brn. and Srs. We could not well do without it, deprived as we are of the privilege of meeting with those of like precious faith; but the giver of every good and perfect gift, will see that we are provided for. O let us not wander away from the fold of God. The Christian is to fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life. Soon Christ will come, and send His angels to gather His elect, from the four winds; then shall we meet all the loved ones of the Lord. Let us be ready to hail the glad day. When a few more trials are over and a few more storms are past; we shall meet to part no more. Let us be dilligent to make our calling and election sure, holding fast the beginning of our confidence, firm unto the end; that we may be made partakers with Christ, being of one heart and one mind, obedient unto the word which is able to make us wise unto salvation. If we endure unto the end, there is a crown of life in reserve for us at the appearing of Jesus;—a crown of unfading glory. I feel that we have need of patience; that after we have done the will of God we may receive the promise, for yet a little while, and He that is to come, will come and will not tarry. I believe it, and I wish not to be one of those that draw back, but one that believes unto the saving of the soul, I would ask the prayers of the scattered flock in our behalf, for we are alone in this country. The will of the Lord be done. We must be despised by the world in order to follow the meek and lowly Savior; and it ismy desire if the will of the Lord be so, that some of God's faithful ones might come this way, and give us meat in due season.

May the Lord help us to seek for glory, and immortality through Jesus Christ.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. M. Bachelor.

Pownal, Vt., May 6, '56.

Bro. Merriam:—I have long thought of writing to the Crisis, but have not come to it until now. I thought I would say a few words to the scattered saints who are waiting for the Lord.

We shall all do well to read and ponder 1 Thess. 2: 6. "Therefore, let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober." If ever we needed this exhortation, it is now, and we must have firm footing, or go with the throng to ruin.

I. Let us not sleep.—In reality, this is a time wherein we are in danger of going to sleep in reference to the things of the kingdom of Jesus, and its speedy approach.

1st. From disappointment in reference to it. When we have been disappointed in relation to a thing we desire, it is apt to produce lethargy or indifference; so it is in this case. But if we trace our disappointments in this matter, we shall see that they are not from God, but that the lo-here's, and lo-there's are of men; yet even this is an evidence that we are near the end. Offence must come, but woe to him by whom the offence or cause of stumbling cometh.

2nd. The "peace and safety" cry of the professed Church has an influence on the mind, to lull to sleep in this time of imminent danger. See 3d verse. "When they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh." This is the only sound that will please the business men of this world, and the ministry feel they must please them, because their salary depends upon these. "The hour of his judgment is come," (Rev. 14: 7,) is not in harmony with this day of enterprise, emigration and improvement; therefore there are but few that have moral courage to go counter to the popular throng. But "let us not sleep" because there are so few of the watchmen giving warning.

3d. Too many of those that once gave the warning, have left their post, and gone—some to merchandize, some to the practice of medicine, some to fables, and some to infidelity. These are so many proofs that the Master must soon come and see to his own work.

4th. There are so many new things of every sort coming in contact with us to address our senses, that many have their minds drawn from the object of faith.

5th. There are so many discouragements in all our attempts to do good, that the mind is so disheartened in the work, that sleep comes on before we are aware.

II. "Let us watch and be sober."

1st. Watch the signs of the times, for we are where we cannot go by reckoning, as our reckoning is out, and we are where we must be continually looking ahead; and trying our soundings, for we have come into perilous times. This is the most dangerous part of the voyage. "Let us not sleep as do others." Look for yourselves. Beware of false lights, for many shall come in His name, saying I am Christ.

2nd. Look to your standing in view of the judgment, lest you be cast away and lose eternal life and all its connected glories.

3d. Watch the opportunities to do good to your fellow-men. What is done must be done soon. The time of trouble is near, "The Judge standeth before the door."

4th. Be sober in all things. See Luke 21: 34–36. This is a day of excess in almost everything.

"Finally, brethren, be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace—and the God of peace shall be with you. Amen. Matthew Batchelor.

For the Crisis.

Minutes of the Central Illinois Conference of Adventists.

Conference met in St. Albans, April 18. After prayer, the Conference was called to order by Bro. L. Scott, Pres. P. B. Morgan was chosen Sec. After an opening address by P. B. Morgan, with interesting remarks by others, a business committee was appointed; when the Conference adjourned to meet on the morrow at 10 o'clock, A. M.

Saturday, 19th. After a season of prayer, the Conference was called to order, and reports heard from Churches. St. Alban's Church reported by letter from their clerk,—Bro. Wm. Shepherd. Bro. Scott and others made interesting remarks. Their number has been reduced to twenty-three; but they are enjoying quiet, with a measure of spiritual prosperity. Have no Sabbath School at present; have preaching once in four weeks by Bro. Scott. Eld. Buckley remarked that his interest in the great truths relating to the speedy coming and Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, had not declined. He believed them, as first preached by Bro. Miller and Bro. Himes; although his health would not allow him to preach,—he remained a "millerite,"—had no faith in the new notions about life and death; but wanted to exert a right influence. Since coming West he had been deceived, which was the reason of his not before co-operating with the Brethren forming this Conference. Eld. Burdett remarked, that his interest in the doctrine of the soon coming of the Lord was unshaken; it was to him of great practical importance, and he believed the Lord must come soon.

Walker's Neck Church:—Bro. C. Twombly said, that things with them were rather low, owing for the most part to brethren moving away to Minnesota. What were left remain steadfast; and although there were a good number professing the Advent truth in his (Brown) county, they were so situated that they did not so often meet together as was desirable. They have preaching a portion of the time by Eld. Scott.

McKee's Creek Church:—No delegate. Eld. Scott said he had visited them during the winter, when there seemed to be something of a revival influence among them. Eld. Winslow preaches to them a part of the time, and he believed there were some three contending for the faith.

Bascoe Church reported by Bro. Troxell and others. The once united and peaceful flock of forty good Brethren and Sisters had been greatly reduced, partly by reason of a number of brethren removing to Texas, amd partly by the course of brethren from the East, who, through mistake, did them much harm. But a few of the flock, originally gathered by our greatly esteemed Brother Chapman, now remain. Have preaching only occasionally, and had some thoughts of abandoning the effort of keeping up public worship, and wished the counsel of this Conference concerning the matter.

From the brethren in Plymouth, Ripley, and Coopers, Iowa, there was no report. Interesting remarks were made by others when the Conference adjourned to meet in the evening.

Evening.—The Conference was called to order after religious service, when the following report of the business committee was adopted by the Conference. We recommend the continuance of the last year's Board of Directors; viz., R. Bush of Walker's Neck, Eld. L. Scott and Wm. Shepherd of St. Alban's, and C. Troxell of Bascoe.—That the same be instructed to visit and ascertain what means can be raised by our several churches to sustain a preacher within the bounds of this Conference; who shall take the oversight of our Churches, setting in order the things that are wanting—laboring as an Evangelist, etc. That the same be reported to the President, who shall take means to obtain such aid if possible. Also that the appended Conference letter be published with these minutes.

Voted, That the minutes of this Conference be sent to the World's Crisis, for publication.

Voted, That we tender our thanks to the friends in this Church for their hospitalities.

Voted, That we adjourn to meet if time last, and the Lord will, in Walker's Neck, Friday before the first Sabbath in October next.

Conference Letter.

To Brethren and Churches within the range of the Central Illinois Conference of Adventists, greeting:—

Resolved, Brethren, after looking over our field as represented in our Conference, we have felt it our duty to address a few words to you concerning the things relating to our common cause. We find in many of our Churches, there exists a great spiritual dearth, and a want of interest in Gospel truth. And this, we are sorry to say, we find among those from whom we should expect better things. The present aspect is lamentable; and we fear, should time continue, not only our Conference, but our Churches even, will not exist so much as in name, unless God shall again visit us, and revive His work in our midst; which we are sure he will do, if we will heartily turn unto Him with the confession of our sins, and works meet for repentance.

We, therefore, earnestly entreat you, Brethren, that ye continue steadfast and immovable in the truth and work of the Lord. That ye give no heed to the unscriptural notion, that our work for the salvation of men is to cease before the Advent of our Lord. We exhort you to more earnest prayer for the out-pouring of God's Spirit; and to more faithfulness in the discharge of your several duties as individuals, and as churches; that ye the more earnestly seek to build each other up in faith and love. And again, as stewards of God, we exhort you to more liberality in bestowing pecuniary aid upon those who labor amongst us in word and doctrine; and that you more carefully labor to carry out the plan proposed in the constitution of this Conference.

We recommend to the Church that is weak and ready to perish, that they strive to maintain their steadfastness, and indulge no thought of abandoning their position as a Church; which we deem no less than the unspeakable calamity of God's removing the candlestick out of its place.

We believe the signs of the times, and the fulfillment of the more sure word of prophecy give us the most indubitable evidence, that we have not followed a cunningly devised fable in making known, and looking for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Let His bride make herself ready.

L. Scott, Pres.
P. B. Morgan, Sec.

For the Crisis

A Joint Inquiry.

By J. Damman.

Dear Brethren:—While reading the honest article of Bro. J. Howell on church organization, my heart was moved to say something to benefit the church of God, in the form of an inquiry on certain points touched by brother H., in his letter April 23d, in response to Bro. N. I have long seen a lack in the church of God, and mourned over it. I can say as did Bro. Howell,—I am sorry for all that I have done wrong, and feel duty bound to forgive others on the same principle. This state of mind is necessary to make a farther advancement in truth, which all Christians can do, yea, they will do so; but what shall be done now to bring about a better state of things in the church? Bro. Howell says,—"For my own part, long have I desired a permanent Church Organization, and have wept over our state, and prayed that we might have gospel order among us." Bro. H. admits there is gospel order. Can that order be understood? if so, then it can be adhered to; if not, then it can not be. Bro. H. says again, "As to the form of organization necessary to our success, that which the apostles and Christ established is the right one, with the good wholesome New Testament discipline." I humbly ask, if that organization is the right one for our success? is it not the only one? Can the Apostles be understood? Do they mean what they say? if not we cannot understand what that form of organization is. If they cannot be understood it is useless to call for a successful organization; but if they can be, then let all that can understand them, speak and act accordingly; then we have success. It is desired that we put ourselves in a position to prosper. Bro. H. says, "indeed we can, if we will submit ourselves one to another in the fear of God." Can we understand how to submit ourselves as before mentioned? if so, it can be done.

My dear Bro. H. has given a very good illustration. After bringing proof that the church is a house, a temple fitly framed and builded together, a body; he speaks of a large quantity of materials to build, as not being a house until they are framed and put together, then we have a house; but if each stick had its choice in being framed, could they be brought together and make a building that would be called fitly framed? And if each stick did submit to be framed by one man and the same rule, would they not come together without any dispute as to where they should be placed in the building? The Bible says, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one spirit, one hope." Can such speak the same things? My dear Bro. H. says again with a full heart,—"O let us rally as Israel did, after their return from the Babylonish captivity." Question; did Israel know what to do, to restore the ordinances of God's house? Was it not written—is it not written what the church shall do? If we put away from us every strange thing, must we not have a rule by which we can do it? Again; my Bro. calls on his Brn. in the ministry to begin the good work of harmony; very good, it is our duty. Then, according to his call, we must plant our feet on the divine platform. Well just as certain as there is a divine platform just so certain it can be understood, and when obeyed we shall be in harmony and peace, and go forth one united, heaven-disciplined, church. Then shall we submit to have the great Architect frame us by one rule, then all such can submit to God, and be a house fitly framed; to such a church, success, and to no other.

Yours in lo e, to agree with the plan of the Apostles and the Savior, by the help of much grace and humility,

Israel Damman.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. E. White.

Carroll, April 22, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—Having often felt a desire to address my Brethren and Sisters through the Crisis,—the Lord helping me, I would like to say a few words by way of encouragement, to my fellow pilgrims bound with me to the bar of God. We all need a great deal of grace and wisdom to keep us in the path our Master trod, and especially at the present time. Iniquity abounds to an alarming extent—the love of many is waxing cold; we see many around us that have once bid fair for the Kingdom, but have now turned their backs upon their best Friend, and are following in the wake of that vessel that is sure to be lost. I feel as though there was great danger of our minds being too much overcharged with the cares of this life, and so the great day of the Lord come upon us unawares.

Therefore, my beloved Brethren and Sisters, be strong in the Lord, be faithful in all your duties, and in a little while you will reap, if you faint not, a crown of righteousness which awaits all those who endure to the end, and I cannot find one for any others. The promises of God are sure; let us trust in them, and often be found at the throne of grace, asking for wisdom to direct us and enable us to guard well our thoughts, and the expressions of our lips, that, in all we think, say, or do, we may enjoy the sweets of an approving conscience, and the smiles of a reconciled Redeemer. Have we had much forgiven? then, God's word teaches us to love much, "for love is the fulfilling of the law," and it is love that will bind our souls fast to the throne of God. As for hidden treasures, let us search the Bible and treasure up its sacred contents,—it will make us truly wise. O, it will enrich our souls with more than Ophir's precious gold, or India's sparkling gems; in it are the seeds of life—everlasting life,—let us gather them, plant them in our hearts, and foster them with a Christian care; they will cause us to live forever.

Should this fall into the hands of a backsliden Bro. or Sr., let me say to you, try to renew your covenant with your Savior; your soul is as precious now as ever it was, you have less time to prepare for eternity, and there is none to be lost. I do believe that what is done must be done quickly. If you have felt the joys of pardoned sin, and tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, and have wandered from the path of duty, O, repent, and do your first work; do not wait for company's sake, but resolve to work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; fly to the arms of bleeding mercy, while there is a day and means of grace; seek to gain the pearl you have lost,—even the pearl of great price.

And my impenitent friends, this is the first time that I have ever addressed you through the Crisis, and it may be the last. I would entreat of you to be reconciled to God—call upon him while he is near; he has promised to hear; if you will knock at mercy's door, it shall be opened unto you. Remember, "procrastination is the thief of time"—the sands that measure life, your probationary state, are running out, they speed, they fly, make haste! secure an entrance into that rest that remains for the people of God! Turn to him now with a full purpose of heart, he will have mercy and abundantly pardon all your sins. Time's last sands are wasting away, soon the morning of the resurrection will dawn upon a guilty world, and then where can you hide? I entreat you to prepare for that day that hasteth greatly!

Brother Merriam; I am not altogether unconscious of the trying position in which you are placed, but the desire of my heart is, that the Lord may give you strength to endure a short time longer, and grant you that peace of mind that passeth all understanding; and at the last, raise you to an inheritance that is incorruptiple and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. I feel I cannot be deprived of the privilege of reading the Crisis; I prize it next to my Bible—have ever loved the spirit it has exhibited, and hope it will still continue to breathe the same love and good will to our fellow-men.

May God help us all to watch and be sober, and hope to the end. From one, hoping for salvation through Christ, at the resurrection of the just.

Obituaries.

Sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, in Hamburg, Erie Co., N. Y., on the 23d of April, 1856, ELIHU HERRON, aged about 53 years.

The humble subject of this notice was made a happy recipient of God's grace and mercy in early manhood, among the Methodists. He heard with gladness the blessed invitations of the Gospel and became a follower of Jesus; enjoying for many years, the happy tokens of Divine favor and acceptance, and living near to God.

Subsequently, reduced by the blandishments of the world and the greed of gain, which ruin multitudes in the church and out of it, he lost his first love, grew cold, and wandered far from God. Giving up his faith, he forsook the assembly of the saints, and companied with worldlings and the ungodly. Yet some degree of seriousness never left him in his greatest abandonment. Dwelling, at one time, in the midst of Sodom—so to speak,—because much filthy lucre was to be had there, he became, for awhile, the companion of scoffers and blasphemers, though not himself profane; and though no drinker, he associated with the intemperate and drunken, ministered to their appetite and trafficked in their ruin; in this, and in other ways, countenancing sin and encouraging wickedness by his presence and example. To such depths will man sink, when he forsakes his God. But blessed be His holy name, no depths are too deep for the arm of the Lord to reach, and raise, and save the fallen;—no defilement too great for Him to clean. Let us, then, magnify the goodness and mercy of the Lord, for loving the lost, and saving them from their sin.

In 1841 or 2, God again had compassion on him, calling him out of Sodom and its defilements, and bringing him to rejoice in the glorious hope, by the preaching of the coming of Christ at hand. In much sorrow for his sins and wanderings, he set out anew to serve the Lord; this time, with fuller, firmer purpose of heart, with clearer conceptions of God's truth, and a better understanding of his blessed promises. The "Blessed Hope," was now to him more blessed than ever before, for it had come nearer to him than when he first believed, and shone with greater vividness and power. The "Saints' Inheritance"—almost in sight—appeared radiant now with superior brightness and beauty,—for it had a tangibility, a reality, a glory, he had never seen before. And the clustering evidences from the prophetic Word—the unmistakable signs in the natural, moral and political world, of the glorious Appearing and Kingdom of God our Savior at hand, to consummate this hope, and bring in this glorious and everlasting Inheritance, added strength to his faith, fuel to his love, fervency to his longings, fire to his zeal and devotedness, and sweetness--inexpressible sweetness to his joy. And so it has been with every believer, who has received this heavenly truth in the love of it. Bro H. loved it with his whole soul, and its sanctifying, transforming power and effect was visible in his life and conversation, from the moment he first embraced it till his death—a period of about 14 years. During that time, he has lived faithful, consistent, and devoted, and sustained a Christian character above reproach.

Unschooled — uneducated — deficient in knowledge and ability, he yet had learned Christ, and knew God and the ways of truth and salvation. He had but one talent, yet, small as it was, he improved it; and his greatest fear was that he should let it lie hid or buried. Ye that have more, copy his example. He loved to talk of Christ—His coming Kingdom—its glories and blessedness. He loved his Bible; it was his book of books—his sweet food—his precious treasure—his heavenly guide. He loved the brethren; and so precious to him was the preaching of the Word—the good news of the Kingdom,—so sweet, the holy communion of saints, "assembling themselves together," to stir up each other's pure minds by way of remembrance and exhort one another—and so much the more as they see the Day approaching, that even when too weak and feeble for exposure, no storm, nor wet nor cold, could keep him from the assembly of believers, even when miles away. His whole soul seemed absorbed—filled—swallowed up in the things of God and the Kingdom; and he was willing to spend and be spent in the service of his Master, if he could by any means save some. He spent much of his time, in the latter years of his life, in Buffalo and Philadelphia, going among the poor, the ignorant and forsaken, in the by-lanes and alleys, distributing tracts, gathering children to Sabbath school, finding the needy, the sick and suffering, and procuring relief for their wants; talking with them, and exhorting them to give themselves to Christ and prepare for His coming and Kingdom. With many deficiencies, with much bodily and mental infirmity, and feeling himself to be the very least of his brethren,—he was yet abundant in labors; and it is believed that some will come up in the Resurrection of the just and call him blessed. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, that they may rest from their labors; and their works shall follow them."

In his sickness, Jesus was with him—his comfort and his hope. His whole thought and theme was Jesus—our blessed Savior—our coming King. His meditations of Him were sweet, and his conversation and exhortations edifying and profitable. No longer able to read, nothing gave him so much delight as to hear his friends read to him from the blessed Word, and frequently from Cumming's "Sketches," &c. And his appetite for this heavenly food was insatiate—he could never get enough.

When the final hour seemed drawing nigh, he looked down into the dark valley without a fear, for his trust was in God his Savior, who has promised to bring him again from the land of the enemy; and when at last, death came, he sank to rest—like one who falls into a sweet and peaceful sleep—in the certain and blissful hope of waking again to a happy and glorious resurrection in the bright morning of Everlasting Day.

His funeral was attended in Buffalo, by the Brn., and a suitable and excellent discourse was preached by Bro. McWilliams, from Prov. xiv. "The righteous hath hope in his death."

Died in Northfield, Mass. April 25, at 1 o'clock A. M., after a short illness of only 25 hours, Alma Ellen, youngest child of Bro. S. W. and Sr. A. E. Slate; aged 7 yrs., 1 mo., and 23 days.

Her disease was congestion of the lungs; and although all was done that the deep anxiety, and ardent love of parents and friends could suggest, and the skill of physicians could desire, to save her from the cruel power of the "king of terrors;" yet all was unavailing, and she sweetly fell asleep in the arms of that Savior who has said "suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." Most deeply afflictive to our Bro. and his family is this dispensation; yet they feel assured by the unerring word of truth, that Alma with Rachel's children, will "come again from the land of the enemy," and share the home of the blessed in that land where "they will die no more." The funeral discourse, by Bro. H. Collar, was preached from Psalm xvii. 15. He pointed his hearers, and especially the mourning friends, away to that morning of delight, when Christ our great Life-Giver shall come, and the resurrection of the just shall take place, as the time when the Christian's only hope will be consummated, and immortality bestowed.

We've laid her away 'neath the clods of the valley,
Where the low-bending willow may weep 'bove her head,
And mingle its tear-drops, at morn and at even,
With our own, as we kneel round her low, narrow bed.

We've laid her away, and our heart-strings are breaking,
How sadly we turn to our desolate home;
We circle the hearth-stone, and list for her coming,
But memory whispers, our cottage-dove's flown.

We follow the path where her little feet wandered,
And weep in the places she frequented most;
But we start at the music of birds stealing o'er us,
So like the sweet tones of the loved and the lost.

She's sleeping in Jesus; we'll hush every murmur,
Though the light of our household's extinguished, and gone:
We'll watch for the coming of Him who has promised—
To wake all the sleeping and gather them home.

S. W. BISHOP.

Northfield, May 1st, 1856.

FRENCH HOSTILITY TO AMERICA.—There has been various signs within the last year, all pointing to positive, though not admitted, hostility on the part of the French government towards the United States. The personal difficulty which occurred at Madrid with Mr. Soule rankles deeply and effects the feelings of the Empress strongly. This is no secret about Court or to Americans who have access to its society, any more than that Louis Napoleon is acted upon by these prejudices, and now, more than ever, yields to an influence which even his superstition does not resist. The effort has been to hold up our policy as grasping, and to enlist combinations for self protection.

But the most recent and marked affront offered to us was on an occasion that had peculiar significance. The American Commission appointed to investigate and examine the military operation and works connected with the late war, upon their return to Paris called upon the Minister of War, Mr. Barrion, for permission to inspect the improvements under his supervision. This courtesy, though promised previously, was bluntly refused, on the ground that the relations between the two countries were not such as to warrant it, and when the officers explained that they had heard of no cause of interruption, he persisted, and curtly closed the interview by saying, "Good-bye till the first cannon shot."

That no mistake might occur concerning the French Minister of War's indignity, each of our three commissioners reduced the facts and language to writing. All concurred on comparison, and a statement was made to Mr. Mason, who has not communicated on the subject to our government, leaving the inference that he has not acted.—N. Y. Tribune.

FRANCE AND ENGLAND.—It is well. Well, perhaps, for England. What have they gained by the two years' slaughter? Nothing for humanity, nothing for liberty, nothing for the millions who groan and pine beneath the feet of despotism. It was a foolish, ridiculous war. We have always said so. We now repeat what we have so often stated. The Emperor of France may talk of glory—and his is the only glory achieved on the side of the allies—and England may bluster, boast, and proclaim what she is now able to do in the art of slaying men, and burning and battering towns and citadels; but we ask, what have the Western Powers accomplished against Russia? The answer, in truth and equity, is—nothing.

Well, it is a hard thing for two of the most powerful nations of Europe to have been doing their utmost for two years against a solitary enemy, without inflicting more injury than is meant by nothing! But so it is. They have done their utmost by land and sea, and the result turns out to be that they have left Russia stronger than when they commenced.

Again and again, during the progress of the unfortunate and foolish war, we said the French and English should endeavor to make peace at any price. Had they made it twelve months since, when England's army was melting away before the effects of famine and cold, like snow before the sun, it would have far better. But they felt then that disgrace would attach to their names, should they yield and retire. And what have they done since? France, by a fortunate stroke, gained the Malakoff, and England was twice soundly thrashed at the Redan. The Russians, after deeds of heroism never before surpassed, then commenced their wonderful retreat across the harbor of Sebastopol, leaving the south side a heap of blood-stained ruins. The Allies gained some old houses and barracks at an expense of 200,000 men, and £200,000,000 of money, treasures which would build, arm, and make impregnable thirty Sebastopols.

That was what they gained.

A GRAND REFORM IN THE TURKISH EMPIRE—FULL LIBERTY GRANTED TO CHRISTIANS.

BEIRUT, March 10, 1856.

"Editor of the Traveller:—One of the most radical and important reforms which history ever recorded, has just had its inception in the Turkish Empire. It might be called a revolution, if that term was not associated with convulsions, anarchy and bloodshed. The liberal concessions which the Sultan has made to his Christian subjects, and the principles of future administration which have been solemnly proclaimed, will give a new face to the empire, and exert an influence even beyond its limits. Febuary 18, 1856, inaugurates a new era in the history of Turkey, and will be regarded as a date not less memorable than that of the Hejira.

The largest liberty is now granted to Christian subjects of all sects; they may build churches, maintain public worship, found schools and propagate their religion to any extent. They may also be admitted to any office of honor or profit, and their children enter any of the civil and military schools established by the government."

Says the Sultan, Abdul-Medjid, "I desire to augment the welfare and to secure the happiness of all my subjects, who in my eyes are equal.

There shall be no interference with the property, whether personal or real, of the different Christian clergy.

My Sublime Porte shall take energetic measures to secure to every sect, whatever may be the number of its adherents, full liberty for its worship.

Every distinction or appellation, tending to render any class whatever of the subjects of my empire inferior to another class, by reason of religion, language or race, shall be forever abolished by a governmental ordinance. The laws shall punish the use, whether by individuals or on the part of the authorities, of every injurious or offensive epithet.

Since all religions are and will be freely practised in my states, no subject of my empire shall be restrained in the exercise of the religion which he professes, nor shall he in any manner be disturbed in this respect. No one shall be forced to change his religion."

SPEECH OF THE EMPEROR ALEXANDER ON THE PEACE.—A letter from Moscow of the 11th, in the Constitutionnel, contains no less a document than a speech from the Emperor of Russia on the treaty of peace:—

"The war, gentlemen, is at end, for before leaving St. Petersburgh, I ratified the treaty of peace signed by the plenipotentiaries assembled at Paris. I am happy to announce this news to you officially, and to repeat before the nobles of Moscow the words which I addressed to my people in my last manifesto. Russia might have defended herself energetically for many long years, and I think that whatever force might have been brought against her, she was invulnerable on her territory. But for the real interest of the country I thought fit to listen to propositions compatible with the national honor. War is an abnormal state of things, and the greatest successes which may be obtained are not equivalent to the evils which are caused.

"The war had suspended the commercial relations of the empire with the greater part of the nations of Europe. I should certainly have continued it, had not the force of neighboring nations been raised against the policy of these latter years. My father, of imperishable memory, had his reasons for acting in the way he did. I knew his designs, and I fully adhered to them; but the treaty of Paris has fully attained the object he had in view, and I prefer that means to war. Many among you, I am aware, regret that I adhered so promptly to what was proposed to me. It was my duty as a man, and as the head of a great empire, to reject or to frankly accept; that duty I have fulfilled conscientiously, and in good faith; I feel assured that allowance will be made for the difficulties of the state of affairs, and that before long every devoted friend of Russia will do justice to my intentions, and to my views for the future welfare of the country.

"Supposing that the chance of arms had been always favorable to us as it was in Asia, the empire would have exhausted its resources in keeping up large armies on different points, and hands would have been wanting for agriculture and manufactures. Even in the government of Moscow the large industrial establishments had closed their doors. I prefer the real prosperity of the arts of peace to the vain glory of combat. I have just opened Russian ports to the commerce of the world, and the frontiers to the free circulation of foreign produce. I wish that henceforward in our markets there shall be an exchange made between the productions of every country, and those of our own soil. Several plans will shortly be communicated to you for giving an impetus to native industry, and in the realization of which I rely on every noble taking part."

The speech of his Majesty was listened to with the most profound attention.

OREGON is taking measures to be admitted into the Union, the population now amounts to fifty thousand, with more "wealth than any other community of fifty thousand on the face of the globe."

THE Christian Register says:

"It is calculated that the clergy cost the United States six millions of dollars annually, the criminals nineteen, the lawyers thirty-five, tobacco forty, and rum one hundred millions."

STARTLING PHENOMENON.—Mr. John Parker and son were attending some fish lines on the river about three miles above here, when they were surprised by a continuous, unusual roaring towards the middle of the stream; the night was without wind. Owing to the darkness, no effort was made to ascertain the cause of this strange noise, until daylight, when it was seen that a whirlpool of large extent was in active operation some two hundred yards from the Missouri shore, which still continues in operation, drawing in a great body of water; so much, indeed, that the volume of the river below is sensibly lessened. Driftwood and large floating logs go in and disappear totally. Many hundreds went up yesterday to see the strange sight. Unless this immense chasm soon fills up with water, the effect upon navigation will be calamitous indeed, for it would seem that the bottom of the river has really fallen out.—Squatter Sovereign, Atchison, Kentucky.

CHRISTIANIZED JEWS.—The Christianized Jews in the United States are to hold a Convention in New York City during the present month. The prominent matter to be considered by the Convention is the return of the Jewish people to Palistine. The Jews in England have already taken action relative to the same subject, and measures will be probably taken to secure concerted action with them.

FOREIGN NEWS.

One Week Later from Europe.

Arrival of Steamship America.

HALIFAX, May 8.—The royal mail steamship America, Capt. Wickman, arrived at this port at 11 o'clock this morning. She left Liverpool at noon on Saturday, April 27.

The America passed on the 27th of April at 8.30 P. M., steamship Asia, off Mizzen Head.

Steamship Atlantic, from New York, arrived out on Wednesday, the 23d ult., at 1.45 P. M.

The ship Orion of Boston, Capt. Libbey, at Liverpool, from New Orleans, saw ice April 6, lat. 42, lon. 38, and a large number of spars drifting about, which had been some time in the water. Query—Were they the Pacific's?

THE TREATY OF PEACE.—The London Daily News has succeeded in obtaining a copy of the text of the treaty of peace. The document is considered authentic, and contains thirty-four articles, viz:

1. Restores perpetual friendship between France, Britain, Sardinia, Turkey and Russia.

2. All territories conquered or occupied during the war, shall be reciprocally evacuated as soon as possible.

3. Russia restores to Turkey, Kars and all other parts of the Ottoman territory.

4. The Allies restore to Russia the towns and ports of Sebastopol, Balaklava, Kameischs Kertsch and Eupatoria.

5. Their Majesties, the Queen of the United Kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of the French, the Emperor of all the Russias, the King of Sardinia, and the Sultan, grant a full and entire amnesty to those of their subjects who may have been compromised by any participation whatsoever in the events of the war, in favor of the cause of the enemy. It is expressly understood that such amnesty shall extend to the subjects of each of the belligerent parties who may have continued the war, to be employed in the service of one of the other belligerents.

6. Prisoners of war shall be immediately given up on both sides.

7. Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; His Majesty the Emperor of Austria; His Majesty the Emperor of the French; His Majesty the King of Prussia; His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, and His Majesty the King of Sardinia, declare the Sublime Porte admitted to participate in the advantages of the public law and system concert of Europe. Their Majesties engage each on his part to respect the independence and the territorial integrity of the Ottoman Empire; guarantee in common the strict observance of that engagement, and will, in consequence, consider any act tending to its violation as a question of general interest.

8. If there should arise between the Sublime Porte and one or more of the other signing powers, any misunderstanding which might endanger the maintenance of their relations, the Sublime Porte and each of such powers before having recourse to the use of force, shall afford to the other contracting parties, an opportunity of preventing such an extremity by means of their mediation.

9. The Sultan communicates to the powers his firman, granting equality to Christians, which the contracting powers much approve, but divest themselves of all right thereby to interfere in the internal administration of the Ottoman Empire.

10. The Convention of July 13, 1841, closing the Bosphorus and Dardanelle is reaffirmed

11. The Black Sea is neutralized and forever forbidden to all ships of war of every power adjoining, or distant, with the exceptions specified in articles 14 and 19.

12. Trade shall be free in the Black Sea waters and ports, subject only to police regulations, and Russia and Turkey admit consuls to all ports on its shores.

13. The sea being neutralized, strongholds become useless; consequently Turkey and Russia agree neither to construct nor preserve any military maritime arsenals on that coast.

14. The Convention, regulating the force of ships for coast service is concluded individually between Turkey and Russia, but is appended to this treaty, and cannot be altered without general consent.

15 Acts of the Congress of Vienna, relative to river navigation, is applied to the Danube and its mouths, and its freedom becomes a part of the public law of Europe.

16. To carry article 15 into effect, France, Austria, Britain, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia and Turkey appoint each a delegate to put the river in a navigable state from Isatcha to Tza.

17. Austria, Bavaria, Turkey and Wurtemberg add each a delegate to the Principalities' commission, to form a permanent commission, which shall keep the river navigable and superintend its police.

18. The first named general commission will be dissolved in two years, and the permanent commission take its place.

19. Each of the contracting powers may station two small ships at the mouth of the Danube.

20. Russia assents to rectification of Bessarabian frontier. New frontier to start from the Black Sea one mile east of Lake Bourna, sola to the Akerman road along which to the valley of Grajan, passing south of Belgrade, re-ascends the river Yalpuck to Savatsika, and terminates at Wakamori, on the river Pruth. Elsewhere it is unchanged.

21. This ceded territory is annexed to Moldavia.

22. Moldavia and Wallachia continue under the suzerainty of Turkey, with guarrantee of all contracting powers, but no power shall claim individual right of interference.

23. The Porte guarantees continuance to said Principalities of freedom of religion and commerce. The contracting powers appoint a commission to meet immediately at Bucharest, to report on the present condition and wants of the Principalities.

24. The Porte will immediately convoke a divan in each Principality, to learn the wishes of the people as to definite organization.

25. Minutes thereof will be sent to Paris, where a Constitution shall be framed, which the Porte shall promulgate.

26. The Principalities shall maintain a militia, and may construct works of defence, to be approved by the Porte.

27. If the internal tranquility of the Principalities be disturbed, the Porte must consult the contracting powers, and cannot employ armed intervention without their assent.

28. Servia continues a dependency of the Porte, under powers guarranteed, and retains its national administration and freedom of religion and trade.

29. Right of garrison in Servia is reserved to the Porte, but no armed intervention permitted without the consent of the powers.

30. Ruisa and Turkey retain their possessions in Asia precisely as before the war; but their frontiers shall be marked out by survey.

31. The evacuation of Turkey by the allied and Austrian forces shall take place as soon as convenient, and the time and manner of such evacuation shall be subject to private arrangement between each of the powers and Turkey.

32. Until new engagements be made, trade shall go on as before the war.

33. A convention, contents secret, concluded between France, England and Russia, respecting the Aland Islands, shall be appended to this treaty.

24. Ratifications will be exchanged at Paris within four weeks.

GREAT BRITAIN.—The event exciting most attention was the grand review of the fleet, on Wednesday, the 23d. The papers overflow with details. One thousand spectators were present on land and sea. The fleet numbered 240 ships-of-war, big and little, all but two being steamers, comprising 34,000 horse power, 3000 guns, 33,000 men, and included 16 gun boats and three floating batteries. It extended twelve miles along waters east and west across Spithead. The fleet formed four squadrons, and performed manœuvres for the edification of the Queen. Afterward, they made a sham attack on Portsmouth Castle, and finally concluded by illuminating all the ships with colored lights.

The London Sun publishes the Treaty of Peace within a mourning border, and headed editorial respecting the fleet with the caption—"Our glory and our shame!—exciting thereby much indignation among its cotemporaries.

THE TREATY OF PEACE.—By telegraphic despatch we learn that the King of Prussia ratified the treaty of peace on Friday last, and that the Turkish ratification left Constantinople on the 10th ult.

RUSSIA.—The militia is disbanded. The admiralty has ordered all the light houses to be lit, and all the buoys to be laid down in the Gulfs of Bothnia and Finland; also on the Baltic and White Sea.

GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.—The London Morning Star, an organ of the Manchester party, says:—"We are told that at the meeting of the cabinet on Tuesday, the 22d, at which Lord Clarendon was present for the first time since his return from Paris, the answer to the United States was agreed on. Upon some points connected with the Central American question, the British Government are prepared to give way, but they will not recall Mr. Crampton, and they are prepared to communicate to the United States government that they are unanimous in their determination to continue him in his present position as British Minister at Washington."

ASIA.—The armistice was established in Asia.

The last mail from the East states that the insurgents against the Porte in Arabia have suffered so much from cholera as almost to put down the insurrection. The report affirms that 13,000 have died out of an insurgent force of 45,000.

DISTURBANCE AT SYRIA.—A serious disturbance has taken place at Naples. Rev. Mr. Lyde, the English missionary, was leaving Naples, when a half-witted Arab, looked upon by the natives as a holy man, demanded alms, and seized Mr. Lyde's gun, which was hanging before him on the saddle; unfortunately, the piece exploded, and killed the man. The Arab population immediately rose, plundered the house of the English Consul, the English School and the Greek Church; tore down the French and English flags, and ended by killing the father of the Prussian Consul, who was attempting to defend the property of the English. Mr. Lyde took refuge in the Governor's house, and was brought to Jerusalem by an escort of cavalry sent for him by the Pasha.

The North of Syria is in a very disturbed state. In and about the mountains there are 30,000 men, all carrying arms, and the Turkish government would be powerless against any rising of the people.

CHINA.—The Chinese Imperial troops have sustained a defeat, and the insurrection is active at Kiangsi.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and by Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and we have proved to my [illegible] satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may somewhat subserve the cause of humanity to permit the advertisement to the public. Lines on the Death of my Father.

By Eunice.

O, why wast thou laid thus down to rest?
Why did Death's cruel dart fall on thy breast?
Why are those pulses no longer to move?
That heart and that voice to echo in love?

Why was thy life and thy usefulness here,
Cut off in their bloom as we saw them appear?
For just at the prime of thy manhood's bright day—
Thou wast borne to Death's silent valley, away.

O! thou art not here—we feel thou art gone,
And thy friends weep sadly in silence alone;
And Heaven's bright gift is withdrawn from us now,
It is ours to submit—meekly to bow.

Perhaps our affections too closely did twine
Round the flower of love that bloomed for a time—
Our burden to lighten, our pathway to cheer,
Along the rough way of our pilgrimage here.

But shall we complain? No! but rather submit,
And cheerfully bow our will at His feet;
For high was the court where the mandate was given,
That mandate was just—'twas the mandate of Heaven.

"Not of the World."

By Maria.

A stranger and pilgrim in sadness I roam,
I'm seeking a home in the bright world to come,
Where the tears and the trials of life shall be o'er,
Where the footprints of death shall be seen never more.

I seek not the honors the world can bestow,
I ask not its pleasures—their ending is woe;
But the "honor that cometh from God," I would seek,
And the pleasures eternal He's promised the meek.

I crave not the laurels vain mortals may gain,
I would not a place 'mong Earth's famed ones obtain;
But I would have my name in life's volume enrolled,
And I'd share in that glory by prophet's foretold.

In fashion's gay circles I would not be found,
I'd choose not my friends 'mong the haughty and proud;
But I'd walk in the footsteps of One, who despised
All the glittering grandeur by worldlings most prized.

O yes, I remember my Savior was poor,
And Fame's fading chaplet His brow never wore;
'Twas no place in the halls with gay splendor adorned,
For the lone "Man of sorrows" rejected and scorned.

Like Him, I'll possess not a treasure on Earth,
Like Him, I will share not its follies and mirth;
I will choose the lone path He in suffering trod,
And I'll walk with the down-trodden people of God.

I look for a recompense when He shall come,
To gather the pilgrims to their Eden home;
Then an exile no longer by sorrow distressed,
In the land of delight I'll find permanent rest.

Glad Tidings.

In compliance with a request from Bro. Hardy, we publish the following hymn:

Glad tidings! glad tidings! the Kingdom is near,
Our glorious deliverer will soon, soon appear;
In clouds of bright glory to our rescue he'll come,
And angels will hail us to Heaven, our home.

Glad tidings! glad tidings! the Kingdom is near,
On the plains of fair Canaan we soon shall appear;
With harps tuned celestial, our voices we'll raise
To Jesus our Savior, in accents of praise.

Glad tidings! glad tidings! the Kingdom is near,
'Tis the voice of the Archangel methinks that I hear,
Arousing the nations, awaking the dead
From their cold, dusty pillows where long they have laid.

Glad tidings! glad tidings! the Kingdom is near,
Rejoice, then, ye pilgrims, your redemption is near;
The promised possession we soon shall receive,
And with Jesus in glory eternally live.

Tekel!

By Mary.

Feasting and revelry within the Halls
Of royalty and pride were reigning yet,
When Babylon's sad doom approached. The king—
Impious Belshazzar, with his courtly lords
And ladies fair, from out the vessels pure
Of God's own Temple—banqueted. Anon
Defying Him—the Jewish captives' Lord,
Praising their gods of silver, wood and stone.
But long ere this, O wretched King, thy doom
Has written been, by Heaven's recording scribe;
And thou art fated, and thy proud ones too,
Thy boasted palaces and city fair,—
The nations' wonderment—the world-wide throne,
All, all must fall—a greater wonder prove
To nations yet unborn. Thy doom is sealed!
Vain mortal! all thy boasts avail thee not—
Weighed in the balance thou art wanting found.
An heap of dross—a useless lump—worthless,
But to be burnt as stubble at the last.
The Unseen, of thy walls a parchment makes,
And thereon pens thy doom in characters
Of living light, which burn thy very heart.
Ah! dost thou change so soon before the guest
Unbidden—so mysterious, when late
In mockery, against the King of Heaven
Foremost was thou? Well mayst thou troubled be,
Well mayst thy soul within thee quail, and fear
Make all thy members shake—but 'tis too late.
The holy Prophet, captive in thy realm—
With heavenly presence showeth unto thee
The scroll's interpretation—sent of God.
Alas! the day, when in thy hardened pride thy Heart was lifted, and from thee was taken
All thou didst cherish, in thy wickedness.
Thy feasts and banquetings convivial
Have ceased forever, and thy kingly reign.
Fallen! fallen, art thou "golden city"
Of the Orient! Thy beauty—as the plain
Which suff'reth yet th' avenging fire of God!
And wasteness rules where once thy sceptre swayed.
"Desolate forever!" is thy sentence.
Just; and all thy glory, pride and power
Ensured thine end—a deep, perpetual sleep.
And wherefore thus thine end? Aye 'twas thy rule
Of tyranny, deceit and violence—
Which made the earth a wilderness, and shook
So fearfully the kingdoms, in thy hate.
Aye, for thy wrathful smiting, bringing woe
And war and slaughter, in the place of peace,
[illegible] like to thy great king.
Alas! for now, thou liest in the dust
[illegible] from age to age. Thy site,

A New Tract.

The Saint's Inheritance.

Bro. Merriam:—I wish to say to the Beloved in Christ, through the Crisis, that I have recently completed writing a tract on "The Saint's Inheritance." In this little work, we have endeavored not to leave any point of importance untouched, as may be observed by considering the following brief synopsis of contents:—The word inheritance defined—its validity, nature, duration, locality, immense value, when realized, qualifications to heirship, what man is by nature, what he must be by grace, how to attain the blessed condition, and conclusion, appendix, the invitation, poetry. From this, some idea may be formed at once as to the character of the work. It has been written under a sense of duty, believing that the present trying condition of God's children demanded it as a message of consolation and comfort,—acting as an incentive to the Church in her affliction, encouraging her notwithstanding her severe trials, and apparent difficulties, to persevere and endure to the end; while we cherish a hope that God will be pleased to honor it as that instrument which shall lead some at least, who are now out of Christ, to turn from and forsake their "idols," and "serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come." This tract is now ready for the press, and what we wish to know is this:—are we to receive sufficient encouragement from our Heavenly Father's family, to place this work in the hands of the printer, and have it published without delay? We wait to hear from our brethren, what they are willing to do in regard to this matter—how much they will contribute—how many copies they would like to have. The tract will contain about 40 pages. We will be able to furnish the work for four dollars per hundred, prepaid; one dollar for twenty-five, and 50 cts. per dozen.

We propose, also, (if able from this calculation,) to present each dollar (or over) contributor, with a copy handsomely bound. Now, brethren, reflect upon this matter, and may all, who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and have his cause at heart, who are looking for his speedy coming, be lead to see the propriety of aiding toward the promulgation of this tract, that many through its instrumentality may understand more clearly, "and know what is the hope of their calling, and what the riches of the glory of the inheritance of the saints; a hope—a glory, and an inheritance which seems to be little understood by the so-called Christian Churches in this "cloudy and dark day." Then do not let this effort, my brethren, to expose error and exhibit the true hope and the blessed inheritance as presented in the glorious gospel of Jesus the Messiah, prove a failure for the want of a little means—means that may be used now in many instances to infinite advantage, and be returned with inconceivable interest at our Lord's coming Luke. 10: 35.

And now, may the God of hope fill you with joy and peace in believing, that you may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost; that the heart of the Church may enjoy the happy and consoling influence of the Holy Comforter promised by her great Head in his absence.

And "unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory, with exceeding joy; to the only wise God and Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever, Amen.

My love be with all who love in deed and in truth the Lord Jesus Christ, to whom with the only uncreated God and Father, together with the Holy Ghost, be eternal praise and glory ascribed. Amen.

Yours in "the patient waiting for the Messiah."

N. B. All letters must be directed as above, and what is done may God help us to do quickly. It is not wise to let work lie over to perform to-morrow; that may be conveniently accomplished to-day. I would observe in conclusion, all sums forwarded, less than a dollar, may be sent in postage stamps, if convenient. W. S.

For the Crisis.

Letter from I. C. Wellcome.

May 6, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—You will be happy to learn that the Lord is still gracious to us in Hallowell, Me. During the winter just past, our meetings have been signally blessed. The spirit of reform and devotion has characterized all our social meetings, and although many of the backsliden and bigoted sectarians have stood in the way of sinners, yet several backsliders of other churches have been reclaimed, and brought to see, and joyfully embrace "the blessed hope" of the gospel. Some ten or dozen have been hopefully converted to God, a part of whom have embraced the gospel hope, and heartily rejoiced in the faith of the Lord's soon coming to reign. I have recently baptized three faithful and joyful converts. "Let us not be weary in well doing, but be "always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Your brother in Christ,

I. C. Wellcome.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. Mary Crane.

Warehouse Point, May 3, 1856.

Bro. Merriam:—I can sincerely say that I bless God for this medium of hearing from his children, who are scattered here and there in this vale of tears; it has been a source from which I have drawn consolation during the sore afflictions through which I have been called to pass for the last few months. While Death, with malignant triumph, has robbed me of the dearest and best loved of earth, those that I had fondly hoped might be spared to soothe my declining years, it has been comforting to hear from those, who, amid the changing scenes of this life, have with me taken large draughts from sorrow's cup. I do praise the Lord that life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel; and when we are forced to yield up childhood, in all its beauty and innocence, to the icy embrace of the tyrant Death, we have to sustain us, God's precious promise, that "they shall come again from the land of the enemy," in the morning of the resurrection.

They can no more cheer the loneliness of Earth by their presence, for the gentle voice is hushed in the stillness of the tomb. Tho loved form, worn with toil and care, and wasted by disease, may be resting under the green turf of our native land, on the ocean's coral bed, or in the sunny South, 'neath the tall cocoa's shade; yet it matters not, for when the trumpet sounds, they shall come forth. When sorrow's strife is o'er, then, on the everlasting heights of Canaan, we shall meet again those loved ones, "where tearful eye and care-worn brow are clothed with an eternal gladness;" and while we join angelic choristers in the song of victory, life's brief hour of sorrow shall be forgotten in the society of the redeemed, ed and the resplendent glory of the gem-walled city.

Your sister in Christ, sighing for redemption.

Mary Crane.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. J. Stockwell.

Lancaster, April 25, '56.

Bro. Merriam:—Permit me to say a few words to the dear Brethren and Sisters through the Crisis. I can truly say, be strong—O be strong. Never has such light broken into my understanding as recently. When I saw that peace was declared on the Eastern continent, contrary to all our expectations, I looked to the days of Noah to see how it was then, also to the days of Lot; I saw the world was not then deluged in war and blood. The Savior said it should be as it was then. I remembered what Paul said,—"When they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them." O my dear Brethren, is not this the time when the world will say "peace and safety," more emphatically than they ever could before? They will say,—"now the millerites have failed in every thing." This looks to me like the break of day. O what light shines upon the blessed word. The Savior will surely come; soon will he who is our life appear, to be admired in all them who believe. O what a day! What a thought to be made like our blessed Master, when he comes in his glory. My dear Brethren and Sisters, let us be wide awake; let us have on all the gospel armor,—let us see that all is right within. Farewell.

Your brother in tribulation and the patience of Jesus.

John Stockwell.

Happiness of the Child of God.—That soul whose zeal is regulated by an enlightened understanding, nourished by a calm, dispassionate love of truth, and founded upon a firm adherence to the moral attributes of God, is a plant of our heavenly Father's right hand planting, and shall be useful and happy here, and inherit eternal life hereafter. Being delivered from the dark shades of ignorance, the contradicting influence of partiality and the tyrannical ascendancy of appetite, the mind is free to think, and judge, and exercise its pious affections without obstruction, in which consists "the glorious liberty of the children of God." Free from the pitiful shackles of bigotry, such a soul enjoys a most pleasant and reviving range through all the wonders of redeeming love. The attributes, work, providence, and grace of God, afford abundant matter for his pious meditations. His active mind travels through the beauties of creation, and adores that beneficent hand, which sends us rain from heaven, and fills our hearts with food and gladness. He turns to the pages of Revelation, explores the opening beauties of the moral law, surveys the wonderful goodness of God manifested in the flesh, then rising on the wings of contemplation, with ecstasy of thought, to those salubrious regions of ineffable tranquility, "where momentary ages are no more." His soul adheres to God, as to the centre of all its desires. He finds no pleasure in existence equal to that of doing good. He looks over the face of the earth, with conscious friendship for every living creature. He mourns over the ignorance and wickedness of men, and melts into sympathetic tears for the misery of Adam's children. His enlarged and generous mind embraces the different nations of the earth with affection, and beseeches Heaven to bless all his brethren of the human race.

Pocket Deep.

Yes—say, does your religion go pocket deep? Were you converted only in the upper story—the old man only scalped,—or was he killed dead? Does your religion reach only down about that little "unruly" member, so that, cut your head off, and soul and body would both be damned; or were you converted right down through, from head to foot, "soul, body and spirit," pocket, pocket-book and all? Not merely the coppers, three cent pieces and smooth fourpences; but those dollars and Eagles, and Vs and Xs? Say, friend, when God converted you did he convert house, barn, cellar, corn-cribs, potatoe-bins, meal-bags and all? You have been praying for "a deeper work of Grace"—how deep will you have it? pocket deep? You have desired to "feel more deeply"—how deep? pocket deep? or do you only want to feel skin-deep? You don't feel as you want to, well, perhaps you never will till you feel in your pocket more.

Just think about these matters, will you? You feel for your Brother—well, just feel in your pocket. You feel for the poor,—well, feel in your pocket, You feel for the cause,—well, feel in your pocket. You feel for poor preachers—well, feel in your pocket. And if you feel there, you will make others feel and feel very thankful too, that God has some servants whose religion is pocket deep.

"O, I don't believe in talking so much about pecuniary matters,"—you don't, eh? Ah, well, I guess your religion is not quite pocket deep, yet. Try again—get a little nearer him who "was rich" and became poor" for you. You feel rather pleased when God's blessings come rolling in to your purse and dwelling—that's all right but the Lord Jesus said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Now don't shrug your shoulders so—I'm not going to beg a sixpence from you,—don't be alarmed—I wouldn't ask you to give me a dollar for all the money you have in the world. Don't fret, all I want to know is whether your religion is pocket deep, or not. Just think of it a little. I don't ask whether you would scatter everything to the four winds, if you knew the Lord was coming so that you couldn't use it—but whether you are as ready to open "the bag" now when it can be of use, as at some other time, when it will be scattered in haste and fear and do no one any good, and perhaps will do much hurt as has often been the case in time past.

In a word is your religion pocket deep, —or is it only skin deep?

H. L. Hastings.

Good Nature.

Good nature is not usually reckoned among the Christian virtues. But it is the nurse of them all. Sunshine is neither a fruit nor a flower, but it is the parent of both. What is good nature but benevolence? It bears the same relation to religious benevolence which common sense does to genius. Genius is common sense in a sublime form, applied to higher pursuits. Good nature—a happy, smiling, cheerful state of mind, which will not be offended, and will not offend, borne about in daily life, and pervading common, homely and minute affairs,—is a true benevolence, though the specialities of it may seem small and unimportant. Very few of us need the courage which would face death and carry us to martyrdom. We need a thousand times more those Christian virtues which will keep us from being snappish before breakfast; which will make us patient when some one treads upon a corn; which will quell pride upon petty provocations; that will make us attentive to the feelings of the poor and humble; which will arm us with fortitude against the little frets and bickers of domestic life; or make us kind and forbearing with men that seem harsh and unfair in their dealings with us.

Indeed, if we choose to think so, daily life is a martyrdom, and cares and annoyances are the slivers and faggots heaped about us for torment. Weariness, discouragement, irritations, disputes, misunderstandings, mean pride and meaner vanity,—these are the rabble route that gather about the victim to help immolate him.

In our day, without doubt, it requires more grace for some men to be good natured—simply and evenly good natured—than it required in some old martyrs to be burnt at the stake. There are coals hotter than any which come from wood. There is smoke more suffocating than any which faggots make. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city," Prov. 16: 32. But it is worth whatever it may cost. It will repay a man in his own spirit. It will make life golden. It is the philosopher's stone that changes dull metals to gold. It will give men power. It is not an ambitious grace, but it is a grace of signal powerfulness. No man has such advantage over others as he whom no man can provoke.—N. Y. Independent.

The Roman Catholic Cowherd.

[At a meeting held in Jane Street M. E. Church, New York, the following anecdote was related by Rev. W. Arthur, (one of the Methodist deputation from England to this country, to plead the cause of the Irish,) as an illustration of the ignorance and superstition of the Romanists in Ireland.]

He commenced by relating a story told by one of the Irish preachers. In a certain part of Ireland there lived a farmer. On a certain occasion the preacher, who was travelling the circuit, having heard of him determined to pay him a visit, which he accordingly did. Almost as soon as he entered the house, the son of Wesley opened his message, and requested the privilege of preaching in the neighborhood. This was granted; the word of God was attended with power; the Lord opened the farmer's heart, as he did that of Lydia of Thyatira, and he opened his parlor and invited the preacher to make it a preaching-place. This, of course, was accepted with gladness, and it was not long before the farmer and his family, and several of the neighbors were happily converted to God. A class was formed, and the farmer was appointed its leader. He had in his employ a cowherd, a Roman Catholic, who, hearing of what was going on, became wonderfully alarmed. It was his custom to bring the cows home at a certain hour in the day; but whenever the period arrived for the meeting he was always sure to anticipate the time by an hour, so that he might be away, and not be annoyed by the "swaddlers," as the Methodist preachers were called. While he was using all his precaution, the Spirit of God was silently, yet powerfully, working in the soul of the simple-hearted man. He had heard enough of the gospel truth, by rumor and otherwise, to awaken him to a sense of his lost condition, and he became sad and dispirited. As he went moping about with a dejected countenance, unfit for work, his wife said to him one day:

"Brian, what ails you? You are good for nothing;"

"Molly, my dear, I'm afraid I'll lose my sowl."

"Lose your sowl, man; an' how's that? Are you not the best man in the parish, and don't ye attend to all your dues and duties? What have ye been doing? Have ye been robbing anybody?"

"Nae, Molly, the truth is, I'm afraid I'll lose my sowl—indade, I'll lose my sowl!"

"Why, Brian, what makes ye think that?"

"Because," said the deeply convicted man, "I'm all dirty within."

"My advice is, that ye go immediately to the praist, and tell him all about it."

Brian accordingly went to see the holy father, and commenced telling him how bad he was, and how badly he felt.

"What's the matter, Brian?"

Brian then related the conversation which had passed between him and Molly, and closed, by saying,

"O holy father, I'm all dirty within!"

"O, you dog," said the priest, "you have been to hear the swaddlers preach."

"Not I yer riverence; I kept far enough away from them. To be sure I did, and never a one of them have I heard preach!"

The priest then tried to allay his fears about losing his soul, telling him to come to confession, and attend the mass, and all would be well. But alas! Brian grew worse and worse, until finally the priest told him to go to Loch Dergh, St. Patrick's purgatory. In the midst of Loch Dergh, or red Lake, there was a rocky island, which was called St. Patrick's Island, or the purgatory for refractory, incurable Catholics. And, indeed it was a purgatory, a bleak and dreary spot, and the banished one was obliged to go barefooted on the sharp stones, and kneel upon his bare knees, fasting and praying to the virgin, until he was restored, or had suffered sufficient to atone for his sins.

Brian accordingly went to Loch Dergh, and crossed over to St. Patrick's purgatory, where he went through with the penance on his bare knees. After remaining there some time he returned home.

As soon as his wife saw him, she said, "Well, Brian, you wont lose yer sowl now."

"Och, dear," he replied, "I've been to Loch Dergh, but I'm dirtier than I iver was before!"

"Well, then, ye must go and see father Tom again;" which he did, and the priest meeting him, said, "Well, Brian, it's all right now."

"Nae, holy father, I'm dirtier and dirtier!"

"Brian," said the priest, "you must try and get your spirits up. There is to be a dance at such a place; go, and don't forget to take a drop; it will do you good."

Brian, supposing that any advice from the clergy was right, never having been instructed otherwise, went to the dance and did take a drop, but it was a drop too much and he became intoxicated. He came home late at night, and his wife was awakened by hearing him roaring and rolling on the floor, saying, "Sure and I'll lose my sowl!" She became alarmed, and commenced crying, and together they wept and prayed as well as they knew how until morning.

This day he went to his work, and as usual brought the cows for his master; but he forgot that it was the day of the meeting. He concluded to stay and hear the preaching. The text was, "What must I do to be saved?" He found the sermon wonderfully to correspond with his own thoughts, and he became intensely interested. The preacher alluded to the different answers sometimes given to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" and among others he remarked, the poor convicted sinner is told by the priest to go to Loch Dergh, and he will be saved.

"Och, I'll declare," said Brian audibly, "it's me, sure. Haven't I been there?"

Sometimes he is asked to go and drink, and drive away his sorrows.

"Och, and wasn't it only yesterday, the praist towld me to do the same; and the divil's advice it was too."

At this the master went out and brought him in and quieted him. After the preaching was ended, Brian whispered to his master, and said,

"I would like to stay and speak to that gintleman."

When the congregation was dismissed, and they were about to hold a class-meeting, his master requested him to stay, which he did, and when he was spoken to he got up and told the whole story we had been relating. "You say," addressing the preacher, "that if I believe on the Lord Jesus Christ I shall be saved. How do you know that?"

"By the word of God," said the preacher.

"An' have you that word?"

"Here it is," said he, holding up the Bible.

"Brian sat down comforted; but before the class was through, he sprang to his feet, and seizing the preacher, he said, "What ails me, sir? I don't feel bad any more at all, at all; I'm all clane within."

"You are converted," the preacher replied.

"And when will you convert again? I'd like to have Molly converted."

He went home a happy man, walking and leaping, and praising God. When he met his wife, he exclaimed:

"O, Molly, I'm all clane within—the Lord Jesus has converted my sowl."

On Sunday morning he took Molly with him to meeting, and it was not long until she was brought to taste the pardoning love of God. Still, Brian had not forgotten his Church, and he said to his master:

"Shall I go to mass?"

The master, believing he was under the teachings and guidance of the Spirit, told him to go if he desired; he and Molly accordingly went to Church, and after the ceremony of reading the prayers in Latin was over, the priest, addressing Brian and his wife, said:

"Come up here, you heretic dog!"

(Many a man has been singled out and denounced from the altar, and not long after had a bullet shot through his heart.)

"You have deceived me, you arch heretic" continued the priest; "you have been to hear the swaddlers."

"Yes, yer riverence, glory be to God! I have been converted and so has Molly."

"How dare you speak to me thus! Go down on your knees before the altar and pray to the virgin, or I'll curse you, bell, book and candle."

Finding him unyielding, he then uttered the curse before the whole congregation. Candles were then placed around, and at the ringing of a bell the curse began. All the saints, and angels, and holy martyrs were invoked to curse him. The curse went into detail, extending to every member of his body from his hair down to his toes. He was cursed in all possible conditions and circumstances in life. Such a curse everlasting Malice only could invent. The person cursed, was cut off from all the sympathies and aid of the congregation; and if he was a merchant, mechanic, or laboring man, all custom would be at once withdrawn. After the curse he was permitted to leave, and he went out, notwithstanding, a happy man; for how can a priest "curse whom God has not cursed?"

Brian and Molly led consistent and pious lives, and died in the faith. This case, said Mr. Arthur, illustrates the condition of a vast majority of the people in Ireland.

Long Prayers.

It is questionable whether long prayers are judicious or profitable on any occasion. Prayer implies dependence, and a man who really feels his need can make his wants known in few words; but how often do we hear people in attempting to pray, spend most of the time in telling God what he is, and what he has done, and what he is going to do. If a beggar should go to the door of a rich man, and begin to tell him what a great estate he has got, and what additions he is going to make to it, and all about his affairs, he would probably shut the door and tell him to go about his business; but if he was really in earnest, he would probably say, "Sir, my friends are dying of starvation, and you are the only one who can help them, and you have promised to help any who will ask, and now do not refuse me." If he should come in this way he would probably succeed. The shortest prayer we have on record, was probably the most fervent and effectual. "Lord, save, or I perish," said Peter, when his faith began to fail; but suppose he had began to preface this request with lofty ascriptions before he had got to the place to ask for help, he would have been at the bottom of the ocean.—Morning Prayer.

For a single copy 6 months, - - - -	$1,00
For a single copy 3 months, - - - - -	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months, -	4,50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months, -	8,00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15,00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22,00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. JONAS MERRIAM, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

For the Crisis.

The Season of the First Resurrection.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I send you the following extract for the Crisis from Bro. Porter's Pamphlet on the 2300 days, which I hope all will read with careful attention. Bro. Porter, gives the following argument on the types, to show what time in the year the removal of the Church to meet Christ in the air will take place. I believe it is the truth, on this important subject. Yours in hope,

DR. A. DECKER.

THE SEASON OF THE FIRST RESURRECTION.—The previous remarks, will, I trust, have prepared the reader's mind for a careful perusal of the following inquiry into the SEASON of the removal of the Church from the earth to meet her Lord in the air.

"To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose." Eccl. 3: 1.

There are various regulations in the law of Moses respecting the great feasts, which would be of much interest to us, could we in every case discern the precise object in view. Our Lord says, "that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses." Luke xxiv: 44. Again: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in nowise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." Matt. 5: 17, 18.

There were three great festivals appointed in the law by Jehovah for the nation of Israel—the passover, the feast of weeks or pentecost, and the feast of tabernacles. On each of these occasions, it was expected of every male person that he should go up to Jerusalem to worship. "Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God, in the place which he shall choose; in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles; and they shall not appear before the Lord empty." Deut. 16: 16. Each, therefore, of these festivals was a general assembly of the people whom the Lord had chosen as his own inheritance, at the place which he had selected to put his name there. Each of these feasts had a distinctive and peculiar character, referring to the dealings of God with his people, and intended to convey instruction to their minds, to awaken their gratitude for past mercies, and to lead their hopes and expectations forward to prospective blessings.

The first in order was the feast of unleavened bread, or the passover, commemorating their deliverance from Egypt, and prefigured the redemption of the Church, by the shedding of the blood of the Lamb. One sheaf was then waved before the Lord, typifying Christ the first fruits of the spiritual harvest. After seven full weeks came pentecost, the feast of weeks, an offering of thanksgiving to the Lord, for the increase of the first fruits of the harvest; thus typifying the ingathering of the Church, as the first fruits of the labors of Christ, and represented by the two leavened loaves in contrast with the unleavened bread, and the pure grain in the sheaf, offered up on the "morrow after the Sabbath" at the passover, which was the beginning of the harvest. See Lev. 23: 10, 11. It is remarkable that these two feasts are so intimately connected, as both to be called the feast of first fruits. Lev. 26: 10. "Then ye shall bring a sheaf (or handful—see margin), of the first fruits of your harvest unto the priest, and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you;" thus showing that the pure unleavened offering of the Lord was accepted by the Father for us. Ver. 17. "Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave loaves of two tenth deals; they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baken with leaven; they are the first fruits unto the Lord." Thus prefiguring the intimate connexion that exists between Christ and his Church, "which is his body." These two offerings bounded the harvest, the one being offered at the beginning, the other at the end of the harvest. Christ the "first fruits from the dead," the first of the new creation, introducing life and immortality to a world under sentence of death, the earnest and the pledge of the resurrection of those, who, having been "planted in the likeness of his death, shall come forth from their habitations when the purpose of God is accomplished, and he shall have taken out of the nations "a people for his name," and thus the wheat harvest shall then be gathered unto the Lord.

It may be well now, in order more fully to comprehend the purposes of God, as set forth in these two feasts, to dwell more fully on the various points of the law governing their observance, that we may, if possible, ascertain how or when they are to be fulfilled. With respect to the feast of unleavened bread, or the passover, there can be no doubt of its full accomplishment—and that even in the most minute particular—in the person and work of our blessed Savior. "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." 1 Cor. 4: 7.

Let us carefully examine the requirements of the law, and see if every jot and tittle has been tulfilled.

1st. Ex. 12: 3. "Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month (the first,) 2nd v., they shall take to them every man a lamb." So Christ entered into Jerusalem before the passover at which he suffered, on the tenth day ot Nisan, the first month. John 12: 1.

2d. "Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year." 5th v "Whatsoever hath a blemish shall ye not offer, for it shall not be acceptable for you." Lev. 22: 20. So Christ our lamb was without blemish or spot. "Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth." 1 Peter 2: 22. "And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin." 1 John 3: 5. "Neither was any decéit in his mouth." Isa. 53: 9.

3d. "And ye shall keep it until the fourteenth day of the same month, and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it, between the two evenings," (see margin v. 6; see also Num. 9: 2, 3;) as the sun was going down. Deut. 16: 16 So Christ "by wicked hands was crucified and slain." Acts 2: 23. "For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together." Acts 4: 27. Here we see the whole assembly gathered together to kill the lamb, and that at the precise time of killing the paschal lamb. "And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the land until the ninth hour." "And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit; and having said this, he gave up the ghost." Luke 23: 44, 46. See also Mark 15: 34–37. See Deut. 16: 5, 6. Compare Heb. 12: 11, 12. John 19: 17, 18.

4th. The blood of the lamb was to redeem them from the power of the destroying angel, or angel of death. "And when he seeth the blood, the Lord will pass over the door, and will not suffer the destroyer to come into your house to smite you." Exod. 12: 23. So Christ, through his death, has redeemed his people from the power of him who had the power of death, that is, the devil. Heb. 2: 14. "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifested in these last times for you." 1 Peter, 1: 18. "Behold the Lamb of God, which beareth away the sin of the world." John 1: 29.

5th. They were all required to eat of it, "every man who desired to be delivered." 4th and 8th vs. So Christ says: "Except ye eat of the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." John 6: 51. That is, unless we partake of the Paschal Lamb in God's appointed way, we shall be left to the power of the destroying angel, the sentence of death being already passed upon us. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life;" (because he belongs no longer to the first creation, but to the second.) "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John 3: 36. "He that heareth my words and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." John 5: 24. Here is the simple truth; by virtue of the work and offering of Christ alone we are delivered from the power of the destroyer, death, and by faith we become partakers of the life of the second Adam, the Lord from heaven. "I give unto my sheep eternal life." Or, in the beautiful and simple language of John, the beloved disciple: "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John, 5: 12. He is not redeemed from death; dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return, is still in force against all who have their part in the first creation only.

6th. And ye shall eat it with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand,"(11th v.) to remind them that they were only sojourners in a strange land, waiting for the Lord to come and deliver them. So we who believe in Jesus are exhorted to consider ourselves as only strangers and pilgrims, and sojourners; we are "not of this world;" our citizenship is in heaven, "from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." Phil. 3: 20. We are commanded to stand in a waiting position, looking for and constantly expecting deliverance. "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; (waiting for the morning light, for the 'day-star to arise.') And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord." Luke 12: 35, 36.

7th. "Neither shall ye break a bone thereof." Ver. 46. "They brake not his legs;" see John 19: 32, 33. Thus we see that not one jot or tittle did pass away until all was fulfilled, but that Christ, as the Lamb, fulfilled every requirement of the law. Then on the "morrow after the Sabbath," the next ensuing Sabbath; that is, on the appointed first day of the week, when they were required to offer up the wave sheaf of pure grain, (unleavened) see Lev. 23: 10, 11, Christ rose from the dead and thus became the wave sheaf, or the "first fruits of them that slept," 1 Cor. 15: 20,—the very day the law directed the first fruits of the harvest to be waved before the Lord, thus showing that he (Christ) was the substance of this shadow. In him there was no sin, no leaven. The sheaf or handful, (as it reads in the margin,) no doubt prefigured not only the resurrection of the Lord, but also "the multitude of captives" which he delivered in honor of his own resurrection, to show his power over the vanquished enemy. See Matt. 27: 52, 53. Eph. 4: 8. "When he ascended up on high, he led a multitude of captives, (see margin) and gave gifts unto men." With this offering of the wave sheaf no sin offering was coupled; it was offered only with a meat-offering and a burnt-offering, thus showing the perfection of Christ. "And ye shall offer that day when ye wave the sheaf an he-lamb without blemish of the first year, for a burnt-offering unto the Lord." "And the meat-offering shall be two tenth deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the Lord for a sweet savor." Lev. 23: 12, 13. "Thou art my beloved Son. in thee I am well pleased." Luke 3: 22 Jesus was in himself a sweet savor to Jehovah. Thus we see that Jesus our blessed Lord fulfilled in himself every requirement of the law respecting the first of the three great feasts; the feast of passover or unleavened bread. from the taking of the lamb without blemish, on the tenth day of the first month, until the offering up of the wave sheaf on the morrow after the Sabbath; nor has he left one jot or one tittle in any manner unfulfilled.

Fifty days after this came the second great feast, the feast of pentecost or feast of weeks. "And ye shall count unto you, from the morrow after the Sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering; seven Sabbaths shall be complete." "Even unto the morrow after the seventh Sabbath, (the eighth or resurrection day,) shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat offering unto the Lord." "Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves of two tenth deals; they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baken with leaven; they are the first fruits unto the Lord." Here we see the Church typified by the leavened oblation of first fruits offered unto the Lord; and here again we see the wonderful union which exists between Christ and his Church; for we as well as Jesus are called the first fruits unto the Lord. "We are a kind of first fruits of his creatures, begotten of his own will." Jas. 1: 18. And inasmuch as this offering must be mixed and baked with leaven, to fulfil the requirements of the law, it is very clear that it can have no reference to the person or work of the Lord Jesus, for leaven is always in the Scriptures put as the representative of corruption or sin. "The leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy,"—"the leaven of malice and wickedness,"—"the old leaven," are phrases which must instantly occur to the mind of even a superficial reader of the divine oracles; while the warning, "know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump," and the exhortation, "Purge out, therefore, the old leaven;" and here, let it be remembered, that when the Apostle enjoins the removal of the old leaven, he does not bid us put in the new. His words are, "Purge out, therefore, the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are UNLEAVENED." 1 Cor. 5: 7. Again, the leaven (a corrupt and hidden thing) which the woman hid in three measures of meal, represents the fearful apostacy which entered into the Church in the Apostles' days, and which has ever since continued to work secretly, but surely, until it shall end at length in bringing the professing Church into that state, when puffed up with pride and riches, she shall say, "I have need of nothing," and Christ the Lord shall "spue her out of his mouth." Rev. 3: 16, 17. Where Christ and his perfect work were set forth by an offering, as we have seen in the feast of the passover, all leaven was most strictly forbidden. Not even any vessel that had contained leaven was, in any manner to be used, but "ye shall put away leaven out of your houses." Exodus, 12: 15. But when the participation with Christ, of the imperfect human worshippers, to whom evil (however unwillingly) adheres, is what a given offering typifies, (as in the feast of Pentecost,) then, as THE SYMBOL OF THIS EVIL, was the leaven to be used. No leaven, however, was allowed to be burnt on God's altar; and so, this offering having sin in it, being "mixed with leaven," could neither stand the test of the fire of the altar, nor be an offering, made by fire, of a sweet savor unto the Lord; and yet it was to be both offered and accepted; "Ye shall offer it, but it shall not be burnt." Lev. 2: 12. "For ye shall burn no leaven, or any honey, (which also is liable to fermentation or corruption,) in any offering of the Lord, made by fire." The question may be asked, Why or how then were these leavened loaves accepted? Something was offered "with it," for the sake of which the leavened first-fruits were accepted. They offered, with the leavened bread, a burnt-offering, a meat-offering, a peace-offering, and a sin-offering. Lev. 23: 17–21; Num. 28: 26–31. For leaven, being found in the oblation of first-fruits, a sin-offering was needed with it; and the priest waved all together. "The priest shall wave them, with the bread of the first-fruits, for a wave-offering before the Lord." Thus we see that the Church is blessed and accepted in CHRIST and with CHRIST. She is one with Christ. And when the Church shall be presented to God, as typified by the wave loaves, she will come, not alone, into his presence, but with the sweet savor of all that Christ has been for her, and with the witness that he has met her sin. For, as truly as the sins of the Church are laid on Christ, so truly is the righteousness of Christ imputed to the believer. "Christ also loved the Church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing ot water by the word; that he might present it to himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy, and without blemish." Eph. 5: 26, 27. "Christ shall present the Church faultless, before the presence of his glory, with exceeding joy," (Jude, v. 24;)—thus having all the value of his perfect work attached to it. In itself, it cannot stand the trial of God's holiness—for no measure of oil can neutralize the leaven—but in Christ, and with Christ, and for Christ, the Church is accepted, even as he is. "For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren," saying, "I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the Church will I sing praise unto thee." And again, "Behold I and the children which God hath given me." Heb. 2: 11–13. As Christ's death occurred at the Passover, and his RESURRECTION ALONE fulfilled the first wave-offering, the wave-sheaf, have we not every reason to believe and expect, that Jesus will receive to himself the Church, represented by the second wave-offering of two loaves? "For we, being many, are one bread and one body." 1 Cor. 10: 17,—at the season of the feast of Pentecost—for this type of the two wave loaves has never yet had its antitype—and as it was only the resurrection of Christ that fulfilled the first wave-offering of the wave-sheaf, it can only be the resurrection of the sleeping ones, and the changes from mortal to immortality, of those who are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, the great law-giver, that can fulfil the second wave-offering of the two loaves; "For we, which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not go before them which are asleep;" "For the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we, which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Here we see the whole Church—the two loaves—the risen and the changed ones, waved and accepted together, not separately, although two, but "they shall be waved together." Lev. 23: 20. The Church complete in its head. "Christ, the first-fruits, afterwards (the second FIRST FRUITS) they that are Christ's at his coming."

But again, Pentecost is called the feast of harvest, that is, the wheat harvest, (for the sheaf at the Passover was barley—barley being ripe much earlier than wheat;) "And the first fruits of thy labors, which thou hast sown in thy field." Ex. 23: 16. Is not the Church the first-fruits of the labors, or work of Christ the husbandman? He that soweth the good seed, or wheat, is the Son of Man, the field is the world, the good seed (or wheat) are the children of the kingdom, the harvest (when the first-fruits are to be offered) is the end of the age, or dispensation. Matt. 13: 36–43. "Of his own will begat he us, with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures." James 1: 18. "That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ." Eph. 1: 12. "These were redeemed from among men, the first-fruits unto God and the Lamb." Rev. 14: 4.

Pentecost was the birth-day of the Church; it was on that memorable day that she first stood forth, and on which the Holy Ghost was first given, Acts, 2: 1, whose great office is to glorify Christ, by testifying, not of himself, but of Jesus, John 16: 13–15, and thus accomplish the number of the elect, by gathering out the Church, during the absence of her Lord, typified by the seven full weeks, or fifty days, between the offering up of the sheaf and two loaves. The Church is then the first-fruits of the Spirit, born of the Spirit, sanctified by the Spirit, through the word of truth, and sealed by the Spirit until the day of redemption. Eph. 1: 3–14. That day of redemption must be the day of Pentecost. Unless this be so, I do not see how or when the type of the two wave loaves can be fulfilled, or its antitype be accomplished, for the Church is declared to be the first-fruits of the harvest, or work of Christ; and the Savior has declared, "That not one jot or tittle shall, in anywise, pass away from the law, until all be fulfilled." As the two loaves could only be offered up at that especial time, so, it appears to me, that the only time the Church can be offered up, is on the day of Pentecost. Christ rose, as the first-fruits from the dead, the first quickened by the Spirit of Holiness, the first possessor of the immortal life, the head of his body the Church, at the beginning of the harvest, as the wave sheaf of pure grain in the ear. All who are to reign with him FORM the harvest; the two loaves are offered at the end of the harvest. Ex. 24: 22. "And thou shalt observe the feast of weeks, of the first-fruits of wheat harvest."

The company spoken of in the 4th and 5th chapters of Revelation, as in heaven before the opening of the seals, or pouring out of the vials, must undoubtedly be the first-fruits. For "they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." Now it is only the first-born who have a right to the priesthood, or kingly authority. See Num. 8: 16, 17. And as all cannot attain to the authority of kings and priests, how earnestly ought we to seek, by watchfulness and prayer, to be counted worthy to escape all those things that are coming upon the earth, and thus be privileged to stand before the Son of Man. Luke 21: 36. O! for a more simple faith in the promises of God, through Jesus Christ, to enable us to walk more humbly, and for strength to walk more steadfastly; ever looking to Jesus, the author and finisher of our salvation—for he is our storehouse of all blessings and graces. Let not unbelief prevent us from attaining to this privilege. "For to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not. So we see, that they could not enter in because of unbelief; let us, therefore, fear lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." Heb. 3: 18, 19. The Church has not yet entered into her rest; there is, therefore, a fear—a danger of our losing the opportunity of entering in—through a want of faith in the promises of God. Remember, that even after the children of Israel were delivered from Egypt, and God had promised to bring them safely into the land of rest or promise, they all, with the exception of Caleb and Joshua, fell in the wilderness through their unbelief. "Behold, the Lord thy God hath set the land before thee; go up and possess it, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath said unto thee; fear not, neither be discouraged." Deut 1: 21. "Notwithstanding ye would not go up, but rebelled against the commandment of the Lord your God." Verse 26. "Ye did not believe the Lord your God; and the Lord heard the voice of your words, and was wroth, and sware, saying: [illegible] not one of this evil generation see that good land which I sware to give unto your fathers, save Caleb and Joshua, who only followed the Lord wholly and believed his word." See Num. ch. 14. "Now, all these things happened unto them for ensamples, or types; and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world have come. Wherefore, let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." 1 Cor. 10: 11, 12. "I will, therefore, put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterwards destroyed them that believed not." Jude, v. 5. "Now, whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope." Rom. 15: 4.

We have now glanced at the various points of the law governing the observance of these two feasts, the passover and pentecost; and we have seen how every jot and tittle of the law was fulfilled by our blessed Lord, Jesus Christ, with respect to the first of them. Can we, for one moment, doubt that the second one, the feast of first fruits, shall not, in every point, receive the same accurate fulfilment? No, the promise of Christ is given; "one jot or one title shall in no wise pass away from the law, until all be fulfilled; heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." Matt. 24: 35. "And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail." Luke 16: 17. Before closing, I would remark, that the address of Christ to his spouse or bride, is represented as being given at the season of Pentecost—the season of the Passover being too early, and that of the Feast of Tabernacles being too late—for this language to be appropriate. "My beloved spake, and said unto me, Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away; for, lo the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land. The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grapes give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away." Song 2.

Extract from Dr. Cumming.

And this earth itself shall be completely restored. At the fall this earth was like an island struck off by a sudden blow; or rather like a gigantic landslip from the continent of heaven; it set out under another attraction, and if God did not restrain it, it would plunge into everlasting darkness, and misery, and woe. But in that day this prodigal orb of ours shall return once more to her Father's house, and shall again appear in the sisterhood of stars, and orbs that never fell; and reflect in richer lustre, and celebrate in grander songs, the praise of Him that redeemed it by His blood, and has engraved upon it, as the brightest jewel in His diadem, 'Holiness to the Lord.' * * * *

Paradise shall return in richer beauty than the Paradise that Adam lost. The trees of every forest, like harp-strings struck by the wind, shall chant God's praise, as 'Holiness to the Lord,' the rivers as they roll sparkling to the sea, and the waves of the ocean as they beat upon a thousand shores, shall sing, 'Holiness to the Lord'; the flowers of every place, and of every season of the year, shall exhale their fragrance as their best tribute, 'Holiness to the Lord;' the desert and the wilderness shall lay aside their sorrowful apparrel, and put on more than the glory of Eden, holiness to Him that reconsecrates them again; the springs of earth shall leap up and welcome the light of that better sun. Language shall no more be the vehicle of falsehood, but of truth; music shall no more be a plaything, but the solemn and grand expression of God's praise; poetry shall no more gild a lie, but be devoted to God's glory; and all that man is, and all that is around man, and all that man knows, shall receive its consecration, 'Holiness to the Lord.'"—Dr. Cumming.

Absence of Revivals.

THE NEGLECTED SPOT.

Some of the friends of Zion are beginning to be alarmed at the general dearth of revivals in our land. One inquires, "what will become of our churches?" while another asks, "if judgment begins at the house of God, what shall be the end of them that obey not the Gospel of God?" While ever onward flows the tide of time, bearing on its troubled bosom the mighty throng, down to one general ruin.

Many are the causes assigned, to which as their issue may be ascribed this wide desolation, which as an angry current is growing more wide and deep as it rolls along. Now it is charged to a want of holy unction in the ministry; now it is the alleged effect of spurious revivals and unsound measures, and then again it is imputed to a general worldliness of the church. But are there not further up this desolating stream than these inquiries have gone, causes more real and tangible than those they have assigned; and which in our day of surpassing activities, have not, from their apparent slightness, received their deserved attention? In our religious work, have we not while engineering the larger and more imposing machinery, overlooked some of the small and hidden wheels though just as essential in our great undertakings? We have secured a popular and trained ministry; have reared holy edifices with lofty domes and towering spires; and they are adorned with the architecture of by-gone ages. We have our platforms and their stirring eloquence. We have also our church-building, church-extension, and church-publishing committees. But Oh! has the church a closet? We ask not, have the thousands, but have the tens of thousands of Israel such a spot or place, from which the earnest, fervent, persistent prayer daily ascends, "wilt thou not revive us yet again?"

The neglected spot is indeed a very humble place. It may be by the river-side as where Jacob prevailed with God; or on the mountain or in the desert, as where Jesus went to pray alone; or in the upper chamber, as where Daniel prayed with his face Zion-ward. We know it has not great attractions for the vainglorious and earthly-ambitious; for those whose religion shines brightest amid the pageantry of outward forms, or a worship seen of men. Nor is it a desirable spot to the censorious who are wont to throw down their own responsibility at a brother's door. It is devoid of display and fashion which rustles its costly folds along the broad aisle, and sits down to coolly estimate a pastor's unction with a heart congealed amid the toil of the muck-rake, or at the behest of the toilet. Yet it is a spot which Jesus loved to visit when here below; and where now,

"He deigns to meet the weakest saint upon his knees."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 28, 1856.

Notice.

In consequence of the change of Editors, all who write to this office, should direct to Elder MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass., Editor of the World's Crisis.

A Request.

We would ask those who send articles to the Crisis, to write in a very course hand, and to be very particular to write the names of persons and places, in the plainest manner possible.

When you send orders for the Crisis, or books, be sure and mention the State as well as the town.

Money has been sent without any name of town, county, or State. In such cases, we can neither return the money, nor send the paper.

Brn., be particular about this point, that no more such cases occur.

Please notice THE PARTICULAR RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS, near the top of the first column on the first page of the Crisis.

Our Visit to Connecticut.

Monday, May 12th, I left Boston with my companion, and met Bro. Mathewson at Worcester, who accompanied us to his quiet dwelling by the hill side in Barkerville.

There is no spot on earth so dear to me, as this pilgrim, bethel-home.

Here, I have rested when weary and worn; here, have rejoiced, sung praises, and prayed; here, we have felt the approval of heaven, and had foretaste of joys to come.

Near by, runs a stream, in whose limpid waters many disciples of Jesus have been buried in baptism, and risen again to make the high rock, the glen and the hills, echo and re-echo with heart gushing praise.

Here, at this peaceful abode, the Christian pilgrim feels as free, as when he breathes alone the pure mountain air, where there is no one to listen but Him who made the hills around.

Near the house, in a quiet, pleasant spot, sleeps one who left all for Jesus, and bore with calm composure the frowns of a wicked world, till death drew its dark veil to hide its prize from the storms of life.

There sweet be thy rest, till the rude strife's o'er,
And then with the blest, meet to part no more.

Tuesday, 13th, we went to Winsted, and were greeted with a hearty welcome, by our former acquaintances, brethren and sisters in Christ; but the spoiler has been there, and left deep traces of his footsteps. I am thankful his days are numbered, and that the restitution is at hand.

Tuesday P. M., we visited the home of my boyhood, to see my good mother, who is nearly eighty-three years of age. She is trusting in the Lord, and finds the Christian religion a sweet comfort in her declining years.

In the evening some of the children of the Lord from Winsted, Collinsville, and Pleasant Valley assembled at Bro. Mathewson's, and had a pleasant interview, while speaking of the glories of the coming Kingdom. One young man, the son of a widow, was persuaded to give himself to the Lord, and is now waiting an opportunity for baptism.

Wednesday evening, we met the Brn. in Pleasant Valley, who appear steadfast, and determined to endure unto the end. They find, as do others, that the Christian's life is one of warfare, but are satisfied victory is near, and that the triumph will be glorious.

Thursday evening, we had an interesting congregation at Bro. Harris', in Bakerville, about one-half mile from Bro. Mathewson's. At the close of the meeting, we sat down to the table to commemorate the sufferings of our dear Savior, and truly it was a heavenly place. We parted with a strong determination to meet, by the help of the Lord, at the marriage supper of the Lamb. Sister Harris was much comforted. She has been confined to her bed for a number of years, but is slowly recovering. She has received much benefit recently from Bro. Higgins' medicines, attended with the blessing of the Lord. She has been unable to speak a loud word for a long time, until since she has taken the above mentioned medicine. Her voice is now restored, and she hopes to be soon, where the inhabitants shall never say I am sick.

Saturday, we went to Cheshire, and met the Brn. in their pleasant chapel in the evening, and three times on the Lord's day. We felt comforted while talking of the better land—the earth renewed—the kingdom ruled by the Prince of Peace.

Tuesday evening we had an interesting meeting in Waterbury. They are holding fast to the blessed hope, and are resolved by the help of the Lord to endure to the end. When we arrived, we found one waiting to be buried in Baptism, who was much blessed in obeying the Lord in the discharge of this duty.

The church in Waterbury have stood firm amid storms which have shipwrecked and ruined others. It was cheering to hear their songs of praise, and resolutions to be firm in the faith of the gospel, until the conflict is ended. Fight on, be bold, yet meek, and may we soon meet in paradise restored, and dwell in peace and glory in its elysian fields, where widow's tears and orphan-sighs are changed to songs of sweetest harmony. Let the bright day roll on with lightning speed.

"Fly swifter round ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

Wednesday evening, we had a large gathering in Plymouth Hollow of those who love the blessed hope, and have resolved to "fight the good fight of faith," and be ready for the revelation of the Son of man. They feel, like others, that these are "perilous times," but that the grace of God is sufficient for all emergencies.

We felt refreshed and strengthened by our meeting, and parted with a firm resolution to meet where parting hands are not given, and the word farewell not spoken.

Thursday evening, May 22nd we met our Brn. and Srs. in Bristol Ct., and had a pleasing interview together. There are some in this place who have faced the storm for many years, and have no thoughts of turning back. The Christian's hope is their all.

Most of those who acknowledged Christ one year since, are holding fast the profession of their faith, and are trying to "keep themselves unspotted from the world."

One general feeling seems to prevail among the Lord's children, which is, that they never found it more difficult to make progress than at the present time.

Thus ends my visit to Ct. I have been comforted in the society of the saints of the Lord, and am thankful for the pleasant seasons we have enjoyed in singing, conversation and prayer.

I very much regret that I cannot visit several other places, but I must return, praying the Lord to bless all the dear children of God that we have not seen, as well as those whose society we have enjoyed.

I had purposed to spend a month in Conn., but am obliged to return and attend to the Crisis for the present, until other arrangements can be made. Pray for me dear Brn. and Srs., that I may have the wisdom that cometh from above.

Friday morning we took leave of our dear Bro. and Sr. Mathewson, who have accompanied us, and labored in the gospel with us, with whom we have often rejoiced, and sung praises, in the bright hope of soon being in the everlasting kingdom.

Let me say to each and all with whom we have met, as well as those with whom we have labored in days past, "be strong in the Lord."

Question.

A correspondent asks for our opinion on Matt. 17: 3. "And behold there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him."

ANSWER.

This appearance was on the mount of transfiguration, when Peter, James and John were present.

The second verse tells us, that the Savior's "face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light."

This change in his appearance was only temporary, for when he came down from the Mount he appeared as usual.

In the ninth verse, He instructs His disciples to "tell the VISION to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead."

This being a vision, it was not necessary that Moses and Elias should have been actually present any more than that the four great beasts that Daniel saw in vision, should have risen out of the sea, and established and demolished the four great kingdoms, while Daniel was in vision.

Things appeared to John upon the isle of Patmos, that are not yet accomplished. He "saw (in vision) a new heaven, and a new earth;" but they are not yet prepared. We understand that the vision was designed to show the disciples, who were present, what will be the future appearance of the Savior, when in his kingdom in company with Moses and Elias, as well as all the rest of the saints of God.

It will be noticed that Moses and Elias appeared to be as truly present as the Savior, not in a disembodied form, but in reality, but as it was a vision to the disciples, it follows as a matter of consequence, that they saw them only in this way, just as John saw things on the Lord's day some eighteen hundred years since, that have not yet had an existence.

If it were not a vision, then Moses and Elias must have been really present. Elias (or Elijah) was translated, and did not see death; hence, if he was on the mount of transfiguration, he was there with a material organism; and as Moses appeared as truly there as Elias, he too must have had a material body, which could not be without a resurrection from the dead. If the scene on the mount was not declared to be a vision, we should think this to be the case; for we read in Jude 9, that "Michael, the archangel, when contending with the devil, he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, the Lord rebuke thee."

It is not said that this contention was in relation to the resurrection of Moses, but we say, this would be our conclusion, if it could be shown that the transfiguration was not a vision, but the Savior has spoken, therefore, we believe.

If we turn for a moment to the record of the death of Moses, we shall see it a clear point, that he could not have been upon the mount except in vision, without a resurrection. Deut. 31: 16. "And the Lord said unto Moses, behold thou shalt sleep with thy fathers."

What does the pronoun "THOU" represent? If Moses be a conscious man inside of and distinct from the body, then, we freely admit that the word "thou" stands for him. One thing must be certain—that this word represents whatever constitutes Moses; then all that is indicated by this name, must "sleep," (margin) "lie down."

Deut. 32: 48–51. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, get thee up into this mountain,——and die in the mount whither thou goest up,——because ye trespassed against me——at the waters of Meribah-Kadesh."

Deut. 34: 5. "So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord." This is plain. Whatever constitutes Moses, did die, and when dead, he cannot be alive at the same time; hence, if he was on the mount of transfiguration with Elias, who did not die, he must have had a resurrection.

But why did he die? Because he trespassed at the waters of Meribah-Kadesh. If modern theology were true, Moses entered Heaven much sooner on account of his trespass, than he would have done, if he had pleased the Lord like Joshua.

Please read Josh. 1: 1–2. "The Lord spake unto Joshua, saying, Moses my servant is DEAD, now therefore, arise, go over this Jordan."

Did the Lord speak the truth? Did he not know better than any one else, the true state of Moses? "How readest thou?" MOSES IS DEAD.

M. GRANT.

To the Patrons of the Crisis.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—When our beloved Bro. Merriam, compelled by ill health, left the office that he might be releived of its labors, and be permitted to enjoy the quietness of the country for a season; we hoped that he might be restored to his usual health, and be able to resume his duties as editor, which he so faithfully and satisfactorily performed from the commencement of his labors, to the close thereof. But we are disappointed; he can no longer serve "the household" in the capacity of an editor; and since this has been manifest, it has been our earnest desire and fervent prayer, that "our Heavenly Father" would so direct in the selection of some faithful "Man of God," to perform the arduous and trying duties of an editor, that the Crisis may maintain its present high position for christian kindness, "the church of God" be edified and comforted, the note of warning be sounded, and that we as servants of "the household," may have the consciousness that we have performed our part with an eye single to the glory of God.

In accordance with the above, the committee met at the Crisis office on Saturday May 24th, and after a free and full expression of sentiment, Elder Miles Grant was unanimously chosen Editor of The World's Crisis;—and although our beloved Bro. felt a strong reluctance in accepting the office, in view of his labors as a minister of the Lord, and as a pastor; yet with a heart "ready to every good word and work," so pleasing to our Father, he accepts; with the earnest desire that all lovers of God, who may peruse the columns of the Crisis, will remember him in their prayers; "praying always whit all prayer and supplication in the spirit," that God may direct him in all his labors to His glory, and the greatest good of the church. We hope that all the friends will do what they can to increase the circulation of the Crisis.

Brn. and Srs., let us work for the Lord—be decided, earnest, active in the performance of every duty that may devolve upon us; then God will be glorified, we shall stand clear in "the great day," and forever enjoy "an eternal weight of glory" in "the paradise of God."

In behalf of the committee,

GEO. T. ADAMS.

Appointments Withdrawn.

BRO. GRANT:—Please say through the Crisis, that I shall be unable to fill my appointments as they stand, for the following reason:—I have been gone from home some eight months, during which time I have labored mostly in new and destitute places. In every place I have found an ear to hear, and I have the most cheering satisfaction of knowing that my labors have not been altogether in vain. I have seen a number of sinners converted, and backsliders reclaimed, and the very few brethren where I have traveled, have been made glad by hearing the word of life. To God be all the glory. Amen.

Yesterday I started for home, but my horse was unexpectedly taken sick, and died on the road. Thus, instead of going to my appointment, I am at the friendly pilgrim's home of Bro. A. Gage, in this place, waiting for the opening of Providence, knowing that God doeth all things well. Amen. Glory to God. My trust is alone in him.

Yours in love, S. W. BISHOP.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. J. B. Dodge.

TO THE SCATTERED FLOCK:—Brethren and Sisters—'Tis a long time since I have attempted to write an article for our excellent paper. I had rather keep still and let others who are more competent fill its columns, but if all should do so, our paper would not be so interesting as it is now. Though we are separated far from each other, scattered here and there like sheep on the mountains, we can, through the Crisis, encourage and exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. How it has cheered my heart to read and learn how my Brethren are getting along, that they have not cast away their confidence in God, but are holding on to the precious promises revealed in the Word of Life. Let none of us be discouraged, though we are scattered and surrounded by a wicked and evil generation, who know us not and who count us as the filth and offscouring of the world; yet there is one who knows us, who will soon manifest himself to our joy, and to the shame of those that have cast us out for his name's sake. O, let us fear not, for none of the sheep will be overlooked and left in that day; but all that have been faithful, will be gathered into one fold, and one shepherd will feed them; and none shall hunger nor thirst any more; we shall then drink of the fountain of living waters, and eat the fruit of the tree of life, which is in the Paradise of God. You who have been deprived of your little ones by the enemy, rejoice, for his power will soon be forever broken, for death and hell, or the grave, must soon give up its prey; for our Redeemer holds the keys, and will unlock and bid the sleeping awake and sing. O, Brethren, be faithful; 'tis a trying time for us, many are drawing back and absenting themselves from our meetings, that were once active, and seemed happy in the Lord, but are now becoming entangled with the world, and seem to lose all confidence in the Lord's soon coming. This, and peace and safety are the last signs.

Now let us watch more than ever, for we shall soon hear the trump of God, and beyond that the songs of the redeemed and a great multitude, saying, "the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

For the Crisis

Letter from Bro. L. Mills.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I have long felt like writing a few lines for the Crisis in this time of trial; through which, those who have been looking for their Savior's return, are called to pass. Although it is indeed a trying time, I do not feel like giving up the glorious hope. No, I never can; for it is an anchor to my soul both sure and steadfast; and He that hath this hope within him, purifieth himself even as he is pure. Neither do I wish to return to Egypt from whence I came, and again become entangled in the yoke of bondage, for at the end of the race there lies a prize, and a promise is left us that those who endure to the end, shall be saved; and he that has promised is faithful to His word, and though heaven and earth may pass away, his word can never fail.

The days and hours of our probation are fast declining, and the day in which every man's work shall be made manifest is close at hand; therefore, let us not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of our mind, that we may prove what is that good and acceptable will of God.

Reader, are you prepared for the event which is soon to burst on this wicked world, and awaken the careless sinner, and slumbering professor to appear before the bar of God? Am I prepared to stand at the judgment scene to answer for the deeds done here in the body? If not, may the Lord help us to prepare for the coming of the King of Kings.

Bro. or Sister, are you tired and weary of this world's rude strife, and longing to reach a better home? If so, keep yourself in the love of God, and wait the appearing of Jesus Christ; for unto them that look for him will "he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Now listen to your Savior's words—"Fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath hath prepared for them that love him."

Therefore, let us strive to enter in at the straight gate which leads to life, that when the sorrows of the wicked shall commence, our mourning may have an end, and our joys may be full.

Your Bro. in hope,

L. MILLS.

We live upon our papers and little prayer-meetings, and once in a while we are refreshed by some of the ministering brethren who are directed this way. Sometimes I am almost discouraged, when I look around, but I see no better way than to hold on to the promises made to those who endure to the end. I want to be faithful, and I try to be consistent, that I may bring no reproach upon the suffering cause of Christ. At times I feel afraid I shall be overcome, but I trust the Lord for grace to enable me to live in obedience to his commands, that I may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that are coming on the earth, and stand before the Son of Man blameless in that day.

And now, Brn. and Srs., one word about the Crisis. Let the debt be paid. A trifle from each will do it. I don't know how it is with the rest, but it wears upon me, when I know the holiest men in the Advent body are burdened with debts, which ought to be paid by those who have this world's goods. Truly,

"The meek are burdened, driven,
Want and care to them are given."

But the day is coming when the meek shall rejoice, and the oppressed be free. Lord, let it come, and may you and I, dear reader, be found among those who have done the commandments.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. A. Chandler.

Bro. Merriam:—While perusing the sacred volume, my heart glowed with love and gratitude to the great Author, for manifesting such unbounded interest in the well-being and future happiness of mankind. And I feel constrained to impart to others that impress of love and admiration, which I feel stamped upon my heart.

Let us for a moment consider the language of the apostle Peter, in the exaltation of his character.

In the second epistle, ch. 13–4, "According as his (God's) divine power hath given unto us ALL things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him (Christ) that hath called us to glory and to virtue; whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises." True, as finite beings we can but very poorly appreciate such unlimited benevolence. But vague as our conceptions may be of such sovereign generosity to ALL, we can realize enough to call forth our noblest powers in the adoration of his name, and establish our hearts in the faith, once delivered to the saints.

Peter says, "beside this, add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge." It is plain to every mind, that christian virtue will give courage, and how essential for the standard bearer of the Prince Immanuel," to "be bold as a lion" in the reform of his fellows; for he must meet the mighty shafts of derision; hence, like men of God let us have the armor on; but this alone will not insure success; we must "add to this virtue knowledge," that we may act understandingly. Yes, implore wisdom, for "to be wise as serpents, and harmless as doves," is the desire of the obedient, and it will reveal that jewel, consistency. Far too many have been emboldened by the promises of God to act unwisely, without caution, and therefore not according to "knowledge."

Next, "add to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience." These constitute those accomplishments that should adorn the christian life. Hence, then, the necessity of "temperance," not only in meat and drink, but in the use of that most poisonous of all things, human passion, and an unruly tongue. Oh! how great the reproach on the church of Christ caused by an intemperate use of language, in the absence of "patience." Then to "patience add godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity." What an exalted privilege to "be the partakers of the divine nature" of God; love mercy, and justice, and as far as possible ameliorate the condition of the bondmen in every time of need; and with a cheerful heart, lend a helping hand; this is "godliness." O charity! thou sweetest sister of the group,—the crowning beauty and complete adornment of the christian character. This comprehends the change of heart enjoined by our Redeemer. How can men reject the wise counsel, of such an exalted yet compassionate teacher, to leave the paths of vice and folly, and share the honors of his coronation, and a life of eternal felicity in a land of universal freedom,—a land of floral loveliness of paradisical beauty—

"Where ambrosial zephyrs blow,
Where life's placid waters flow"—

to be perpetuated as long as the throne of God. Doubtless many may resolve to love and revere Him, but lack christian courage to tell the world so. Now suppose a man desires, and is ambitious to become master of Mathematics; would he not go to the professor of that science and tell him the desire of his heart, and solicit his assistance, then adhere strictly to his dictation, and call into lively exercise his mental powers?—would not the class engaged in the same study be familiar with his progress? In like manner, the seeker for an heirship with Christ must tell him his wish, then he is adopted into the royal family by conforming to his simple requirements.

I hope there are many that will look at this subject with interest. There are none so very unwise as to think of relying wholly upon their prayers of faith to supply their temporal wants, for seed will not grow and reward them with plenty, without they act; so let us not be hearers only, but doers of the word. My prayer is, that love and unity may by their golden chains bind us all to Christ, till with Job our eyes shall behold Him the peaceful Monarch of the earth.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. S. P. Judson.

Bro. Merriam:—For a long time I have desired to express some views on points pertaining to our blessed hope, but it did not occur to me that the Crisis could be used as a medium, until my attention was called to the fact by a friend. I wish to say some things with reference to the "two witnesses," spoken of in Rev. 11 ch. I think the facts in their history as given by the prophetic Word, will give us unerring light on the subject of "time," if not "definite time."

There are some things also I should like to say about the 15th and 17th chaps. of Rev.; also on the great question of life only in Chrrst. I should like to examine some features of the glorious Kingdom promised to those who love God.

I do not know that I shall have the happiness to agree with all—probably not even a majority of Brn.,—though I should hope, with some. What I write, I shall write over my own signature, and of course, expect to take the responsibility of what is said. The WORD will be my source of evidence. If the columns of the Crisis are open to the candid expression of views honestly entertained on these subjects, I should cheerfully embrace the opportunity to offer mine for publication.

I said I should write over my own signature and expected to take the responsibility of what was said. I do not mean by that that an editer has no responsibility in the matter. He certainly has. But when a writer expresses his views candidly, affixing his name to an article, I do not think an editor need regard himself as under obligation to correct every man's theology. Had he readers that were ignorant and unaccustomed to think, it might be well for him to do so. But if his readers are accustomed to examine evidence, and receive only what they think is proven; surely, he may confide in their judgment and wisdom to an extent, as well as his own.

It certainly could not be regarded as profitable, for a Bro. having charge of a prayer and conference meeting, for the purpose of giving a sort of general direction to the exercises; to rise after each one had spoken, pass his criticisms on what had been said, point out the errors and state what was regarded as truth, &c., yet things might be said so grossly erroneous as to demand a correction. So an editor might see fit to publish an article that would demand remarks by way of explanation or correction. But I think the case rarely occurs. However, of this he must be his own judge. An editor must have a discriminating power. There is no way to avoid it. He must have the right to publish and reject what he thinks best, and to say what he pleases. To the possession of this power, no reasonable man can object. It is of the abuse of it, of which we have a right to complain. I know of no way to correct the evil when it exists, only, when a man is editor of a paper belonging to others, for those persons to remove him. But if he is editor of his own paper, to let him and his paper alone.

Should any articles I may write, find a place in the Crisis, and should any one be disposed to review or criticise them, I cannot promise a rejoinder. I have not the means to subscribe for any paper, and hence receive none only what are sent to me gratuitously. I might therefore, not see the reviews or criticisms. And it is very doubtful whether I should be disposed to reply if I should.

What I desire, in common with other Brn., is the Truth. And my prayer is that we may all attain to a knowledge of it, and that its transforming power may be felt on all our hearts, to fit us for the coming and Kingdom of our blessed Lord.

Yours in hope, L. P. Judson.

Honeoye, Ont. Co. N. Y. Apl. 30, '56.

We are pleased with the remarks of our Bro. and hope to receive frequent articles from his pen. M. d.

Important from Kansas.—The Hotel and Printing Office in Lawrence Destroyed.—A Despatch has been received by Dr. Webb, the Secretary of the Emigrant Aid Company, dated St. Louis, May 4, stating that Lawrence has been attacked, and the Hotel of the Emigrant Aid Company and the Printing office of the Herald of Freedom destroyed! Several lives were lost.

The above dispatch confirms the following, which appeared in the New York Herald, the authenticity of which was so doubtful that it was not telegraphed to this city:

St. Louis, May 21.—A dispatch from Boonville to the Republican, says; Lawrence was destroyed on Wednesday. The hotel and printing-office in Kansas City were also demolished. But few lives were lost. Particulars are expected by the steamer to-night.

The correspondent of the Democrat, at Leavenworth, writes:—Since Messrs. Robinson, Reeder, Lane and other leaders are absent, the Committee of Public Safety at Lawrence have determined to offer no resistance to the United States Marshal entering the city. Immediate measures were taken to hide all all the arms and ammunitions in the town as soon as this determination was made known, and crowds of people commenced leaving.

It is said the free State men are gathering at Topeka, and will attack the invaders if they dare to execute their threats on Lawrence. Settlers at Van Bonsa, recently from New Haven, will send 100 men to aid them, and Manhattan about the same number.

Washington, May 24. A telegraphic dispatch was received here to-day, which states that a collision had taken place between the U. S. authorities and the free State men, by which the town of Lawrence was destroyed, and a number of persons killed. It has caused the most intense excitement

I saw the President this evening, and he expresses some doubt as to its authenticity. The dispatch is dated Louisville, whereas it should come from St Louisville to be authentic.

The Expenses of Queendom.—In June, 1837, at the age of 18, Victoria succeeded to the crown, on the death of her uncle William IV. Soon after, as is the custom at the commencement of a new reign, the existing Parliament was dissolved, a general election took place, and the new Legislature, among other important business, had to settle the question of the Civil List—in other words, to fix and vote the amount of the annual allowance or pension to be paid to "Her Most Gracious Majesty."

Accordingly, two days before the Christmas of 1837, the Queen had the pleasure of giving her official assent to an Act of Parliament, settling £385,000 a year (or nearly $2,000,000) upon herself for life. This allowance, which was £10,000 more than had been paid to her uncles, "Gentleman George," and "Sailor Billy," was voted as adequate provision for the support of the honor and dignity of the Crown."

We have included, as a great pecuniary advantage to Victoria, her being lodged rent-free in the Royal Palaces, without being called upon, as tenants usually are, to incur the cost of repairs and alterations. This may appear to be not very considerable, but really is enormous. The sum voted in the estimates for royal palaces, buildings, parks, gardens, was £221,885 in 1854; increased to £224,496 in 1855; and further extended to £249,693 in the present year. Add to this the sum of £668,000 which is the Queen's actual income, and £60,000 to Prince Albert from all sources, (without including the annuities to the Duchess of Kent, Duchess of Gloucester, Duchess of Cambridge, Duke of Cambridge, Princess Augusta of Cambridge, Princess Mary of Cambridge, and King Leopold of Belgium, making £110,000 extra,) and the Queen of England and her husband will be found to receive as much as £977,693 a year, and all this for wholly personal and domestic expenditure—and savings.

Mr. Crampton's Dismissal Decided Upon—Warlike Rumors.—New York, May 26. Mr. Crampton, the British Minister, will receive his dismissal to-morrow; also the Consuls. Dispatches will go by the next steamer to Mr. Dallas, announcing that the President, upon the international question, would perhaps have been satisfied with Lord Clarendon's last dispatch, but on other points he is so decided that Marcy's dispatch will be likely to cause a sensation in England. It is believed that Crampton has authority to give, and will give, immediately on his dismissal, such orders to the British squadron in the West Indies as will most likely lead to a sudden collision. The President contemplates sending a message to Congress on this subject to-morrow.

The Methodists of Huntville, Ala., have a lottery scheme under way, for the benefit of the Andrew Female College. Rev. John H. Caldwell is apparently the prime mover in the speculation. $110,000 is to be collected in $20 instalments, (price per ticket) of which $75,000 is to be paid in premiums. It is expected to raise $30,000 for the College by this means.

Later from Kansas.—Reign of terror in the Territory.—Chicago, Wednesday, May 21, 1856.—Dates from Leavenworth, Kansas, to Saturday last are received. Wednesday (to-day) had been fixed upon for the attack on Lawrence. There is a general reign of terror in the Territory. Two cannon had crossed the river at Chison, destined for Lawrence. Buford's regiment were enrolled in the militia, and furnished with United States arms by Gov. Shannon. The Free-State men want arms and ammunition. Donaldson (United States Marshal) has proclaimed his intention to make clean work of what he has to do this time.

Gov. Robinson is still imprisoned at Lexington.

The Kansas correspondent of the St. Louis Democrat writes under date of the 16th inst. that eight to twelve hundred men were encamped near Lecompton.

The Burlington, Iowa, Gazette, says that while some workmen were engaged in excavating for the cellar of Gov. Grimes' new building on the corner of Main and Valley Streets, they came upon an arched vault, ten feet square; which, on being opened, was found to contain eight human skeletons of gigantic proportions. The walls of the vault were about fourteen inches thick, well laid up with cement or indestructible mortar.

The vault is about six feet deep from the base to the arch. The skeletons are in a good state of preservation, and are the largest human remains ever found, being a little over eight feet long.

France.—A bill was introduced into the Legislature, granting four hundred thousand francs ($76,000) for the baptism of the Imperial Prince in June. The Moniteur publishes the monthly account of the Bank of France, and the balance was satisfactory.

It is said that one hundred clergymen have within a short period seceded from the ministry and communion of the English Church to join that of Rome—a number unparalleled since the days of Cranmer.

FOREIGN NEWS.

One Week Later from Europe.

Arrival of Steamship Canada.

Halifax, Tuesday, May 20, 1856.—The Royal Mail steamship Canada, Capt. Lang, from Liverpool on the afternoon of Saturday, May 10, arrived here at 8.30 this evening.

Italy.—The condition of Italy seriously affected as it is by the close of the Eastern question, menaces the sovereigns and statesmen of Western Europe. Though in their heartlessness they are still willing to surrender that country to an atrocious domination, they are nevertheless alarmed at the prospect of twenty millions of people driven to despair by such saturnalia of tyranny. In Italy, more than any other spot of the Europeen world, the powers working to the degradation of humanity are indissolubly blended together, and in Italy they fight hardest for their existence. Outbreaks, therefore, are looked for, even by those most averse to revolutions. Not sympathy, certainly, but perhaps dread of such a contagious eruption, forced from Louis Bonaparte the saying, "What can be done for Italy?" But what can be done? The evil is of such gigantic dimensions, it so involves vital fibres of the State, that half-measures cannot cure it. If the axe be not laid at the root, pruning will be worse than useless.

Whatever the rage of Austria, Piedmont will continue to march onward, and develop political freedom and material prosperity.

A far heavier and deadlier incubus on Italy than Austria, however, is the temporal power of the Papacy. Until that is torn away, there is no hope or possibility of amelioration. The Papacy will always go hand in hand with the Austrian soldier, as the only security for both of them. The Papacy will always use its religious power over minds and consciences in behalf of Austria. In this way can it alone preserve its temporal authority and worldly possessions. But clerical rule is not susceptible of improvement. The past, as well as the present, is evidence. The salvation of Italy at large, as well as of that portion of it groaning under the curse of the Papal Government, is only to be found in secularization. The territory now forming the Papal States must become wholly free from the slightest connection with the Popes.

If the Roman Catholic world stands in need of Popes, then can it support them as pensioners; but the burden of keeping them should not fall on the population now forming the Roman State. The Papacy, with all its requisite cortege and pageantry, was moulded from an epoch when the whole European world bowed to and supported the See. Both reverence and support are gone, and now the Papacy preys upon a small strip of Italy. Justice requires that this region should be emancipated, leaving the Popes to occupy the Vatican, but nothing more. It may be asserted that by once drawing the wealth of the Catholic world to Rome the Papacy made the immortal city the focus of art; but still, living generations should not be forced to pay the debts of dead ones.

Publication of the Treaty and Proclamation of Peace.—The Plenipotentiaries met at 3 o'clock on Sunday, April 27, at the hotel of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, all in full uniform. They proceeded at once to the exchange of ratifications. There were present for Austria, M. D. Hubner; for France, Count Walewski and Baron Bourquney; for Britain, Lord Cowley; for Prussia, Count Hatzfeldt; for Russia, Count Orloff and Baron Brunow; for Sardinia, the Marquis of Villamarina; and for Turkey, Ali Pasha and Mehemet Djemil Bey. At 10 o'clock, A. M., the Secretaries attached to the legations of the powers represented in the Congress had assembled in the same place, in order to collate with the Chef du Burea du Protocole, the instruments of ratification. The minutes of the exchange of ratification were then drawn up, and, at the sitting of the Congress, at 3 o'clock the Plenipotentiaries affixed their signatures.

The treaty and accompaniments were presented to the Senate and Assembly, and are published in the Moniteur, as also in the London Official Gazette.

The Congress of Paris has closed the struggle in the East; but it has left the condition of Southern Europe in the same unsettled and dangerous state in which it was before, with this difference; that hopes which have been for the hundredth time crushed, have awakened in the hearts of all Italians an energy, and I trust, a self-reliance that will, ere long, lead to new European conflicts. Evidently, Italy, will be the theatre of the next events.

May 29 is to be a holiday throughout Great Britain to celebrate the peace.

The Court of Rome is sedulously endeavoring to obtain from the Government of Tuscany a Concordat similar to that lately granted by Austria.

The North of Syria is in a very disturbed state. In and about the mountains there are 30,000 men, all carrying arms, and the Turkish Government, would be powerless against any rising of the people.

The Austrian Concordat.—Louis Kossuth recently delivered two lectures in Liverpool, on the concordat between the Pope and the Emperor of Austria, which were marked by that vigor of thought and powerful eloquence which gave so much interest to his speeches in this country. He asserted that the object of the concordat was to make the civil structure of society subordinate to ecclesiastical supremacy; to make religion itself a tool for the unremitting aspirations of Popery towards universal dominion. It enacted, he said, that the canonical institutions of the Roman Church should be the supreme law of the land, indiscriminately superior to all civil law, and that the civil government should have neither control nor inspection over the mutual relations between Church and State; and the emoluments of the bishops and prelates of every description were made to depend upon the mere pleasure of the Pope, who thus became their sovereign master—the bishops being vested with arbitrary jurisdiction over the priesthood. The clergy were organized instruments of Papal ambition. They were placed without the pale of civil society, owning a realm of their own; their administration, their regulation, their revenues all withdrawn from the control and inspection of the government. They were placed above the laws of the country, exercising arbitrary control over public and private instruction, the whole celebration of the people, schools, sciences, the press, and even the book trade. All these means of power were held by the Pope, who moved them as the steam engine moves machinery. In a word, the concordat claimed supremacy over the state for the clergy, and by the clergy for the Pope. Such, and nothing else, was the concordat.

Kossuth further spoke of the concordat as a confederation of kingcraft and priestcraft against what they consider their common adversary, liberty. He remarked that the concordat was but a complemant to the third article of the secret treaty of Verona, concluded in 1822, of which he said:

"It was a fact, and not mere speculation, that at the Congress of Verona, in 1822, a secret treaty was stipulated between Austria, France, Prussia and Russia. England was governed by Canning then, and, to her glory be it remembered, withdrew from the combat. The third article of that treaty was as follows:—'Convinced that the principles of religion contribute most powerfully to maintain nations in a state of passive obedience which they owe to their princes—the high contracting powers declare it is their intention to sustain in their respective dominions such measures as the clergy may adopt for strengthening their interests, intimately connected with those of the prince. The high contracting parties offer their common thanks to the Pope for all that he has already done for them, and solicit his continued co-operation with them for the subjugations.' Such was the third article of the secret treaty of Verona, concluded in 1822."—Journal.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring, and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, 103 Hanover St. Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis, but as Dr. Pierce's medicines have proved to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may serve to subserve the cause of humanity to present his advertisement to the public. For the Crisis.

All Hail!

BY L. M. COLLINS.

All hail, to our promised King!
The day is drawing near,
When our deliverer will come,
Look up! we need not fear.

Welcome, the King of glory
Back to this earth again;
Ye watchmen, tell the story
Of a Messiah's reign.

We anxiously have waited,
Expecting He would come;
That we might be translated,
And taken to our home.

Sad was our disappointment,
Yet we will not complain;
We have the blessed promise
That Jesus is to reign.

Soon we shall see our kindred,
Now sleeping in their graves;
They will wait the resurrection,
To sing their Savior's praise.

If we are truly faithful,
We'll join them in that land;
And with what joy we'll greet them—
A pure and holy band.

There we shall see the glory
Of Jesus Christ our Lord;
There we shall live forever,
According to His word.

Instead of disappointments,
A crown we shall receive;
And with our blest Redeemer
Forever we shall live.

Then we will not be doubting,
Since Christ for us did die;
We have the blessed promise
Of life eternally.

Bath, N. H. Jan. 31, 1856.

For the Crisis.

When will the Morning Dawn?

When will the morning dawn,
Oh! when the day-star rise,
When will my Lord appear,
Descending from the skies.

Thy weary bride is watching,
Here is no place of rest;
She cannot sleep, though weary,
Till with her Lord she's blest.

With fastings much and weeping.
With sighs and bitter groans;
Oppressed and grieved she prayeth,
Despairingly she moans.

Oh! hearest thou her pleadings,
And her oppression know?
Oh! wilt thou not come quickly—
Ere death-damps clothe her brow?

Long, long in this stern conflict,
She's fought with cruel foes,
Through long and weary days,
Until the evening's close.

But now a fearful darkness,
Round her is gathering fast,
The friends she loved and cherished,
From every side have passed.

She stands alone and waiteth,
Fierce persecution's near,
To thee her God, she crieth,
Oh! lend a listening ear!

Save, save her God of heaven!
In mercy, Jesus come!
Wake up the loved ones sleeping,
And take the oppressed ones home.

For the Crisis.

Lines.

BY MARIA B. COWLES.

I am willing now to go with you
To the happy land you have in view;
This pleasant way I long have known,
But fearing much to travel on.

When first I thought I'd found the way—
It was a bright and happy day;
But while I walked I stopped to see
What all the world would think of me.

And whilst I listened to their lay,
I lost the true and faithful way;
But now I'll try to start anew
For Canaan's land is just in view.

Williamansett, Mar. 20.

Glad Tidings.

In compliance with a request from Bro. Hardy, we publish the following hymn:

We are going to Mount Zion, to the city of our God
We shall tread those heights which the angels have trod,
With the general assembly of the pure and the free,
We shall gaze on the King in his glorious majesty.
O Mount Zion! We long to see thee in the land of the blest.
We are going to Mount Zion, to the city of our God;
We shall tread those heights that the angels have trod.

Soon shall we with the ransomed, with the glorified band,
Who shall dwell in bright glory, on Canaan's border stand;
Far above where the billows of sorrow ever roll,
Where the storms of affliction never scathe the soul.
O the ransomed, crowned with glory in the land of the blest;
Soon shall we with the ransomed, with the glorified band,
Who shall dwell in bright glory, on Canaan's border stand.

Soon shall we be released, and our trials be done—
Soon we'll join the songs that by saints shall be sung;
Soon shall our ears be ravished by those holy strains,
That in harmony roll over glory's bright plains.
O that sound! we long to hear it in the land of the blest;
Soon shall we be released and our trials be done;
Soon we'll join in the song that by saints shall be

For the Crisis.

The Old and New Creation.

BY D. P. HILDRETH.

No. IV.

Every heir that is to receive the kingdom, loves the truth. Our Father prepares His children for salvation by afflictions, persecutions, and great conflicts with the wicked one, and his numerous progeny; till they are washed and made "white in the blood of the Lamb." All who come into His family in this way, come "by the door into the sheepfold." They "enter the straight gate," and walk in "the narrow way;" and though (like little children) they sometimes fall and get badly soiled; there is one always ready to wash not their feet only, but also their hands, their head, and even their hearts. He will seek out His sheep, and bring them all back "who have been driven out, (or wandered,) in the cloudy and dark day" of temptation, or persecution.

Thus it will be seen that His flock were chosen "through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot, who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world; but was manifest in these last times for you: who by Him do believe in God, that raised Him up from the dead, and gave Him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God." 1 Pet. I: 18–21. Here is the fore-ordination of Christ: "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; and the promises—I have laid help on one that is mighty,—I will make Him my first-born, higher than the kings of the earth,—His seed shall endure forever, and His throne as the sun in heaven,"—and the whole prove beyond a doubt, that there is an eternal security for every one who trusts himself in His hands.

On one occasion He said, "gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." And this principle He will justly carry out; not one particle of good will be lost, nothing left to burn but dross, refuse chaff, that is altogether worthless. "There is a sin unto death." "Those whom thou gavest me, have I kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition." "Jesus knew from the beginning who should betray Him," for He said,—"Have not I chosen you twelve and one of you is a devil?" Paul calls Elymas the sorcerer, "a child of the devil." There is a character chosen to salvation—the one that is in harmony with the terms of the gospel, which will be brought into the Kingdom of God being the fruit of the good seed sown; also a class of "beast worshippers," who will not comply with the terms of the gospel, and consequently be left to perish, being "the children of the wicked one." I wish to ask, who is wronged? It is not satan, for he desires to take away every good impression out of their hearts, that they may not see and believe. It is not his children, for they reject Christ and will not have Him to reign over them. They scorn Him and hate His words; hence they cannot be saved by Christ, for they will not use the means.

"Not many mighty or noble are called," because they are swelled up with pride; ignorance and foolishness are their attendants, and they are satisfactorily served. We know that God is under no obligation to redeem and save any transgressor of His law, but He has promised to give eternal life to all that believe and obey. Christians have power, for they are the Israel of God; and "Israel" prevails with God. "If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it. Doubtless all of us have friends who are in an unconverted state; let us avail ourselves of the power given, that we may "prevail with God" in behalf of those whom we love in the flesh. As we have a blessed promise "if two of you shall agree on earth, as touching anything that ye shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in Heaven." Now let all who have any anxiety for their unconverted children, or friends, appoint a time when they will appear daily before the throne of grace for the special purpose of pleading with God, that "He would open their blind eyes, and turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto God;" and "who knows but God will be gracious unto us, that they may live." Let the hour appointed be the first hour of the day, at, or about six o'clock; (for we cannot be too soon) and let our united prayers ascend to Him whose ears are always open to the cries of His children, and remember that once it could be said "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent taketh it by force." All other things seem small when compared with the kingdom.

Who was it that rose "a great while before day and went out and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed?" And who "continued all night in prayer to God?" "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." "The time is short;" and it becomes all the laborers on the temple of God, especially the wise master-builder, to see that their work is done "after the pattern" which is before them; for the great Master is coming, and He expects to find every shaft "polished after the similitude of a palace;" that He may set up His tabernacle, and "restore the kingdom to Israel."

"Thus Jesus stoop'd beneath the grave,
A lost and guilty world to save;
The second Adam from the dust
Restores the ruins of the first."

We have seen that the great Jehovah at first created a world of glory and beauty, and man upon it in His own likeness, both male and female; and at the end of six days pronounced all His works "very good." "And He rested the seventh day, and sanctified it as a Sabbath of rest.

We have seen that man was placed in the garden of God, with a full privilege to eat of the fruit of every tree but that of "the knowledge of good and evil;"—that being pure, he had power given him to obey the commands of his Maker, (though perhaps not predisposed either way, yet being innocent, we should suppose that he would be disposed rather to good than evil,)—that he was permitted to choose his own way, and act out his own will freely, without any internal restraint; that the artful duplicity of satan, in the form of a serpent, began to insinuate that they were not dealt with fairly, in being deprived of the fruit "of the trees of the garden;" and by contradicting outright the assertion of Jehovah, and affirming that they would "be as Gods," he succeeded in enticing them to disobey their lawful Sovereign, and then unlawfully seizing the right of Jehovah, became "the prince of this world;" of which he has had illegal possession ever since. They were then placed at the bar of judgment, as state criminals who had forfeited their all, to answer for themselves, and hear their sentence. They are afraid; and well they may be, for they have no reason to expect anything but a sentence of destruction, and the execution of it at once. They shew no abhorrence of themselves, nor of the crime they have committed; no meltings of penitence, nor sorrow that they have wronged and offended the best of Beings. They only accuse each other, and hear their sentence, which is accompanied with an unqualified promise, which creates hope. But they are both doomed to sorrow, to the great multiplication of their race, and death at last; are driven out from the garden "to till the ground."

We have seen that the gracious promise then given, alone sustained the church (as a recorded revelation) of future salvation, till the call of Abraham; that the sacrifice of his son testified his faith in the sacrifice of Christ, and insured the promise, that in his seed (Christ,) "all the nations should be blessed." We have seen that the (nominal) branches of the good olive-tree, have been "broken off;" and a way opened for the Gentile race to come in by faith, to embrace and trust in the Son of God; that His original design will not ultimately be frustrated by the success and malice of satan, nor by the fall of man. "Though confusion, and every evil work" has entered the world, and poor mortal man has been a great sufferer from that fall.

There is some uncertainty how long Adam and Eve remained innocent; but probably they fell on the eighth day after the beginning of the creation; and even in the early part of it; for their Judge came in "the cool (or evening) of the day;" and as every day is dated, till this, it is likely that this was the first day of the second week. We have seen that Abraham was made "heir of the world," "through the righteousness of faith." And when the time was fulfilled, the promised seed came, to "bruise the serpent's heel;" (for He said, "now shall the prince of this world be cast out." John 12: 31.) by being offered a sacrifice of atonement for a world of sinners; the first types of which, were "slain beasts," (offered by Adam without doubt soon after he received his sentence from the Lord,) with whose "skins" he was clothed;" Gen. 3: 21; (and likewise by Abel, Gen. 4: 14.)

We have seen that Messiah was existent, and in glory with the Father, "before the world was." John 17: 5. That He was "the Word of God,"—by miracle "made flesh," born of a woman,—"the seed of the woman," and that by Him God "created the world." Heb. 1: 1. The Father loved Him "before the foundation of the world." John 17: 24.—We have seen that God "formed the earth to be inhabited." Isa. 45: 18,—that had our first parents stood firm in their purity, a holy race would have descended from them that would in six thousand years have filled the earth; and had obedience been persevered in to the end of probation, it is probable the same union between the Messiah and His people would have been consummated, that will now take place when "the Bride" shall have "made herself ready;" for He "verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world." 1 Pet. 1: 20.—But man fell; the imposture of "the wicked one," succeeded to subvert the mind of Eve to dishonor her Maker; who in pronouncing her sentence, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception," made her the mother of all "the seed of the serpent," and of all "the seed of the blessed Lord." Through her seed a Savior is promised.

"Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." He taketh away the first, (the types,) that He may establish the second; (the great Sin-offering,) "by which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." This man, after He had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God. For by one offering He hath perfected forever, them that are sanctified."

Thus far the stipulations of that covenant from the foundation of the world, the sacrificial part of which was fully met, and cancelled at the great Passover Sacrifice on the cross. He came to suffer and to unfold to us "things which had been kept secret from the foundation of the world." Matt. 13: 35.

By taking away the typical offerings, He established His own, that can, blessed be God, "take away sin;" which "slain beasts" could not do, only as types of Him. This He did "in the midst of the week"—the seventieth week "from the going forth of the commandment" (to Nehemiah in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes,) "to restore and build Jerusalem." He then caused "the sacrifice and oblation to cease," by laying Himself on the great altar of God; that He might suffer on it, and pour out from it His vital blood, a "libation" to God, to retrieve the honor of His Father's broken law, and hold it inviolate; by which God could "be just, and the justifier" of all penitent believers in Him." Dan. 9: 24–27.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. E. McFall.

BRO. MERRIAM:—The Crisis came to-night with its usual store of good things for the longing hearts of the waiting pilgrims, and to me, I can truly say, it has been a welcome messenger. With joy I greet it in its weekly visits, for I feel that it is indeed, "meat in due season." While I sat this evening perusing its precious contents, a feeling, I had oftentimes had to write a few lines for its columns, was again awakened; and I have now sought the quiet of my room for that purpose. I praise God that it entered the heart of our beloved Bro. Merriam, to devote himself to the glorious calling of his Lord and Master—the feeding of the flock. May He strengthen you for the faithful discharge of your arduous task, and give to you the wisdom, boldness and grace you need, abundantly blessing you in all your labors. Soon Bro. M., you will receive with all the faithful of the flock, a rich reward for your labors, self-denial, and perseverance in proclaiming the glorious truths of the gospel to a sin blighted world; and in making glad the weary saints as they near their promised rest. O how cheering to the lonely pilgrim is the thought, we are almost home! Soon, we shall rest in the Kingdom of our Lord, "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest." Who that looks forward to the "glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," with the hope of deliverance, but feels to cry, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." I bless God that I can say to-night, I love the appearing of our Lord, although I am sometimes cast down and fearful, that I may come short of the glory of God, yet I would praise His holy name. I feel I can trust all I hold dear with Him, and trusting in Him, I believe I may go on, and in all boldness declare the truths of God.

I am alone here, as it were, in the faith, for it is but seldom I am permitted to see the face of an Advent Brother or Sister, and yet I am not alone for GOD is with me; and if "He be for me, who can be against me?" I seldom hear an Advent sermon, as we have no meetings of the kind in this place, and I can assure you the Crisis is very precious to me—next to my Bible, I prize its teachings. I hope the Lord will abundantly bless you for your toil for the "little flock," as He doubtless will. I am trying to let my light shine, and to do all I can for the promotion of God's truth among my young associates; but I find that my strength is weakness, except as His Spirit attends the truth as it is spoken. I have cause to bless God that all my efforts for His honor have not been in vain, and I feel encouraged in the good work. His grace assisting me, I hope I may hold out faithful to the end.

O my dear Brethren and Sisters, let us be faithful a little longer. Having put on the armor of God, let us fight manfully the "fight of faith," and "run with patience the race that is set before us." To those who have been long looking for the fulfillment of the promises, and are almost discouraged and ready to give up, I would say, "Be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord" I would point you to Jesus, He hath a balm of consolation for all who will believe on Him. He hath promised, "My grace is sufficient for thee." O let us not be "weary in well doing," but trust in God; be faithful, and fear not; for it is our Father's good pleasure to give us the kingdom. To those who have, like myself, but just begun to walk in wisdom's way, and the service of God, I would say, be "steadfast in the Lord," and "follow Him through evil and through good report." "Time is short," but improve it while you may in His service, but above all, do not look back. If you have commenced the Christian course, depart not from your first love, but be faithful now in trying to win souls to Christ. Live not for the applause of the world, but the honor of God, and in His own good time He will mete out to you the "recompense of reward." God be with you and aid you by His Spirit.

Possibly, some one under whose eye these lines may fall, is still out of the "ark of safety;" if such should be the case, I cannot close without a word to you. O, can you not see your danger in thus putting off the day of grace? O let me warn you now, to prepare to meet your God. It is the eleventh hour, and should you now refuse to fall in with the offers of mercy, where, O where will you be found on that great reckoning day? "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." In one of these, O sinner, you must share, and let me entreat you, now to choose the latter. "Come to Jesus" now, and you may live; but a little longer, and it may be too late. Come then, now, ere the door of mercy be forever closed against you. A little while, and the "Judge of all the earth" will appear; and I charge you now as we must shortly appear before the judgment seat of Christ, to become reconciled to God! Time is short! Prepare to meet thy God.

"The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit, and grace be with you all.

Yours, looking for redemption at the end of the days. ELIZABETH McFALL.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. A. P. Hyde.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I write a few lines for the saints scattered abroad—to the way-worn pilgrims. Cheer up, cheer up, for the day is at hand; although peace has been declared in the East, let not that shake your faith, for we we have something also to which we can look. Let us turn for a few moments to the old chart, and see if there are any land-marks on the coast. We run down 1260 miles, and come to a land mark which says we have past the coast of tribulation; and another beacon heaves in view which says we are near port, and still another has been past; but, says one—"stop, not so fast, how do you know all this?" How do I know? Because I have seen them. The Captain says—"when ye see these things, then know—not guess—it is near;" that is, know that we are almost into port. Besides this, the Captain tells us to "lift up our heads and rejoice," not keep silent, and skulk under the weather rail, or the long boat, to hide away from the storm, or the wind; but to stand at our post, and be ready to do our duty; and I hope the next order will be to cast anchor in the haven of eternal rest.

As we have seen these things, we can put confidence in the Captain for he never told a falsehood or deceived any one, therefore fore we can trust Him; then pray on, sing on a little while longer, till the port is gained, and we are at home at our Father's House. There is our elder Brother. He, who offered up his life to save us. Shall we not love Him and praise Him forever?

One week ago to-day, (fast day) our beloved Bro. L. L. Howard, preached for us, and the Lord was with him; I had a feast indeed; and I do thank the good Lord that there are some of his servants who will stop at Biddeford and give us, poor and needy children, a crum from the Master's table. God bless Bro. Howard and his family.

Now, Brethren, be of good cheer, let not the adversary take your crown, for we are in his dominions—or at least in those he has usurped, but I trust he will have to give them up soon. I do not wish to be found with his mark on my forehead, nor in my hand. Let us try and be ready to go into the marriage supper of the Lamb. O I hope I shall not fall out by the way before the good ship goes into port, for I do desire to be there and partake of the dainties of the well-filled board.

Now, Brethren, let us watch a little longer, until the morning dawns.

From a pilgrim and stranger looking for a better country. ARIEL P. HYDE.

Longing after Immortality.

The fact that the most of men have a disinclination to fall back into the non-being whence they came, and an anxiety to live forever, is considered, in many quarters, proof positive that the Creator has determined they shall exist on like himself, through the cycles of eternity. The following is the shape in which this argument lately met our eye: "The longing after immortality which is born with us, would seem to be the prophecy and assurance of our deathlessness, the foreshadowing of the soul's prolonged and indefinite continuance, the revelation of its triumph over the change which wears the semblance of destruction." And thus philosophers and poets have triumphantly asked—if man is not the heir of everlasting existence—

'Whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
This longing after immortlity."

Whatever value such reasoning may possess, as regards eloquence and poetry, it is, we apprehend, strikingly deficient as an argument when put to the test of sound logic and common sense. It is founded on the assumption that all men are what they wish to be, or that they will ultimately obtain what they desire to possess—an assumption so obviously false that a moment's reflection must discover its absurdity. As a general rule, young men desire to arrive at a good old age, yet how many of them are laid prostrate in the dust, ere they reach the meridian of life!

Moreover, the object of this general desireis not immortality simply, or endlessness of being, conjoined with happiness. So that the argument, therefore, if sound, would not only prove all men, independent of their character, to be immortal, it would also demonstrate them to be equally the heirs of perpetual bliss—a conclusion, we presume, which few who employ the argument in question, are prepared to accept.

Still the inquiry presents itself—'Why has God implanted in man this strong desire for everlasting being?' 'Whence this natural aversion from non-existence?' At unaided reason we might long ask the question in vain; the Bible alone can return a satisfactory reply. That oracle discloses to us the glorious fact, that the beneficent Creator has placed before men the transcendent prize of immortal being, associated with 'glory, honor, and peace,' and suspended its final reception on the possession of faith in Christ, and a life of obedience to His will in this stage of existence. It seems wise, then, to declare our Heavenly Father has kindled 'this longing after immortality' within us, to excite us to such a course of conduct as shall secure that inestimable blessing, which he so kindly desires to bestow. Here we find the blessed Lord commanding the Jews to 'labor, not for the meat that perisheth, but for that which endures unto everlasting life;' hence also we read, in Romans 2: 7, of those who 'by patient continuance in well-doing, sought for glory, and honor, and immortality,' therefore is to be regarded as no proof that we shall live forever; it is, however, another evidence of the goodness of God,—of his intense desire that we should become the heirs of eternal being.

'If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if through the Spirit, ye do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.'"—Expositor of Life and Immortality.

Pontius Pilate in Vienna.

[In compliance with a special request, we publish the following interesting article from the Advent Herald.—ED.]

Translated and abridged from the Courier Des Etates Unis.

Vienne, in Dauphiny, a province of France, the ancient capital of transalpine Gaul, under the Romans, is situated on the river Rhone. There, on the left bank of that beautiful stream, is seen a tomb of an ancient architecture, which, according to tradition, is the tomb of Pontius Pilate—under whose government Jesus Christ suffered. It was in Vienne also that the wandering Jew revealed himself in 1777—a most remarkable occurrence, the spot that contained the ashes of the Judge of the Righteous was trodden upon by a descendant of his accuser.

The following chronicle was extracted from an old Latin manuscript found in a monastery near Vienna.

It was under the reign of Caligula, when C. Marcius was prætor at Vienna, that an old man bent with age, yet tall in stature, was seen to descend from his litter and enter a house of humble appearance, near the temple of Mars. Over the door of this house was written in red letters, the name of F. Albinus. He was an old acquaintance of Pilate's. After mutual salutations, Albinus observed to him, that many years had elapsed since their separation. "Yes," replied Pilate, "many years—years of misfortune and affliction. Accursed be the day on which I succeeded Valerius Gratus in the government of Judea! My name is ominous; it has been fatal to whomsoever has borne it. One of my ancestors imprinted an indellible mark of infamy on the fair front of imperial Rome, when the Romans passed under the Caudiæ Furculæ in the Samnite war. Another perished by the hands of the Parthians in the war against Arminius. And I—miserable me!"—

"You miserable?" asked Albinus; "what have you done to entail misery on you? True, the injustice of Caligula has exiled you to Vienne, but for what crime? I have examined your affair at the Tabularium. You are denounced by Vitellus, prefect of Syria, your enemy, for having chastened the rebellious Hebrews, who had slain the most noble of the Samaritans, and who afterwards withdrew themselves on Mount Gerizim. You are also accused of acting thus out of hatred against the Jews."

"No," replied Pilate. "No! by all the gods, Albinus, it is not the injustice of Cæsar that afflicts me."

"What then is the cause of your affliction?" continued Albinus. "Long have I known you—sensible, just, humane. I see it—you are the victim of Vitellus."

"Say not so, Albinus—say not that I am the victim of Vitellus—no; I am the the victim of a higher power! The Romans regard me as an object of Cæsar's disgrace, the Jews as the severe Proconsol; the Christians, as the executioner of their God!"

"Of their God, did you say, Pilate? Adore a God born in a manger, and put to death on the cross!"

"Beware, Albinus, beware!" continued Pilate. "If the Christ had been born under the purple he would not have been adored. Listen. To your friendship I will submit the events of my life; you will afterwards judge whether I am worthy of your hospitality.

"On my arrival at Jerusalem, I took possession of the Pretorium, and ordered a splendid feast to be prepared, to which I invited the Tetrarch of Judea, with the high priests and officers. At the appointed hour, no guest appeared. This was an insult offered to my dignity. A few days afterwards, the Tetrarch deigned to pay me a visit. His deportment was grave and deceitful. He pretended that his religion forbade him and his attendants to sit down at the table of the gentiles, and to offer up libations with them. I thought it expedient to accept his excuse; but from that moment I was convinced that the conquered had declared themselves the enemies of the conquerors.

At that time, Jerusalem was, of all conquered cities, the most difficult to govern. So turbulent were the people, that I lived in momentary dread of an insurrection. To repress it, I had but a single centurion, and a handful of soldiers. I requested a reinforcement from the Prefect of Syria, who informed me that he had scarcely troops sufficient to defend his own province. Insatiate thirst of empire;—to extends our conquest beyond the means of defending them!

Among the various rumors which came to my ears, there was one that attracted my attention. A young man, it was said, had appeared in Galilee, preaching with a noble unction, a new law in the name of the God that had sent him. At first I was apprehensive that his design was to stir up the people against the Romans; but soon were my fears dispelled. Jesus of Nazareth spoke rather as a friend of the Romans than of the Jews.

One day, in passing by the place of Siloe, where there was a great concourse of people, I observed in the midst of the group a young man leaning against a tree who was calmly addressing the multitude. I was told it was Jesus. This I could easily have suspected, so great was the difference between him and those who were listening to him. He appeared to be about thirty years of age. His gold colored hair and beard gave to his appearance a celestial aspect. Never have I seen a sweeter or a more serene countenance. What a contrast between him and his hearers, with their black beard and tawny complexions. Unwilling to interrupt him by my presence, I continued my walk, but signified it to my Secretary to join the group and listen.

My Secretary's name was Manlius. He was the grandson of the chief of the conspirators, who encamped in Etrusia, waiting for Catalina. Manlius was an ancient inhabitant of Judea, and well acquainted with the Hebrew language. He was devoted to me, and was worthy of my confidence.

On returning to the Pretorium, I found Manlius, who related to me the words that Jesus had pronounced at Siloe. Never have I heard in the Portico, or read in the works of the philosophers, anything that can be compared to the maxims of Jesus. One of the rebellious Jews, so numerous in Jerusalem, having asked him if it was lawful to give tribute to Cæsar or not, Jesus replied: "Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

It was on account of the wisdom of his sayings that I granted so much liberty to the Nazarine; for it was in my power to have him arrested and exiled to Pontus: but this would have been contrary to that justice which has always characterized the Roman. This man was neither seditious nor rebellious. I extended to him my protection, unknown, perhaps, to himself. He was at liberty to act, to speak; to assemble and address the people, to choose disciples, unrestrained by any pretorian mandate.

Should it ever happen—may the gods avert the omen!—should it ever happen, I say, that the religion of our forefathers be supplanted by the religion of Jesus, it will be to the noble toleration that Rome shall owe her premature obsequies—whilst I, miserable wretch, I, shall have been the instrument of what the Christians call Providence, and we destiny.

But this unlimited freedom granted to Jesus, revolted the Jews—not the poor, but the rich and powerful. It is true, Jesus was severe on the latter, and this was a political reason, in my opinion, not to control the liberty of the Nazarene. "Scribes and Pharisees!"—Would he say to them, "Ye are a race of vipers! you resemble painted sepulchres." At other times he would sneer at the proud alms of the Publican, telling him that the mite of the widow was more precious in the sight of God.

New complaints were daily made at the Pretorium against the insolence of Jesus. I was even informed that some misfortune would befall him—that it would not be the first time that Jerusalem had stoned them that called themselves prophets—and that, if the Pretorium refused justice, an appeal would be made to Cæsar.

This I had prevented, by informing Cæsar of all that had happened. My conduct was approved of by the Senate, and I was promised a reinforcement of troops after the termination of the Parthian war.

Being too weak to suppress a sedition, I resolved upon adopting a measure that promised to re-establish the tranquillity of the city, without subjecting the Pretorium to humiliating concessions. I wrote to Jesus, requesting an interview with him, at the Pretorium, He came.

O, Albinus! now that my blood runs cold in my veins, and that my body is bent down under the load of years, it is not surprising that Pilate should sometimes tremble; but then I was young—in my veins flowed the Spanish mixed with the Roman blood, as incapable of fear as it was of puerile emotions.

When the Nazarene made his appearance, I was walking in my basilisk, and my feet seemed fastened with an iron hand, to the marble pavement. He was calm, the Nazarene—calm as innocence. When he came up to me, he stopped, and by a single gesture, seemed to say to me: here I am.

For some time, I contemplated with admiration and with awe, this extraordinary type of man—a type unknown to our numerous sculptors, who have given form and figure to all the gods and to all the heroes.

"Jesus," said I to him at last, and my tongue faltered—"Jesus of Nazareth, I have granted you, for the last three years, ample freedom of speech—nor do I regret it. Your words are those of a sage. I know not whether you have read Socrates and Plato; but this I know, that there is in your discourses, a majestic simplicity that elevates you far above those great philosophers. The Emperor is informed of it—and I, his humble representative in this country, am glad of having allowed you that liberty of which you are so worthy. However, I must not conceal from you that your discourses have raised up against you powerful and inveterate enemies. Neither is this surprising. Socrates had his enemies, and he fell a victim to their hatred. Yours are doubly incensed; against you, on account of your sayings; against me, on account of the liberty extended towards you. They even accused me indirectly of being leagued with you for the purpose of depriving the Hebrews of the little civil power which Rome has left to them. My request—I do not say my orders—is, that you be more circumspect for the future, and more tender in rousing the pride of your enemies, lest they raise up against you the stupid populace, and compel me to employ the instruments of justice."

The Nazarene calmly replied:

"Prince of the earth, your words proceeded not from true wisdom. Say to the torrent stop in the midst of the mountain because it will uproot the trees of the valley; the torrent will answer you, that it obeys the laws of the Creator. God alone knows whither flow the waters of the torrent. Verily, I say unto you; before the rose of Sharon blossoms, the blood of the just will be spilt."

"Your blood shall not be spilt," replied I, with emotion. "You are more precious in my estimation, on account of your wisdom, than all these turbulent and proud Pharisees, who abuse the freedom granted them by the Romans, conspire against Cæsar, and construe our bounty into fear. Insolent wretches! They are not aware that the wolf of the Tiber sometimes clothes himself with the skin of the sheep. I will protect you against them. My Pretorium is open to you as a place of refuge—it is a sacred asylum."

Jesus carelessly shook his head, and said, with a graceful and divine smile:

"When the day shall have come, there will be no asylum for the Son of man, neither on earth nor under the earth. The asylum of the Just is there, (pointing to the heavens.) That which is written in the books of the prophets must be accomplished."

"Young man," answered I, mildly, "you oblige me to convert my request into an order. The safety of the province which has been confided to my care, requires it. You must observe more moderation in your discourses. Do not infringe my orders; you know them. May happiness attend you. Farewell.

"Prince of earth," replied Jesus, "I come not to bring war into the world, but peace, love and charity. I was born the same day on which Cæsar Augustus gave peace to the Roman world. Persecution proceeded not from me. I expect it from others, and will meet it with obedience to the will of my Father, who has shown me the way. Restrain, therefore, your worldly prudence. It is not in your power to arrest the victim at the foot of the tabernacle of expiation."

So saying, he disappeared like a bright shadow behind the curtains of the basilisk.

Herod the Tetrarch, who then reigned in Judea, and who died devoured by vermin, was a weak and wicked man, chosen by the chiefs of the law to be the instrument of their hatred. To him the enemies of Jesus addressed themselves, to wreak their vengeance on the Nazarene.

Had Herod consulted his own inclination, he would have ordered Jesus immediately to be put to death; but though proud of his regal dignity, yet he was afraid of committing an act that might diminish his influence with Cæsar.

Herod called on me one day at the Pretorium, and on rising to take leave, after some insignificant conversation, he asked me what was my opinion concerning the Nazarene.

I replied, that Jesus appeared to me to be one of those grave philosophers great nations sometimes produce; that his doctrine was by no means dangerous; and the intention of Rome was to leave him that freedom of speech which was justified by his actions. Herod smiled maliciously, and saluting me with ironical respect, he departed.

The great feast of the Jews was approaching; and their intention was to avail themselves of the popular exaltation which always manifests itself at the solemnities of a passover. The city was overflowing with a tumultuous populace, clamoring for the death of the Nazarene. My emissaries informed me that the treasure of the Temple had been employed in bribing the people. The danger was pressing. A Roman centurion had been insulted.

I wrote the Prefect of Syria, requesting a hundred foot soldiers, and the same number of cavalry. He declined. I saw myself alone with a handful of veterans in the midst of a rebellious city—too weak to suppress disorder, and having no other choice left than to tolerate it.

They had seized upon Jesus; and the seditious rabble, although they knew they had nothing to fear from the Pretorium, believing, on the faith of their leaders, that I winked at their sedition, continued vociferating:—"Crucify him! crucify him!"

Three powerful parties at that time had combined together against Jesus. First, the Herodians and Sadducees, whose seditious conduct seemed to have proceeded from a double motive; they hated the Nazarene, and were impatient of the Roman yoke. They could never forgive me for having entered their holy city with banners that bore the image of the Roman Emperor; and although, in this instance, I had committed a fatal error, yet the sacrilege did not appear less heinous in their eyes. Another grievance also rankled in their bosoms. I had proposed to employ a part of the treasure of the Temple in erecting edifices of public utility. My proposal was scowled at. The Pharisees were the avowed enemies of Jesus. They cared not for the Government; but they bore with bitterness the severe reprimands which the Nazarene had for three years been continually throwing out against them wherever he went. Too weak and pusillanimous to act by themselves, they had eagerly embraced the quarrel of the Herodians and Sadducees. Besides these three parties, I had to contend against the reckless and profligate populace, always ready to join in a sedition, and to profit by the disorder and confusion that result therefrom.

Jesus was dragged before the Council of the Priests and condemned to death. It was then the High Priest, Caiaphas, performed a derisory act of submission. He sent his prisoner to me to pronounce his condemnation and secure his execution. I answered him that, as Jesus was a Galilean, the affair came in Herod's jurisdiction, and ordered Jesus to be sent thither. The wily Tetrarch professed humility, and protesting his deference to the lieutenant of Cæsar, he committed the fate of the man to my hands.

Soon my place assumed the aspect of a besieged citadel; every moment increased the number of the seditious. Jerusalem was inundated with crowds from the mountains of Nazareth. All Judea appeared to be pouring into the devoted city.

I had taken to wife a girl from among the Gauls, who pretended to see into futurity. Weeping, and throwing herself at my feet, "Beware," said she to me, "beware and not touch that man, for he is holy. Last night I saw him in a vision—he was walking on the water—he was flying on the wings of the wind. He spoke to the tempests, to the palm-trees, to the flashes of the lake—all were obedient to him. Behold! the torrent of Mount Credon flows with blood—the statues of Cæsar are solid with the filth of the gemoniæ—the columns of the Pretrium have given way, and the sun is veiled in mourning like a vestal in the tomb! O Pilate! evil awaits thee. If thou wilt not listen to the the words of thy wife, dread the curse of a Roman Senate—dread the frowns of Cæsar!"

By this time my marble stairs groaned under the weight of the multitude. The Nazarene was brought back to me. I proceeded to the Hall of Justice, followed by my guards, and asked the people in a severe tone, what they demanded?

"The death of the Nazarene," was their reply.

"For what crime?"

"He has blasphemed; he has prophesied the ruin of the temple, he calls himself the Son of God—the Messiah—the King of the Jews."

"Roman justice," said I, "punisheth not such offences with death."

"Crucify him, crucify him!" shouted forth the relentless rabble.

The vociferations of the infuriate multitude shook the palace to its foundations. One man alone appeared calm in the midst of the tumult. He was like unto the Statue of Innocence placed in the temples of the Eumindes. It was the Nazarene.

After my fruitless attempts to protect him from the fury of his merciless persecutors, I had the baseness to adopt a measure which, at that moment, appeared to me to be the only one that could save his life. I ordered him to be scourged, then, calling for an ewer, I washed my hands in the presence of the clamorous multitude, thereby signifying to them my disapprobation of the deed.

But in vain. It was his life that these wretches thirsted after. Often, in our civil commotions, have I witnessed the furious animosity of the multitude, but nothing could ever be compared to what I beheld in the present instance. It might have been truly said, that, on this occasion, all the phantoms of the infernal regions had assembled together at Jerusalem. The crowd appeared not to walk; they were borne off and whirled as a vortex, rolling along like living waves, from the portals of the Pretorium, even unto Mount Zion, with howling, screams, shrieks and vociferation, such as were never heard either in the seditions of Panonia, or in the tumults of the Forum.

By degrees the bay darkened like a winter twilight, such as had been seen at the death of the great Julius Cæsar. It was likewise toward the ides of March I., the contemned governor of a rebellious province, leaning against a column of my basilisk, contemplating athwart the dreary gloom, this Theory of Tartarus dragging to execution the innocent Nazarene. All around me was a desert; Jerusalem had vomited forth her indwellers through the funeral gate that leads to the Gemoniæ. An air of desolation and sadness enveloped me. My guards had joined the cavalry, and the centurion, to play a shadow of power, was endeavoring to maintain order. I was left alone, and my breaking heart admonished me, that what was passing at that moment, appertained rather to the history of the gods than to that of man. Loud clamors were heard proceeding from Golgotha, which, borne on the winds, appeared to announce an agony such as never had been heard by mortal ear. Dark clouds lowered over the pinnacle of the temple, and large ruptures settled over the city and covered it as with a veil. So dreadful were the signs that were manifested, both in the heavens and on the earth, that Dionysius, the Areopagite, is reported to have exclaimed, "Either the Author of Nature is suffering, or the Universe is falling apart.

Toward the first hour of the night, I threw my mantle around me, and went down into the city toward the gate of Golgotha. The sacrifice had been consummated. The crowd was returning home, still agitated, it is true, but gloomy and taciturn, desperate. What they had witnessed, had struck them with terror and remorse. I also saw my little Roman Cohort pass by mournfully, the standard bearer having veiled his eagle in token of grief, and I overheard some of the soldiers murmuring strange words which I did not comprehend. Others were recounting prodigies almost similar to these which had so often smote the Romans with dismay by the will of the gods. Sometimes groups of men and women would halt; then, looking backwards toward Mount Calvary, would remain motionless, in the expectation of witnessing some new prodigy.

I returned to the Pretorium, sad and pensive. On ascending the stair, the steps of which were still stained with the blood of the Nazarine, I perceived an old man in a supplicant posture, and behind him, several women in tears. He threw himself at my feet and wept bitterly. It is painful to see an old man weep.

"Father," said I, to him, mildly, "who are you, and what is your request?"

"I am Joseph of Arimathea," replied he, "and I am come to beg of you upon my knees, the permission to bury Jesus of Nazareth."

"Your prayer is granted," said I to him; and, at the same time, ordered Manlius to take some soldiers with him, to superintend the interment, lest it might be profaned. A few days afterwards, the sepulchre was found empty. The disciples of Jesus published all over the country that Jesus had risen from the dead, as he had foretold.

A last duty remained for me to perform. It was to communicate to Cæsar the details of this deplorable event. I did it the same night that followed the fatal catastrophe, and had just finished the communication when the day began to dawn.

At that moment the sound of clarions playing the air of Diana, struck my ear. Casting my eyes toward the Cesarean gate, I beheld a troop of soldiers, and heard at a distance, other trumpets sounding Cesar-March. It was the reinforcement that was promised me—two thousand chosen men, who, to hasten their arrival, had marched all night.

"It has then been decreed by the Fates," cried I, wringing my hands, "that the iniquty should be accomplished"—that, for the purpose of averting the deeds of yesterday, troops should arrive to-day! Cruel destiny, how thou sportest with the affairs of mortals! Alas! it was but too true, what the Nazarene exclaimed when writhing on the cross: All is consummated.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 4, 1856.

Our Gratitude.

Our Brn. and Srs. will please accept the heartfelt thanks of their committee for the material aid, which they have forwarded so promptly in this time of need.

We love to be associated with the generous and the good. We thank the Lord that there is a sympathetic cord uniting us closer than all human creeds, or worldly policy in their greatest strength, can ever accomplish.

Ours, is the family, the brotherly love. May our hearts be knit in a firmer union, and with warmer affection, as we approach the home of the blest.

We can see manifested, in the self-sacrifice of our Brn. and Srs. to help us at this time, the same spirit that the kind mother exhibits towards her helpless child, when she deprives herself of comforts, to bestow them upon her loved one.

Brn. and Srs., may the peace of God rule in your hearts."

We will do the best we can, by the help of the Lord, to administer to your wants, in spiritual things. "Pray for us."

Baptism.

We have been requested to write an article on Baptism, for the benefit of those who are not satisfied in relation to this ordinance.

This is a subject of deep interest to the christian; especially, when fully understood. We are convinced that many are baptized without knowing the object, or signification of this institution. They see no meaning in baptism, and wonder why it is required; while to others it speaks volumes.

By the help of the Lord and his word, we will try to make our own views plain, and leave the reader to judge of their correctness.

I. Water Baptism is a christian duty.

Most admit this, but some deny; hence it is proper to call for proof.

Those who claim that water baptism is now obsolete, contend that it was nailed to the cross with Jewish ordinances wheh our Savior was crucified.

What shall we think, if we find that our Lord enjoined it after his resurrection from the dead, when he gave his final commission to his disciples?

Of course our conclusion must be, that He did not abrogate baptism, when he is said to be "blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to the cross." Col. 2: 14.

In the above case, He blotted out that which was in the handwriting of ordinances. How can writing be blotted out before it is written. Baptism was not then written among the ordinances, for it was a new institution just introduced by John.

As we have before remarked, if we find our Lord enjoining baptism this side of the cross, all ground for controversy is removed. Please read Math. 28: 19. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

This leaves no room for a doubt.

Here is His final commission after His resurrection, to the apostles, their successors, and all who should be called to preach His word from that time to "the end of the world."

If this is not the christian minister's commission, then I know not that we have any.

Some have claimed that the only baptism this side the cross, is that by the Holy Ghost; observe, we are to baptize in the name of the Holy Ghost, as well as of the Father and the Son.

This cannot be made to read, with the Father, and with the Son, and with the holy Ghost.

Again,—subsequent to the resurrection and ascension of our Savior, when Peter was reasoning with the Jews, showing them that they had crucified the true Messiah; they cry out, as recorded in Acts 2: 47,—"Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Mark Peter's answer,—"Then Peter said unto them, repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." We would enquire, how far does this instruction extend? Peter answers,—"The promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." This is plain teaching.

We now see clearly, that baptism was not nailed to the cross, but that it is to continue, so long as people are required to repent.

That there may be no doubt that Peter is speaking of water baptism, we will notice another example in Acts 10: 47–48, which was several years after the resurrection and ascension of Jesus. Says Peter—"Can any man forbid WATER, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord."

With what did he command them to be baptized? Ans., WATER.

We think it is clearly shown. that "Water baptism is a christian DUTY."

In our next, we will enquire, who are proper subjects of baptism.

New Publication.

The BOOK so long talked of, has gone to the printer, and those that can send one half of the money they pledged, will confer a great favor on the publisher at this time. You will not have to wait for your pay in the book over four weeks. All others that have not pledged for a certain number, can now send in their names and have the books forwarded from the office of the Crisis, and thus save expense, which is enough already to eat up the books at 50 cts. each. I give this book up to the cause, and my Brethren know it, hence I expect they will not see me suffer.

Direct to me at Chickopee Falls.

HIRAM MUNGER.

We wish to say a word in favor of Bro. Munger's autobiography. In this work he gives a history of the interesting events in his life, which have transpired at prayer and conference meetings, and at between one and two hundred camp meetings. We think this book will be read with deep interest, as well as profit, by ALL classes.

His life has been rich with scenes that are worth relating.

We hope the book will be widely circulated.—ED.

Notice to Preachers.

The brethren in Springfield that have obtained Bro. Currier's Hall for a place of worship, would inform ministers of the word of life, that they have appointed certain Brethren to look after, and care for the wants of the Church and ministry. Preachers who can, are invited to call and feed this little flock. Such will communicate with Bro. S. F. Otis, their Corresponding Secretary.

In behalf of the Brethren,

H. PRATT.

Fools.

BY P. B. MORGAN.

"O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." Such was the stirring and impressive reprimand of our Lord to His unbelieving disciples—disciples, who with their own eyes, had seen so much, that unbelief should never once have found place in their hearts; but whom, at this time, our Lord found in its dark and distressing mazes. A few years before, they had been made acquainted with Jesus; they had heard Him speak as never man spake; they had seen in him such a depth of humility, such kindness of heart, such self-denial, and such unfathomed, inexpressible love, as they had never before seen in man. And then again, the potency of His voice—the hushed tempest, the becalmed sea, the fleeing demons—yes, and even conquered death—all in humility, they acknowled. How could they, who witnessed such things, but believe that this was He of whom the prophets spake—the Redeemer.

He had taught them; the prophets had been expounded to them; signs had been given, and they had more than once felt their faith was established, and in their hearts said, surely this is the Messiah, the Christ of God. But now, things were changed—though God changeth not, and His word never faileth. They had seen Him in whom they had trusted, betrayed, forsaken, mocked, spit upon and condemned; they saw Him as He bore the crucifix through the city; they saw Him—yea, and they heard the sound of the hammers, too, as he was nailed to the cross with thieves. But here, may be, they even paused and felt that if He really was the Christ as they had thought, peradventure He might even now show forth His mighty power, and come down from the cross, and establish His kingdom.

But alas, their only remaining hope vanishes! Darkness surrounds Him. The damp of death encircles His brow; He groans—He dies. Disconsolate disciples! Disappointment after disappointment has come, and their faith has well nigh, or entirely failed them. One turns to his fishing-nets, another goes his way, and so generally is their faith abandoned, that even after His resurrection is testified to by some who had witnessed it, one of His disciples declares—"Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe." But the three days have passed; and certain women, early at the sepulchre have seen angels, and have testified that He is risen from the dead. But these disciples going down to Emmaus have not seen Him—nor do they know where to look if they would; nor do they know for what intent He is risen from the dead. But they continue to reason, "and talk together of all these things." And thus they are doing when Jesus accosts them, and upbraids them with these pungent words:—"O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken."

But why were they fools? and why slow to believe ALL that the prophets have spoken? The prophecies that related to His death and resurrection, as well as those that related to His redeeming Israel? The facts were these.

Although they had received and rejoiced in very much that was truth, yet in the infirmity of their flesh, they either did not know all the truth, or else, in the bias of their own minds, they had quite overlooked a portion of it. And while they rejoiced in that He had come who should redeem Israel, yet they could not understand why He could not then restore the kingdom to Israel, as well as first to suffer; and then go into a far country to receive a kingdom, as He had already instructed them He must. They were both mistaken and hasty; and consequently, in not yielding themselves to God's own ways, they overlooked the teachings they had received, and through this negligence and unbelief, justly merited the sharp rebuke which our Lord at this time, and in these words administered to them. Had they heeded and believed the things that had been taught them merely by the prophets, so far from loosing their confidence, and consequently being plunged into darkness, they would have seen the purpose of God in all the scenes of Calvary, and of the tomb; and that the kingdom of Christ was not of this world, but of the world to come. That it was not temporal, but eternal.

1. The lesson herein taught us, is, that we should not only search the Scriptures, but be willing to believe ALL that the prophets have spoken, otherwise we have no guarantee of steadfastness in Christ. Without the prophets, we are lost to the ways of God. The "sure word of prophecy is as a light shining in a dark place, unto which we do well to take heed until the day dawn."

2. We also hereby see the danger of those, who become impatient, and are unwilling to wait God's time and manner, to redeem Israel. Whether it be by believing that our redemption must come at death, and so overlooking all the glorious truths that relate to the second Advent of our Lord, or by giving up our faith in the matter, because the redemption did not come at the point of time we had thought.

3. Another thought is this. At the very point of time when we may feel all is lost, we disappointed, and redemption will never come; may be the time when God is most effectually bringing about the time of our redemption. This may be the case with many, who, for a number of years, have been hoping, and in the sincerity of their hearts, been saying—we trust this is the time when He will redeem Israel. Many there are, both in Europe and America, who for these number of years past, have not only been praying like John, "Come, Lord Jesus," but have felt, that from the sure word of prophecy, they were warranted in looking for His glorious appearing during the present generation. Among these, we remember the most devout, and some of the most learned of the world. But again and again have we had to say in disappointment, we trusted this was the time; but it was not. Some looked with especial interest to certain chronological arrangements by which it was thought the second Advent would be witnessed about A. D. 1843; and by others, the year 1847 was looked to with much interest. But thus far we were disappointed. There were yet other things that must come to pass; every jot and tittle must be fulfilled. When the year '48, with its political tempests, and almost universal shaking of thrones broke upon us, we then felt that very speedily the thrones might be cast down and the Ancient of days come; as also again when the year '52 came with the uproar of war, and when it seemed as if all the crowned monarchs of Europe would speedily engage in the general melee. But all, is thus far passed; and to-day the world appears jubilant with the thought that peace has again been restored. True, the world's battle is not yet fought; the blessed Advent has not yet come, and Israel is not yet redeemed. But Brethren, shall we go to our fishing nets? Shall we. like Thomas, say, "I will not believe?" Shall we give it up? Let us for one moment look—the great landmarks found on our chart are passed, and cannot be repassed; and by many infallible proofs we know that the present signs indicate that whatever more is accomplished this side of the judgment, must occupy but a very small space of time. Do we not believe without a doubt, that the sixth trumpet has sounded, and that God declares to us, "behold the third woe cometh quickly," when God shall judge the dead and reward His servants? Are any down-cast because they have not seen Him whom their soul loveth ere this? Let them remember that before the last awful storm bursts upon the world, men must feel themselves wrapped in security, saying, "peace and safety," when suddenly, destruction cometh upon them. This they can now say for a brief space. Scoffers must tauntingly say "where is the promise of His coming, for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." We hear them now. The evil servant must smite and say, "my Lord delayeth His coming;" and this He doeth now. The proverb, saying, "the days are prolonged and every vision faileth," must and doth now obtain. By these, with many other signs, too numerous to mention now, we know that day "is near, even at the doors" as our Lord commandeth us. Matt. 24, and Luke 21.

But another point. Look again. While the world is rejoicing in view of "peace," see ye not that dark portentous cloud now rising and increasing in its deep tinged and angry hues over Italy? The meaning, I think, is this:

"The ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, shall hate the harlot, (Rome) and shall make her desolate, and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire; for God hath put in their hearts to fulfill His will, and to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled."

"Now the just shall live by faith." To draw back is to go to perdition. Heb. 10: 38, 39. May God make us ready, and help us to both hope and patiently wait for the redemption of Israel.

The Faithful Servant.

BY A. M. HIGGINS.

"Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find so doing." Matt. 24: 16.

In the above text, we see our Master is addressing a particular class; viz, servants. How shall we ascertain who is a servant of the Lord? Says Paul, Rom. 6: 16, "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to OBEY, HIS servants ye are?" Again, Matt. 6: 24. "No man can serve two masters." Therefore we cannot be servants of this world, and at the same time the servants of God. Now we ask, is there a way to decide with certainty, whom we serve? Matt. 6: 24–25. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon, (the world.) therefore, (for this reason,) I say unto you, (my disciples) take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body what ye shall put on. Is not the life (eternal) more than meat, and the body (immortal) than raiment?" Behold, what God hath done, and is still doing for the fowls, and the lilies, and yet Solomon, with all his care and riches, was not equally clothed with the lilies. Is not this the great secret why so many of our Brn., once servants of the Master, have left the field of labor and engaged in the service of this world? They lack that faith which enables them to claim this promise, "and all these things shall be added unto you. "O ye of little faith and slow of heart to believe this, and all other promises of our Master. I ask, is it not for the want of faith and confidence in the Lord, that the voices of so many of the watchmen are hushed? Did God ever call you to the work of feeding the household? if so, when did he give you a discharge? Again; do not the flock need the food now if ever? Then where will you find an excuse? Is there not sufficient inducement? Yes, blessed. "Go work in my vineyard and whatsoever is right I will pay you." "Feed the flock of God."

Again, in ver. 45, he is called a "wise servant." Who are the wise? See Matt. 7: 24. That man who hears and does the sayings of Christ, the Master; not a part of them, but all.

The faithful one will be giving meat when the Lord comes. Well, we see many, who, when they think the Lord is coming soon, at a set time, will start and run for a season; but those are not the ones whom the Lord calls faithful. Those are not the ones who are to be called blessed, and receive the Kingdom; for says Jesus, Luke 9: 62, "NO man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."

Will those Brn. turn and read Luke 9: 57–62? "Behold the fields are all white for the harvest " but the laborers are few."

Many have worn themselves out, and stopped to recruit. Many more hath the enemy slain. Many others have deserted, and there are "few men left."

Seventh day Sabbath.

BY W. SHELDON.

No. I.

Among other topics of Biblical research, it may be beneficial to some to read a few candid thoughts upon the following question:—

"Is the keeping of Saturday, as a Sabbath, enjoined upon Christians?" We take the negative. It will not affect the question to affirm that God originally enjoined the observance of the seventh day; this fact is conceded. In the Mosaic age, Saturday was kept by divine appointment. The seventh day (or Saturday) was the Sabbath which God gave to His ancient people, in that dispensation.

But has it been enjoined upon Christians in the gospel age? No; neither Christ nor His apostles ever enjoined it upon the subjects of the gospel dispensation. They never dealt out cautions, or denunciations concerning Sabbath-breaking as did the prophets who lived in the Mosaic age. The prophets were constantly portraying the sin of Sabbath-breaking, and charging this sin upon the transgressor as one of the blackest kind; whereas, the apostles never mention such a sin as Sabbath-breaking. Paul, in giving a catalogue of sins which should characterize the last days, never mentions that of Sabbath-breaking, which now is a world-wide sin, if a sin at all. If the non-observance of Saturday as a Sabbath is a sin in this age, Paul's omission of it among the last day sins, is unaccountable. Furthermore, upon this supposition, all of the apostles are inexcusable for not cautioning men against such a sin. Can we charge them with forgetfulness, while they were so sure to remember and denounce other sins? The truth is, the seventh day Sabbath had never been enforced in the gospel arrangement, not in a single instance; furthermore, Paul distinctly showed the church where it ceased to be in force; "blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to His cross. * * * Let no man THEREFORE judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy-day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days; which are a SHADOW of things to come; but the BODY is of Christ." Col. 2: 14–17.

The "shadow" can only be traced to the "body" that casts it. Now what is the "shadow" here spoken of? If the seventh day Sabbath is a component part of that shadow, its force is suspended when we reach the "body"—Christ.

This shadow is made up in part, of "an holy day," of "the new moon," and of "the Sabbath days." It is objected that the phrase "Sabbath days" refers only to the Jewish festival sabbaths, and not to the seventh day Sabbaths; but this cannot be. As Paul has covered all the festival sabbaths in the phrase "an holy day," as really as he includes all of the moons in the phrase, "the new moon," Paul here speaks of two classes of days, which necessarily include the seventh day Sabbaths, as there were only two classes of Sabbaths among the Jews; viz., a variety of festival Sabbaths, and the seventh day Sabbaths. Both classes of their Sabbaths, with their new moons, help compose the "shadow," which reaches only to Christ; hence, on this side of the cross, we find neither "new moon," an "holy day," (or festival sabbaths) nor "Sabbath days" in force. The "shadow" has reached the "body" which cast it, and no part of the shadow, not even Sabbaths, can come this side.

How Long shall it be to the End of these Wonders.

BY JOHN GIBSON.

I find the above question asked in Daniel 12: 5. This question and the answer to it, have been a subject upon which many of my good brethren have written, and preached, during the last ten or fifteen years; and while they have uniformly applied, or found these wonders embraced in the first three verses of the chapter, I have the misfortune not to agree with them in their application, for the following reasons:

1st. Because the question is, "How long shall it be to the end (not the beginning) of these wonders." Now we all agree that what is embraced in the first three verses of the chapter, is all in the future, and must have a beginning of fulfilment before it can have an end, and what is embraced in the third verse will never have an end.

2nd. The answer given to the question, implies that "these wonders" are certain events that would be transpiring through the number of years contained in a "time, times, and a half." Now a question arises, when was that period to commence? Not from the time the question was asked, for that, according to Usher, was 534 years before Christ, and would have ended in the eighth century after. I believe that we are generally agreed, that the period, called "time, times and a half," or "part," commenced when that power called the little horn took its seat, or in other words, when the saints of the Most High were given into his hand, for "a time, and times and the dividing of time," Dan. 7: 25; which I understand is the same period as that given by the angel in answer to the question. Therefore, I am constrained to believe that "these wonders" consisted in the existence of the papal power, and the horrible massacre of the saints in every form which demons could devise; that when the prophetic eye looked down through the scale of time, and beheld the awful scene, the angel was led to exclaim, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?"

3rd. Because the answer embraces another period which was to be fulfilled after the end of the wonders, or time, times and an half; which is embraced in the declaration—"And when he (God) shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people (or the gospel of the kingdom, Matt. 24: 14;) all these things shall be finished," or "then shall the end be." Paul to the Ephesians, 6: 13–17, describes what gives the children of God power; see also, Rom. 1: 16. I understand this power began to be scattered about 1780, and more especially in the last 40 or 45 years; the first Bible Society was formed in 1816; the Bible has been sent to all nations and the end must soon come.

4th. It makes the period called a time, times and an half, 1335 days, or years long; for we are generally agreed that the 1260, 1290, and 1335 days all commence at once, and the same time. I believe it is generally admitted by all that have been called timests, that the period called time, times and an half, "is explained by the angel to be 1290 days, and then he says, "blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days"—45 days longer, at which time Daniel will "stand in his lot."

Again: If the resurrection constitutes a part of "these wonders," it will wholly overthrow the doctrine of a thousand years between the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked, which was believed in, by most of the apostolic Fathers, and by many in our day; because, the period of time given, to the "end of the wonders," cannot embrace the resurrection of the wicked, it not being long enough. Now, brethren, it is the truth we want, and if I am wrong, I wish to be corrected.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. Burnham.

Bro. Grant:—I made it in my way last week to attend the annual Advent Conference at Boston, held in Elder Hime's Chapel on Kneeland street. There was quite a respectable gathering of ministers, and friends from several parts of the country. A number of good and interesting prayer meetings were held during the conference season, and some important discussions had in regard to our relations to each other, the world, and the principles we advocate. Different Brn. took different views of the relations we should, as advent people, cultivate with each other—many good things were said, as well as many things from which I was, by a sense of right, compelled to dissent. As the conference professed to be open, and free, I took part in the discussions, and fully expressed my views on the subject of union, and general co-operation; urging the importance of disregarding minor questions, permitting each other to enjoy different opinions on several points, and to act together, on general christian principles, with our Brn. abroad, on the great question of the literal Advent of the Savior and its kindred doctrines. Some seemed to think this would be well, and other some that it is better to act in a more circumscribed manner. To me, it does seem wrong for us, so few as we comparatively are, to live and act in an isolated capacity from each other. I yearn in my very soul to reach out my hand to, and unite my heart with every man, woman, and child who loves the Redeemer, and longs for His appearing.

O for "the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace!" I declare unto you this day that I am free from sectarian bonds. I will be free in Christ. I will go into any and every part of the sacred pasture, where the lambs and sheep are bleating for help, and do what little good I may, as God permits. My soul is bound in a bundle of life, with those who look for gospel redemption. My spirit burns with holy affection, as with living fire, towards those who wait for the Lord from heaven. I may be lost myself, but I pray, O Lord come quickly, and save thine own! O that all may learn not to build up advent parties—advent selfishness—advent sectarianism—but each other—every one of the flock of Christ in the holy faith of His speedy coming.

Edwin Burnham.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Eld. J. Howell.

Bro. Grant:—Your very kind epistle was received sometime since, but I have been prevented from answering it, and now am obliged to do it in haste. Your letter was a comfort to me, and wife also; and with you, we are determined to see the end of "the race set before us." The glory, redemption and reign, with which God will bless his people, are too good to be lost. But how few, who are dreaming of possessing the kingdom, will obtain it. It will never be received by any who do not agonize to enter into the strait gate. The Church in all past time has been obliged to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Now, some conduct as though they expected necessarily to drift that way, and obtain the "prize without any effort. How important it is to make all feel that our faith is a practical faith. That its principles are practical. Indeed, all we believe, is calculated to secure purity—holiness.

I have recently baptized eight who believe the truth, and expect to baptize more next Sabbath. O may the Lord aid them to live to God. We are in Gospel order here, and I sincerely believe we should be all over the land. Since we organized on the Gospel platform, our Brethren appear to be desirous of living nearer to God, praise his name.

Our prayer and conference meeting, the first we have had since our establishment of Church order, was a blessed good one. The Lord blessed us, and the Brethren and Sisters all seemed encouraged to attain unto eternal life by obedient faith. I had some idea this Spring of coming East, but I have hardly known what to do. Want to do right. Think now we will not come. I will do all I can for the Crisis. I like the Crisis. It breathes a sweet, heavenly spirit. My prayer to God is, to bless and aid the editor,—direct all who write for its columns, and in his Providence make it productive of the greatest good to all who peruse it.

May the peace of God abide with you and yours. Amen.

From your brother in Jesus,

John Howell.

Obituary.

Died in Vernon, Vt., May 26th, Mrs Sarah C., wife of Nelson Dunklee, aged 36.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set—but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O death!"

Ah, yes! death hath all seasons for his own. Ever since that dread sentence was pronounced in Paradise, which subjected man to death, the earth has continually witnessed scenes of anguish and mourning. No season is too sacred for the approach of death; no spot of earth too lovely to exclude his presence; no ties of friendship are too strong for him to break asunder. Each day the happiest circles are invaded, and the loved ones of earth are cut down by the destroyer, like sweet flowers before the chilling breath of Autumn. The sighs of bereaved hearts are on every breeze, yet death stays not his progress. He is filling the earth with the monuments of his triumphs, and almost every green valley is the last resting place of those who have fallen victims to his power. This, alas, is the lot of man!—Yet, amid all the wo and grief occasioned by the cruel tyrant, there is one source of consolation to the dying one who is leaving loved friends behind. Yes, there is one bright star to illumine the dark valley, and that is the joy which religion affords. Such a hope had the subject of this sketch to support her strength. Such a star of hope had she to cheer her pathway to the tomb. In early life she embraced the Savior, and has ever since been an exemplary member of the Church.

For nearly a year, she has been wasting away by the hand of disease, and, though often laboring under much physical suffering, she was never heard to murmur at her lot, but calmly resigned herself into the hands of Him who doeth all things well. When she was conscious of her approaching dissolution, she was cheered with the blest assurance that never fails to uphold the Christian. A few hours preceding her death, she sunk into a quiet slumber, from which she never awoke, but calmly breathed out her life without one struggle of pain. Gently she fell asleep as the sweet flower closes its petals at return of eve. But while she was thus peacefully sinking into the arms of death, she was all unconscious of the anguish that was rending the hearts of her dearest earthly friends—but why attempt to paint the grief that fills a husband's heart, when he beholds the companion of his youth snatched from his embrace forever, or the sorrow of loving children who look upon a beloved mother expiring in death, and are made to realize that they shall never more hear her welcome voice. Ah! these are realities which can be experienced, but never described.

The funeral discourse was preached by Eld. S. W. Bishop, from Rev. 21: 4. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."

In his remarks on the above, the speaker dwelt on the beatitudes of that sorrowless state which is to be the Christian's home, its freedom from pain, death, and aught than can mar the sweet rest and joy of the soul reposing in the glorious presence of the Savior. He also spoke of the importance of the resurrection, and of its necessity to introduce that bright era when death shall hold dominion no more.

The deceased leaves a husband and three children to mourn her loss, and deeply too, do they feel their bereavement. May He, whose ear is ever attentive to the voice of the afflicted, be their support in this hour of trial.

The following lines were selected by the deceased, a short time previous to her death, as expressing her feelings:

"There is a home for which my heart is pining,
Where rest is sweet,
And angels sit, on golden harps reclining,
At Jesus' feet;
There, basking 'neath His smile, the heart hath gladness
Beyond compare,
Unknown to earthly woes and bilghting sadness—
For God is there.
I know that earth has yet some budding flowers—
Some birds to sing—
Some friends to love, who will o'er many hours
Joy's halo fling;
Then o'er my heart may pleasure's tide be springing,
To drown each woe—
And laughter on the air be wildly ringing,
In joyous flow.
Yet I would fain away,—earth's storms are chilling,
And hopes have gone,
That once with joy my onward path was filling,
In life's bright morn!
How sweet in death's cold arms to now be resting
This form of care,
A lamb within the fold of God abiding—
For rest is there!"

Orin P. Allen.

Vernon, Vt., June 2d, 1856.

Departed this life, April 29th, 1856, Rebekah Hutchins of Whitefield, N. H., in the eightieth year of her life. Sr. Hutchins was a mother in Israel. Her well-ordered life and godly conversation was appreciated by many that knew her. The coming of Christ was the theme that has delighted her for the last 14 years of her life. We sorrow for her but not as those that have no hope, for we read, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

Domestic Summary.

Terrible Tornado in Texas.—The Galveston News has the following notice of a terrible tornado in Dallas county.

"Mr. M. M. Miller, of Pleasant Run, Dallas county is now in our city, having arrived by the steamer from Houston this morning. We have not seen Mr. Miller, but the account he has given to others of a tornado that took place in Pleasant run a week ago last Tuesday exceeds any we ever heard of in Texas. The tornado blew from the south, and commenced about an hour before sunset on the above day. Mr. Miller was himself absent from home.

He says every building he had was carried away, and not a vestige left. His partner, whose name we have not learned, was killed, also his clerk and a woman and two children, making five lives lost on his own premises. There were also four other persons killed in the immediate neighborhood, making nine in all, and some six or eight wounded. Some of his goods were carried to a distance of fifty miles, in Tarrant county; and one of the children was found dead half a mile distant from the house. This tornado extended about sixteen miles north and south, being from 200 to 300 yards in width. Over this tract the tornado swept, carrying away or prostrating everything in its course, killing horses, cattle, hogs, and other animals. Without being able to see Mr. Miller, we cannot attempt to state further particulars."

Now that a bloody collision in Kansas seems all but inevitable—a collision which can hardly fail to shake the Union to its center—we are impelled more and more to lament the infidelity of the Public Press to its plain duty of placing the facts as they have transpired fully and fairly before the community. Up to this hour, a great majority of the American journals—and preeminently those belonging to the so-called "American party"—have systematically suppressed the most important and interesting facts, and kept their readers in gross ignorance of the procession of events which were rapidly hurrying on the country to the brink of a murderous and desolating civil war.

Massacre of Mexicans and Chinese in California.—The Mariposa (California) Gazette, publishes an account of a series of serious disturbances in that vicinity, as follows:

Pancho, a Chileno of desperate character, murdered an American, named Edward Conway, and then fled. A mass meeting of citizens was held, a vigilance committee formed, at which it was resolved to expel all the Mexicans and Chilenos from the vicinity. Pancho was pursued and captured, and with several of his companions, were either hung or shot. The San Joaquin Republican states that the threat of expulsion had been carried into effect, and that eight or ten had been killed.

A letter from Mariposa, dated April 28, says:—

"At Agua Fria, under some pretext, the mob is driving away the Chinese, burning their tents and provisions, and brutally beating those whom they catch.

At Buckeye, it is worse still. A band of twenty brigands, well armed, are chasing before them, like cattle, all the Mexicans, Chileans and Chinese whom they encounter, and information just received leads to the belief that butchery is the purpose.

At Maxwell Creek, assassination is the order of the day, and has been for several days. The Americans have ordered all the Mexicans, Chileans and Peruvians to leave the country, and their fixed property, within fifteen minutes after receipt of notice; and in case of failure to comply, thirty lashes are administered.

After the notice there was a regular chase, and all of the persecuted blood have been mercilessly massacred wherever found, whether in their own house, on the roads or in the bush. At the last news the chase was still in progress on all sides, and the number of persons known to have been massacred was sixteen, and it is reasonable to believe that many others have suffered in the bush."

Later News from Kanzas.—Chicago, May 39.—Reliable information has been received here of the murder of Dr. Rott and Mr. Mitchell, of New Haven, near Lawrence. A letter to the St. Louis Democrat confirms the statement, and says they were coolly shot by the posse, ten miles from Lawrence, on the 16th inst., while the forces were collecting to attack Lawrence.

Orr Convicted.—Advices from British Guiana to May 3d, informs us of the trial and conviction of Orr, known hereabouts as the "Angel Gabriel," for sedition against the crowd, in having excited the dreadful anti-Creole and anti-Catholic riots of the 19th of February last. About sixteen of his dupes have also been convicted for different crimes, such as sedition, riot, robbery and open plunder during the confusion.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Baltic.

New York, May 27.—The United States steamship Baltic, Capt. Comstock, arrived at this port this morning, at half-past 6 o'clock.

There is considerable news of interest by this arrival.

It is reported from Hamburg that an American squadron is expected soon to enter the Baltic.

Russia is reported to have demanded explanations respecting the joint treaty secretly concluded between France, England and Austria, guaranteeing the independence of Turkey. As the rumor has not effected the stock exchange, it cannot be considered dangerous.

Russia is about to commence another campaign under Gen. Mouraveiff, against the Circassians.

Considerable excitement yet reigns in Belgium on the subject of the attempt of France to coerce the press. An ovation has been offered by the Belgium editors to Count Villain, for his expressed determination to uphold the liberty of the press. Paris correspondence, however, says that the French and Belgian governments have come to an understanding in the matter; that Belgium will take more active measures to prevent the publication of appeals to assassination, and France will take an early opportunity of expressing satisfaction therewith.

The affairs of Italy continue to excite a large share of attention.

Count Cavour has presented two important notes to the Sardinian Chambers.

The news of Gen. Walker's battle at Rivas attracted some, but not much attention in England.

The French government is stated to have its vigilance particularly awakened towards the movements of the Secret Societies, which are becoming dangerous.

Turkey.—The grand revolt which has broken out in Arabia is the theme of general conversation. Egyptian troops are to be employed in repressing it. The journals are silent on the subject.

The Smyrna papers state that the fanatics in Syria have massacred the English Consular Agent and his family.

Persia.—The Times Constantinople correspondent writes on May 1st, that he can state on the best authority that a defensive alliance has been concluded at Teheran, between Persia and the United States, and that the text of it has arrived at the Porte, where, however, it is kept very sacred.

The total cost of the war is estimated at £100,000,000.

There are no fewer than 40,000 miners on a strike in the west coast of Scotland.

A Naples letter of the 8th says:

"I am informed by those who have lately returned from visiting Sicily that the feeling of hatred and indignation which exists against the Sovereign in that island is indescribable. A match would set the whole country in flames, and no measures are being taken to ameliorate it."

Opposition to the Reforms of the Sultan of Turkey in Syria.—The accounts received at Constantinople, continue to describe Syria as in a very unsatisfactory state.

The Sultan's decree of religious equality pleases neither Mussulmen nor Christians; the Moslems rebel against the concessions to the infidels, and the latter would rather pay a tax than be compelled to serve in the army. The rioters at Naplous (Nazareth) have become alarmed at the consequences of their indiscretion, and are attempting to pacify the pasha of Jerusalem, who threatens them with punishment.

A shocking outrage has been committed at Marsh, near Aleppo. An English horse-dealer having been shot, and his house set on fire, his wife and two children perished in the flames.

The famous imposture of the Holy fire was exibited in the Church of the Sepulchre, at Jerusalem, on Saturday, April 25th, and as usual the ceremony was attended with scenes of fanatic rowdyism—the worshippers being eventually beaten out of the sanctuary by the Turkish police.

The Exodus of the Tartars.—Sebastopol, Friday, May 2.—Of all the painful and pitiful sights which have been presented to me in the course of the war which is past, there was not one which was so affecting as that of the Tartar Exodus and their flight out of the Crimea. Whether they were animated, as they say, by the dread of their Russian task-masters, or by their desire to ameliorate their condition, the motive must be powerful which can drive a whole race from their homes. They leave those peaceful and beautiful valleys forever, and flock into Balaklava with all their goods, in the hope of obtaining the means of escape from their cruel oppressors.

On Thursday, the whole population in the valleys outside the Russian lines began their mournful procession. They left their homes silently. The old men, women and children were placed on the arabas, above the pile of cushions which seem to constitute all their household furniture. Many of them cried bitterly. Several of these poor pilgrims were so exhausted from illness or old age, that there was little chance of their ever seeing the land they seek to gain. Each araba was drawn by two small bullocks or oxen, led by the head of the family; the eldest children kept by his side or followed on foot.

The women, closely veiled, in spite of their grief, looked round with wonder at the marvels which Balaklava presented, and were for a time beguiled from thoughts of their abandoned dwellings in Bionk Miskomia, Varnutka, Baidar, Upu, Ozenbash, or Cholin; but as the sea opened upon them, and they found themselves among strangers, the sense of their position came back to them with redoubled force, and they seemed lost in despair. The procession which I saw was about a mile in length, and was formed of arabas in single file as close to each other as they could pack.

They are a docile, kind-hearted, gentle race, and are much superior in appearance to the Tartars I saw at Kertch and Eupatoria. They have all fine teeth and eyes. Many of the men are very well looking, and the old men are exceedingly dignified in aspect, and possess great native ease and good breeding. The young women possess graceful forms, and are believed to be very pretty, but they are not often seen unveiled, and the old women do not display the least traces of beauty. I have never seen anywhere children more lively and handsome in the face than some who were among the emigrants yesterday.

As I was riding through the streets, some Russian officers passed, and gave signs of dissatisfaction at the proceedings of the Tartars, which were very evident in their faces. The latter were very abject in their bows as their masters passed them. And this is the end of one of the conquering races of the world! Whether the Tartars deserved their fate, or have been treated badly by fortune, one cannot but feel pity for them if theyare punished for the crimes of their ancestors. They came into the Crimea conquerors, and they leave it as exiles.

THREE DAYS LATER.

Arrival of the Africa.

New York, May 28.—The Royal Mail steamship Africa, Shannon, from Liverpool 17th inst., has arrived.

The news is wholly unimportant.

The East.—The London Times Crimean correspondence set down the Russian losses in and around Sebastopol, at 86,000, while 100,000 perished from fatigue and disease. It says they would not have been able to sustain themselves many days longer, had not peace been declared.

Syria continues in a very unsatisfactory condition.

Hostilities have recommenced between the Russians and Circassians.

The Persian-American Treaty.—The Constantinople correspondent of the London Times, in reference to the treaty between the United States and Persia, says it was concluded under the auspices of the Russian Mission, and in spirit is directed against England. It pretends to be a commercial treaty, and would be so but for three articles. The first of these says Persia, not being a maritime nation, Americans shall be obliged, for advantages which the treaty grants to their commerce, to have a fleet in the Persian Gulf, in order to defend Persia against enterprises of whatever maritime nation should attack her. Second, gives Americans the right to have their ships of war in the Shalt-ul-Arab, mouth of the Tigris; and third, allows them a factory at Kurnah.

WITH AN APPENDIX ON

THE STATE OF THE DEAD,

By John Milton,

Author of "Paradise Lost."

1 Vol. 12 Mo., 310 Pages. Price 75 Cents.

This is one of the most important works ever issued upon this solemn subject. Clear, forcible, and sometimes eloquent in his language, the author surveys the whole field, and presents his arguments and examines objections with the facility of "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The style is calm and Christian, a rare excellence in a controversial work. The Universalist, the skeptic, and the infidel, will find here that while the truths they hold are admitted in all their force, yet the reasonableness of revelation and the retribution therein revealed cannot be denied. And the believer in the doctrine of the Eternal agony of the multitudes of the Lost, will find that objections to that opinion exist in the word of God, no less serious than those which arise from the calm consideration of the subject in the light of human reason.

Let all obtain and read this work with care, and we shall await with confidence the verdict of the candid and unprejudiced.

The volume is an elegant 12mo., and contains besides the views of the poet Milton, who, with Luther, Tindale, Bishop Law and Archbishop Whately, defends the doctrine of unconsciousness in death.

It will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the price, 75 cents.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are un happily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may perhaps subserve the cause of humanity to present his advertisement to the public. The Grave of Jesus.

BY H. L. H.

In the sepulchre dark, lo, the Savior is sleeping,
While the hearts of the faithful are saddened with gloom,
For the light of his presence his followers are weeping,
While locked in death's slumbers, he rests in the tomb:
But though death hath bound him, and soldiers are watching
Around His sealed tomb, yet in God we will trust;
His flesh he hath promised shall ne'er see corruption,
His crucified form ne'er shall mingle with dust.

O Savior! where now is the promised redemption
Thy followers have hoped that thou soon would'st achieve?
Thy friends are now scattered; thy foes are triumphant,
And who on a crucified Christ can believe?
In conflict he met with the legions of darkness,
And though he was mighty, by them he was slain;
But short is the hour of their mad exultation,
Ere angels from glory shall wake him again.

Yea, though thou hast fallen, the tomb cannot hide thee,
For soon shall an angel in glory descend;
Thy prison is burst! Lo! the chains are behind thee,
Thy woes and afflictions forever now end.
Though nations with death's dark'ning shadows are covered.
No more shalt thou suffer affliction and pain;
Thy sorrows, thy toils, and thy trials are o'er,
Thy destiny now is—in glory to reign!

I've Wandered Long.

BY H. M. M'CULLOCK.

TUNE—"Deliverance will Come."

I've wandered long in exile,
A pilgrim here below;
And wait for Jesus' coming,
The kingdom to bestow.
I grieve and sigh 'mid sorrow,
And long for that blest day,
When Jesus Christ my Savior,
Shall wipe all tears away.

The world with all its pleasure
Will quickly pass away;
For Jesus hath appointed
The great decisive day.
The thrones of earth are reeling,
And Kings now trembling stand;
For fear of what is coming
Upon their guilty land.

The mighty ones are coming,
Their swords are red with gore,
And brother slays his brother,
They fall to rise no more.
But hark! amid the conflict,
A voice from heaven comes—
"Arise! aye weary pilgrims,
Your Father calls, come home!"

The Old and New Creation.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

No. V.

Now we have given a description, (though an imperfect one,) of the Old Creation; its original glory and beauty, and which was pronounced "very good" by the Creator Himself,—the entrance of sin and its fatal consequences—the original, present, and ultimate character and condition of both the good and bad seed; and find no wrong, either done or suffered, in all the providential dealings of God with His creatures, but much to admire. Indeed, we stand amazed in adoration to behold the stupendous and unprecedented love of God, in giving the Messiah to consummate the final blessedness of the inhabitants of a pure earth; especially, when we consider how vile and corrupt is the conduct of man;—then we feel that this love exceeds all that we can conceive. None but God could do and suffer all this. And we do acknowledge that God is holy, just, and true, in punishing the breakers of His law. We feel the power of His goodness and mercy in the coming of His Son to redeem, sanctify, and seal us with the Holy Spirit "unto the day of redemption." For that day, when all things will be made new, we now wait, "that we may love Him more and serve Him better," and be made altogether like Him, and "see him as He is."

To a description of the New Creation, though it be a feeble one, we now joyfully turn. We are reminded that "glorious things are spoken of thee, O City of God!" And even this work was commenced at the fall of man. That promise made to Adam and Eve was a portion of the gospel; it was "goodness," all of grace, and undeserved. Again, it was preached to Abraham, whose "faith was counted to him for righteousness;" to Isaac and Jacob also; and the work of God was carried on by patriarchs, prophets, saints, and martyrs, through the patriarchal ages; the sojourn and deliverance from Egypt, the time of the judges, kings, captivity, and restoration, till the first advent of Messiah; when those promises begun to be fulfilled. He opened the gospel in its fulness; offered grace, mercy and peace to all who would receive His message by faith; went about doing good, healing the diseased, restoring the deaf, "the lame, the halt, and the blind. He taught the multitude, cast ont devils, condemned the Pharisees; foretold their destruction, preached the resurrection, blessed little children, walked on the water, and raised the dead. As a prophet, He revealed things to come, as well as the present and past, even "from the foundation of the world," and more than that, "before the world was." He offered Himself a victim for sacrifice, and became the great High Priest to carry His own blood into the Sanctum Sanctorum, to atone for sin before God. His gracious offers were made to all. His requirements were love and obedience; whosoever will, may come by repentance. He suffered every indignity, laid down His life, arose and ascended in triumph to Heaven. He opened the fountain of sin and uncleanness, poured out the Spirit of grace and supplication" on the inhabitants of Jerusalem, who cried "what shall we do?" They looked on "Him whom they had pierced," and mourned. Surely He brought them by a way which they knew not; conviction of truth produced conviction of sin; lost in ruin and undone, they fled to Him for refuge, and fell at the foot of the cross, in sobs and tears of penitence and contrition. He opens their eyes, washes them in the fountain of His blood, and speaks peace and comfort to the soul. He then brings them into the furnace of affliction, and "through the fire," to prove them; admonishes them to "be faithful unto death," and promises them "a crown of life at the resurrection of the just." Thus has the Messiah done and suffered for "the children of the kingdom;" and thus He prepares them to meet Him, when the Lord Himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God;" when "the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive, and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Blessed be the Lord God, we are waiting for that voice to speak us into life, and to open that "mystery," when "we all shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality;" that "our vile bodies may be fashioned like unto His glorious body."

"The day of the Lord shall come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth and the works that are therein shall be burnt up." And we do long for the grace that shall be brought unto us at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

The car of time seemingly is rolling with more than its wonted velocity; even now the quaking earth is sending out her burning lava in floods, and we may next expect the riven rocks will be disgorged from her fiery bowels. "I beheld the earth, and lo! it was without form, and void, and the heavens and they had no light. I beheld the mountains, and lo! they trembled; and all the hills moved lightly. I beheld! and lo there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled. I beheld! and lo the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the Lord, and by His fierce anger." Jer. 4: 23–26. "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying,—Alleluia; for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to Him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and His wife hath made herself ready." "The King's daughter is all-glorious within, her clothing is of wrought gold. She shall be brought unto the King in raiment of needle-work; the virgins, her companions that follow her, shall be brought unto thee; with gladness and rejoicing shall they be brought, they shall enter into the King's palace." "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." In view of these glories, who will not rejoice that their "names are written in heaven;" and though there seems to be a delay," the Lord is not slack concerning His promise;" but with His Father, He is completing the counsels of His wisdom and mercy.

O for patience and perseverance to keep right, on the way. He has promised—"I will come again;" and "then we shall be like Him; (glory to God!) and see Him as He is." "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard; neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." Surely, "in this promise is fulness of joy, at His right hand there are pleasures forevermore."

Jerusalem! Jerusalem! that is the city which we seek, a tangible city, "which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." "There bloom immortal amaranths"—and there "the tree of life"—but the "flaming sword" is removed, and "twelve manner of fruits" hang on its branches. "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." "To him that overcometh, will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God."

O sinner, is there one last lingering hope for you? or will you lie down in sorrow? Why will you die? "There is a river, the streams whereof make glad the City of God." "Ho every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." That river is pure water, and it flows "from the throne of God," an inexhaustible fountain. And "the Spirit and the Bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come; and let him that is athirst, Come; and whosoever will, let him take the waters of life freely."

Who will not confess that here is an offer to all; who will break away from their wicked companions, and instantly flee to Christ?

"And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." "And I heard a great voice saying, behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God. And he that talked witn me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the walls thereof. And the city lieth four-square, and the length is as large as the breadth; and he measured the city, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it were equal." This is the capitol city of the Son of God. "And he measured the walls thereof. an hundred and forty-four cubits." A cubit being something more than a foot and a half, it shows us that the thickness of the wall, was at least, two hundred and sixteen feet; which is proportioned to the size of this incomprehensible city. "And the foundations of the wall were garnished with all manner of precious stones, having the glory of God; and her light was like a stone most precious, even like a jasper, clear as crystal. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls, and the street of the city was pure gold." Its altitude is beyond conception. Its lustre and magnificence are not to be described. And is this indeed "The Tabernacle of God?" Truly the Builder of this house is worthy of more honor than the house. This is the city for which Abraham looked, "which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." "And the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And there shall in no wise enter into it, anything that defileth, but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life. And there shall be no more curse, for the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it, and His servants shall serve Him. They need no candle, for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever." This is "the Kingdnm prepared for you (christians) from the foundation of the world." This is the purchased possession for every soul that is "born of the spirit," and its location is on the New Earth.

We have seen Eden, Adam and Eve in the garden of God, and it was beautiful; but nothing can compare with this temple of God. "The man whose name is the BRANCH, has built the temple of the Lord, and He shall bear the glory." Here is the ineffable glory for which we look, and who can but long for the instantaneous advent of the Blessed One? How often we wander from God, and when we look back, we are reminded of our relation to the serpent race, by the crookedness of our paths; but when Jesus comes, we shall be made like Him, incorruptible, and immortal. "The hour of His judgment is come!" The earth's requiem seems sounding in my ears, and we shall soon be home.

Children be faithful; and we shall soon "stand on the sea of glory, having the harps of God." Praise our God! for "whoso offereth praise, glorifieth me; and I will show him the salvation of God." Amen.

The Last Time.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

What a strange and fearful time is this in which we live! "Darkness," indeed, "covers the earth, and gross darkness the people." What rushing of men to gather together the perishing treasures of corruption! What aspiring of poor sickly humanity to posts of honor! What discordant clashing of moral and spiritual elements in the world of theology! What unnatural upbreakings in the social and domestic departments! What singular and unthought of movements among the nations politically! What fearful apostasy among those who call themselves the people of God! What burning expectations exist among the holy ones, for the immediate coming to pass of some mighty event! This, indeed, is the last time! Heaven, earth, and hell are awake, and awaking to the coming crisis awful. God, angels, men, and devils are making fearful preparation for the closing event of all events. The solemn moment hastens apace when nature's present course shall die, and time shall change its way. God of the faithful, arm us now for the conflict! Now is the hour of temptation. Now comes the heat of the battle. Now the feeble, the fainthearted, the coward shall fly the field. Now the purified ones shall be "tried"—proved. Now those who have taken the "whole armor" shall perform exploits—and they shall stand! Now those whose hearts burn with the love of God and truth, shall watch, and pray and wait for Him. People of God show yourselves valiant now! Quit you now and be strong. It is the struggle of life and death—eternal life, and eternal death—salvation or damnation—the kingdom or perdition! Wait ye remnant on the mighty One. Let us see the end of this matter. Jehovah will do wonders. Amen.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. John Brown.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I am not in the habit of writing for the press, and should not do so, did I not feel the impress of a duty which I owe to God and to the scattered flock. I have long been looking and waiting for the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, to change these vile bodies and fashion them like His glorious body. With you, I have been disappointed at different points of time, yet I have not lost my confidence in the immutable word of God; it will all be fulfilled in its own proper time, and order; and if we mistake the time, or the order, the fault is in us and not in the word; therefore let us continue to examine it, and try to find out the mind of God as he has revealed it.

In looking over the prophetic periods, it seems to me that they must terminate very soon. And if this be so, what is the order of events to be looked for? the Word says,—Dan. 8: 14, "unto two thousand three hundred days, then shall the sauctuary be cleansed." Let us believe what is written. Again, Dan. 12: 12, 13, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." We all agree that Daniel's standing in his lot has reference to his resurrection. Some think this must be the general resurrection of both the righteous and the wicked, (for the first resurrection is, say they, one thousand years in the past,) and at this time the wicked have their sentence to the lake of fire, the elements melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein are burned up;—then appears the new heaven and earth, the new Jerusalem comes down from God out of heaven and is located on the new earth. Thus the kingdom of God is established, and the sanctuary cleansed.

Another Bro. says, Daniel's lot is, to stand in the first resurrection one thousand years before the second; consequently, the Lord must come at the end of the 1335 days to raise the righteous dead, and change the righteous living; then these two classes are taken up together "to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall they ever be with the Lord." When the Lord has thus gathered His saints, He comes with them in the clouds of Heaven, sets His feet upon Mount Olivet, it pasts asunder—one-half removes towards the North and the other twards the South, and a very great valley is raised up, where the Lord locates with His saints, builds up Jerusalem, and establishes the throne of His father David, and thus the sanctuary is cleansed, and he is prepared to rule the nations "with a rod of iron," and the law goeth forth from Mount Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. This reign will continue through the thousand years, during which time he will subdue all his enemies; then comes the second resurrection, the resurrection of the wicked only, and the burning day.

Thus Brn. and Srs., we see that we all look for the cleansing of the sanctuary, but differ widely in regard to the date of the event; one placing it a thousand years before the other. Now if the cleansing of the sanctuary is a waymark, where is it placed? one thousand years this side of the burning day, or does it mark the period of that event? We also differ as to what the sanctuary is, and the order of events necessary to affect its cleansing. We can see that both of the foregoing theories cannot be right, and it seems to me, that these points of difference ought to be investigated, that the rock on which the church has split, might be discovered.

It appears to me, that these conflicting views arise from a different understanding of the 20th chapter of Revelation, where the two resurrections are brought to view;—standing one thousand years apart. My mind has been awakened to this subject by the repeated calls in the Crisis and elsewhere for the date of this thousand years. Different individuals of our own faith, as well as those who oppose, say, "do you think the world will be burnt when the Lord comes to raise the righteous?" "What will you do with the thousand years of Rev. 20:?"

For the purpose of drawing the minds of Brn. mere competent than myself, to this important subject, I submit the following comments upon this highly symbolic chapter, humbly trusting that if I am wrong, the Brn. will correct me; and if right, that light will be brought out, God be glorified, and the church edified.

Rev. 20: 1–3. Here the Revelator is permitted in a vision to look down through the gospel dispensation, at the termination of which, he "saw an angel (or messenger) come down from heaven having the key of the abyss (Whiting,) and a great chain in his hand; and he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the abyss and shut him up and set a seal over him, that he should deceive the nations no more until the thousand years should be fulfilled, and after that he must be loosed a little season." This I understand to be the commencement of the standing up of Michael for Daniel's people, Dan. 12: 1, and that the devil will fall and the seal of death will be over him during the thousand years, when he will be raised at the second resurrection to take charge of his subjects whose names are not found in the book of life. After satan is thus bound, the Revelator saw (ver. 4) "thrones and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them:" I infer that these are the twelve who had the promise of setting on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel; my reasons for this conclusion will be seen hereafter.

And at this point he saw "the persons (Whiting) of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. V. 5. But the rest of the dead lived not again, until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." In the 6th ver. they are pronounced blessed and holy, on account of their having part in the first resurrection, and are necessarily placed beyond the power of the second death, because they have obtained immortality and are never to stand before the the Son of man as candidates for judgment; but are priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years.

I conclude that the apostles are the "they," who sat upon the thrones, and that these priests are to constitute the cabinet, to assist in carrying out the laws of the kingdom that is to subjugate the earthly governments to this government of God; which is to be established in the days of these kings." Dan. 2: 44. This reign is to continue through the thousand years, during which time the saints possess the kingdom, (Dan. 7: 22) and all enemies are to be put under his feet. 1 Cor. 15: 25. I understand the first resurrection takes place at the ending of the prophetic periods, when Daniel will stand in his lot.

At the second resurrection, satan goes ont to deceive those whose names are not written in the book of life, and "gather them together to battle, the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them. And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and they shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever." 20: 8–10 Here is brought to view the burning day when the "elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also." 2 Pet. 3: 10. This will constitute the lake of fire,—and their torment will continue as long as time is counted. This brings us to the end. And now the Revelator steps back to bring up another scene. 11th ver. "And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heavens fled away, and there was found no place for them." This brings us again to the closing scene,—when "the dead, small and great stand before God." These, I regard as "the rest of the dead," of v. 5. "And the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works." And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire, this is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." vs. 14–15.

These last two verses plainly show the winding up of this world's history, or the time of harvest, when the tares are to be gathered and burned. Now, I would remark in conclusion, that it follows as a matter of course, that if the binding of satan and the first resurrection mark the end of the 2300 days, the 1335 days, it also must mark the end of the Gentile rule, and likewise the end of the 6000 years. The thousand years that commences at this point, is the ante-type of the seventh day, in which God rested, and completes the great work of the world's history.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. C. Dixon.

BRO. MERRIAM:—Having leisure, I thought I would pen a few lines for the Crisis. I feel to-day somewhat like a pilgrim and stranger—this is not my continuing city nor abiding place. The momentary joys that we have at times, are so often succeeded by sorrow, that it leads us to sigh for a better land, a freedom from sin, a home where the weary pilgrim can rest in calm repose. Such a land is promised to the faithful in the word of God. It is said: "Abraham believed God and it was counted unto him for righteousness." Now the Lord promised Abraham he would give him the whole earth for a possession, and not only to him, but to his seed after him; and Paul says: "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." "If we are Christ's"; what is it to be Christ's? Christ tells us, "if any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me." A daily denying, a daily bearing the cross,—who does this? O when we look around upon the church, even upon professed Adventists, how little vital godliness we see among them, how little denying self; the greater part seem to be seeking their own ease. Some are hoarding up treasures for the last days, others spending their time in trying to please self, getting the luxuries of this world to satisfy their sensual appetites; such, seldom have anything to give towards the promulgation of God's truth. No need of such saying they love the truth and would sacrifice all for it, their actions show to the contrary.

Says the Savior, after he carried them (his disciples) down through the signs that were to precede His coming, "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape the things that are coming upon the earth, and stand before the Son of man." Says Peter, "But the end of all things is at hand, be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer." Let us bear the cross a little longer, and soon we shall have the privilege of sitting down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, to partake of that rest, eternal and blessed.

Your Bro. looking for Jesus.

Key of Truth.

We present to our readers the following extract from Bro. Sheldon's new tract, that they may have some idea of the important truth it contains.

We hope Bro. Sheldon will be assisted in scattering it extensively in the far West.

"'What is truth?' This question should be earnestly propounded by every christian; but the mass seem contented with the inquiry, 'What is popular?' We should be willing to follow the truth, irrespective of popular theology! Let the truth be what it may, or where it may, we should strive to be with it, at whatever sacrifice!! Tradition should not deter us from a scrutinizing search for this rare article, in this age of fables!!! Without pausing to ask, 'Have any of the rulers believed,' or noted Divines embraced, this or that sentiment, we should zealously prosecute the inquiry, 'What is TRUTH?' The Savior, in addressing the Father, gives this general answer: 'THY WORD is truth.' Then let us appeal to that word for an answer to the following series of questions, holding ourselves in readiness to submit to its unequivocal testimony, however adverse to our preconceived sentiments:

1. Are saints recompensed at death, or at the resurrection? Answer: 'Thou shalt be recompensed at the RESURRECTION of the just. Luke 14: 14; Rev. 11: 18; Matt. 16: 27; Rev. 22: 12.

2. Are saints to be recompensed in heaven, or on the earth? Ans.: 'Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the EARTH.' Prov. 11: 31; Rev. 5: 10; Matt. 5: 5; Ps. 37: 11; Matt. 6: 10; Dan. 7: 27; Rev. 11: 15.

3. Are the dead conscious, or unconscious? Ans. 'THE DEAD KNOW NOT ANYTHING.' Eccl. 9: 5; Ps. 146: 4; Isa. 38: 18; Eccl. 3: 19.

4. Are departed saints now celebrating the praises of the Lord? Ans. 'The dead praise NOT the Lord.' Ps. 115: 17; Eccl. 9: 6; Ps. 6: 5.

5. Are the patriarchs in heaven? Ans. 'David is NOT ascended into the heavens.' Acts. 2: 34; John 3: 13.

6. Have the prophets received their reward, or does it await them at the judgment? Ans. 'The time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst GIVE REWARD unto thy servants the PROPHETS.' Rev. 11: 18; Ps. 17: 15.

7. Have the apostles gone to heaven? Ans. 'As I said to the Jews, Whither I go ye cannot come, so now I say TO YOU' (apostles.) John 13 33; 1 Tim. 4: 16.

8. Are saints crowned at death, or at Christ's coming? When the chief Shepherd SHALL APPEAR, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. 1 Peter 5: 4: 2 Tim. 4: 18; 1 Peter 1: 4, 5.

9. Do saints go to glory at death, or at the appearing of Christ? Ans. 'When Christ who is our life shall appear, THEN shall ye also appear with him in glory.' Col. 3: 4; 1 John 3: 2.

10. Did Job expect to see his Redeemer at death, or 'at the latter day'—in heaven, or upon the earth,—in a disembodied state, or in his resurrected capacity? Ans. 'I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand AT THE LATTER DAY upon the EARTH; and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my FLESH shall I see God.' Job 19: 25, 26; 1 Thess. 4: 16.

11. Did David expect to be satisfied at death, or at the resurrection? Ans. 'I shall be satisfied when I AWAKE with thy likeness.' Ps. 17: 15; Phil. 3: 20, 21.

12. Will the saints 'shine' in the kingdom at death, or at the resurrection? Ans. 'Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall AWAKE, * * they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament.' Dan. 12: 2, 3; Matt. 13: 40–43.

13. Did Christ promise to receive saints unto himself at death, or at his coming? Ans. 'I will COME AGAIN and RECEIVE YOU unto myself.' John 14: 3; Rom. 8: 23.

14. Do the saints enter the kingdom at death, or at Christ's coming? Ans. 'When the Son of man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him * * THEN shall the King say unto them on His right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom.' Matt. 25: 31–34; Dan. 7: 27.

15. Did the apostles groan for a disembodied state, or for the redemption of the body? Ans. 'We ourselves groan within ourselves waiting for the adoption, to wit, the REDEMPTION of the BODY.' Rom. 8: 23; 2 Cor. 5: 4.

16. When will the saints receive eternal life? Ans. 'In the WORLD TO TO COME eternal life.' Mark 10: 30: Luke 18: 30.

17. Are the saints made equal to the angels at death, or at the resurrection? Ans. 'They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the RESURRECTION of the dead * * THEY are equal unto the angels.' Luke 20: 35, 36; Matt. 22: 30.

18. Were the ancient worthies rewarded at death? Ans. 'These all died in faith, NOT having received the promises.' Heb. 11: 13, 39, 40.

19. When did they expect their reward? Ans. 'Others were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better RESURRECTION.' Heb. 11: 35; 1 Peter 1: 13.

20. Will the soul come from heaven, or the grave, at the resurrection? Ans. 'God will redeem my SOUL from the power of the GRAVE.' Ps. 49: 15; Ps. 89: 48.

21. Are men in possession of immortality? Ans. 'The King of kings and Lord of lords; who ONLY hath immortality.' 1 Tim. 5: 15, 16; Rom. 2: 7.

22. When will the saints obtain immortality? Ans. 'At the last trump * * this mortal must put on immortality.' 1 Cor. 15: 52, 53.

23. Does the soul die? Ans. 'He spared not their SOUL from DEATH. Ps. 78: 50; Ps. 22: 29: Ezek. 18: 4, 20; Joshua 10: 35; Ezek. 22: 27; Isa. 38: 17; Ps. 56: 13; Rev. 16: 3; Job 33: 29, 30; Ps. 30: 3; Ps. 119: 175.

24. What would be the ultimatum without a resurrection? Ans. 'If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is not Christ risen * * then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are PERISHED.' 1 Cor. 15: 13–18."

Socrates rightly said of contentment, opposing it to the riches of fortune and opinion, that it is the wealth of nature; for it gives everything that we want, and really need.

Characteristics of Modern Preaching.

"Those who have been compelled to sit Sabbath after Sabbath and listen to productions of an hour's length without any life or soul in them, penned in the reader's study and adhered to in their delivery with a pertinacity absolutely painful to the listener, and all under the name of preaching, will appreciate the following from Rev Sidney Smith, a somewhat eccentric English Divine:

'The great object of modern sermons is to hazard nothing; their characteristic is decent debility; which alike guards their authors from ludicrous errors, and precludes them from striking beauties. Every man of sense, in taking up an English sermon, expects to find it a tedious essay, full of commonplace morality, and if the fulfilment of such expectations be meritorious, the clergy have certainly the merit of not disappointing their readers.

In pointing out the total want of connection between the privilege of preaching, and the power of preaching well, we are giving no opinion as to whether it might or might not be remedied; but merely stating a fact. Pulpit discourses have insensibly dwindled from speaking to reading; a practice, of itself, sufficient to stifle every germ of eloquence. It is only by the fresh feelings of the heart that mankind can be very powerfully affected. What can be more indecorous than an orator delivering stale indignation and fervor of a week old; turning over whole pages of violent passions, written out in German text; reading the tropes and apostrophes into which he is hurried by the ardor of his mind; and so affected at a preconcerted line and page, that he is unable to proceed any further!'

Ministers of the present day treat their congregations to such sermons Sabbath after Sabbath, and wonder at their drowsiness and inattention, and further, that the results of their preaching (?) are not visible in the lives of their hearers. If that is preaching, any one can preach who has a moderate knowledge of theology or can gain a batch of second-hand sermons. Perhaps this is heresy, but we, when we attend church like to hear preaching; our reading we can do in our own 'easy chair' at home. Give us Sydney Smith's view of the subject."

Solicitude for Souls.

During a heavy storm off the coast of Spain, a dismasted merchantman was observed by a British frigate drifting before the gale. Every eye and glass were on her, and a canvass shelter on a deck almost level with the sea suggested the idea that there yet might be life on board. With all his faults, no man is more alive to humanity than the the rough and hardy mariner; and so the order instantly sounds to put the ship about, and presently a boat puts off with instructions to bear down upon the wreck. Away after that drifting hulk go these gallant men, through the swell of a roaring sea. They reach it; they shout; and now a strange object rolls out of that canvass screen against the lee shroud of a broken mast. Hauled into the boat, it proves to be the trunk of a man, bent head and knees together, so dried and shriveled as to be hardly felt within the ample clothes, and so light that a mere boy lifted it on board. It is laid on the deck; in horror and pity the crew gather round it; it shows signs of life; they draw nearer; it moves, and then mutters—mutters in a deep, sepulchral voice—"There is another man!" Saved himself, the first use the saved one made of speech, was to seek to save another. Oh! learn that blessed lesson. Be daily practising it. And so long as in our homes, among our friends, in this wreck of a world which is drifting down to ruin, there lives an unconverted one, there is "another man," let us go to that man, and plead for Christ; go to Christ and plead for that man; the cry, "Lord save me, I perish," changed into one of welcome to the Savior's ear, "Lord save them, they perish."—GUTHRIE.

Good Advice.

The following was copied from a paper long preserved in the wallet of a worthy old gentleman:

"Never be idle; if your hands cannot be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of the mind. Always speak the truth. Make few promises. Live up to your engagements. Keep your own secrets, if you have any. When you speak to a person look him in the face. Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue. Good character is above all things else.

You cannot be essentially injured except by your own acts. If any one speaks evil of you, let your life be so that no one will believe him. Drink no intoxicating liquors. Ever live (misfortunes excepted) within your income. When you retire to bed, think over what you have been doing during the day. Make no haste to be rich, if you would prosper. Small and steady gains give competency with tranquility of mind. Never play at any kind of game of chance. Avoid temptation through fear you may not withstand it. Earn money before you spend it. Never run in debt, unless you see a way to get out again. Do not marry until you are able to support a wife. Never speak ill of any one. Be just before you are generous. Keep yourself innocent, if you would be happy. Let your life be daily by faith of the Son of God, who has loved you and died for you; and to do good and communicate, forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased. Read over the above maxims at least once a week.—Register.

The Triumph.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Child of righteousness, the joy of the Lord awaits thee! Thy triumph is yet to come. Palms of salvation, robes of light, crowns of glory, a life eternal, angelic society, the unclouded vision of immortality, personal association, with the adorable Jesus; the possession of the unfading heavenly inheritance, the right to the eternal city of God, the familiar and changeless friendship of redeemed millions elect, exemption from all that pains, harms, or makes afraid, and an approach of intimacy with the great God himself, are the blessings presented before the faithful. Wilt thou lose all this? Long have thine enemies vaunted over thy tears, thy groans, thy sighs, thy mournings—long hast thou hung thy head in pitiful grief, and in thy lonesome spirit brooded over the agony of desire to see thy Beloved's face—long hast thou wondered that the chariot wheels of thy Redeemer were so slow to move—times without number thou hast bent thine eyes, fevered with holy anxiety, on the heavens, and wept "to see His sign appear upon the opening sky"—long has thy praying spirit, in trembling reachings of eager, earnest emotion, anticipated the glorious vision final:—and wilt thou falter now? Awake, awake to sing thy song of victory! Thou shouldst not now despond. Thy Saviour, and thy commander is the Mighty One of Israel. He rideth on the heavens for thy help, and underneath are the everlasting arms. Fear not, O thou worm of earth, nor be dismayed thou fainting, feeble one; for the eternal God is thy refuge, and thy triumph shall be sure.

He who keeps thee, and watches over thee, and shall redeem thee, fainteth not, nor is weary. All the elements are in his hands, and he shall control them for thy good. Thou art the care of Him who created, upholds, and shall glorify; who holds the winds in his fists, and the waters in the hollow of his hand—who sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and turns the seasons in their courses—who ruleth the raging of the sea, and when the storms thereof arise, he stilleth them—who rules the jarring earthquake at our feet, shakes the blazing lightnings from his fingers, and scatters the startling echoes of the bellowing thunders from the cloud—who weighs the mountains in his balances, as he heaves them from their awful foundations, and makes the everlasting hills to tremble at his power—whose throne is fiery flame, and his wheels are burning fire—whose voice commands the distant orbs immense, and guides their harmony sublime—who doeth according to his will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of earth; this all-powerful God is ours. O fearful one, commit thy way to him—rest in him—wait for him—pray to him—work for him—speak for him—suffer for him, and if thou diest die for him; and THOU SHALT TRIUMPH IN HIM!

The Two Covenants.

BY ELD. J. HEMMENWAY.

No. I.

"Which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants; the one from Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar."—Gal. 4: 24.

Much has been written and preached, in regard to the two covenants, and much more may be written, and the subject would not be exhausted; for it opens to the mind a large field of truth to be investigated, and is a subject of importance to the Church. It is a subject in which I have been much interested and profited; and wishing to do all that I can, to give and receive light, I take my pen to communicate a few thoughts for the benefit of those that may be interested.

I wish to inquire, what we are to understand by the term covenant. It is rendered in the margin, testament; which signifies will or an agreement; hence, we may read the text thus;—the two agreements; the one, from Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar.

In order to have an agreement, there must be two or more parties; and it presupposes that they have some object to obtain by entering into an agreement; each party agreeing to certain stipulations, in order to obtain the object.

Now let us examine the covenant from Mount Sinai, its stipulations and the object to be gained by keeping it.

By reading Ex. 19:, we learn that the Lord called Moses up into Mount Sinai, and there gave him his Law. In 19: 5, we find the condition stated upon which Israel can become a peculiar people, and a KINGDOM of priests, an holy nation.

The conditions are, that they obey his voice, and keep his covenant. The Lord's voice is his law, which was given to Moses upon the Mount, which we find recorded in chap. 20: and onward through the book of Exodus, embracing the ten commandments, and ordinances of the Church.

HIS COVENANT is what He promises to the people on condition that they obey his voice, or law. By reading Ex. 23: 20–23, we learn that the Lord promised to drive out the nations before them, (Israel) until they inherit the land from the Red Sea, even unto the Sea of the Philistines; and, from the desert unto the river. In chap. 24: 7, 8, we find the following agreement of the people with the Lord. "And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people, and they said, All that the Lord hath said, that will we do, and be obedient. And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you, concerning all these words."

Paul speaks of this act of Moses, as the dedication of the first covenant, Heb. 9: 19–22. As the people journeyed from Sinai to the land promised in the covenant; when they neared the land, Moses was directed to go up into the top of Mount Pisgah, that he might behold the land, but was not permitted to enter it. Deut. 3: 27. After Moses came down from the Mount, Deut. 4:, he called the attention of the people to the covenant the Lord made with them at Sinai, and rehearsed it and the Lord's dealings with them from the time they left Sinai, until that time; also repeats the law and the promises, or blessings they would obtain by keeping the law. Read Deut. 28: and notice that Moses states the condition, in the first verse, upon which they can have the blessings: and notice, that amongst all the blessings, there is not one promise of eternal life. From the 14th verse, to the end of the chapter, we have the judgments that would be sent upon them, if they did not keep the law.

Having found the covenant from Mount Sinai that gendereth to bondage, I wish to notice a few important points involved in this covenant.

1. This covenant is made with a nation; as a nation, they receive the promises, and as a nation, they suffer the judgments; "the iniquities of the fathers are visited upon the children, unto the fourth generation." Ex. 20: 5.

2. All promises contained in this covenant are of a temporal nature, and only to be enjoyed while they keep the law. Deut. 28: 13.

3. Whenever the nation repented of their transgressions, and kept the law, the promises would hold good, providing, it was in their dispensation; or the time for which the law was given, which was until the seed should come. Gal. 3: 19. After the seed (Christ) came, it was impossible for the Jews to return under the promises of the old covenant, unless it can be shown that the same promises are put into the new covenant.

4. All prophecy to the Jewish nation, as such, is based upon the condition given in the covenant. Let it be remembered that all blessings promised in the covenant were on conditions; hence when the prophets speak of the blessings that shall come upon Israel, it is on condition they repent; and when judgments are spoken of as coming, if they repent, the judgments are turned away. If the Jews had kept the covenant, they should not have been scattered, and then there would have been no necessity of a prophecy of their return. If there is no conditional prophecy, then the Jews can return without repenting; and if the Lord suffers them to return as a nation, without repenting, he breaks the covenant on his part; for he said, if they walked contrary to him, he would walk contrary to them.

5. If there is a promise of the return of the Jews that is valid now, it must be found in the new covenant, for when the Lord made a new covenant, he disannulled the old one. Heb. 7: 18, 19. 8: 8—9. The old covenant ended with Christ, and all the promises of the old covenant were forfeited by the Jews as a nation, and cannot be obtained, from the fact, that the new covenant does not recognize the Jew or Gentile, as nations; but offers eternal life to all that fear God and work righteousness.

If the old covenant is disannulled, as Paul said it was, then all promises to the Jewish nation, as such, whether contained in prophecy, or not, have ceased, from the fact that all promises made under that covenant were on conditions, and the time for which the covenant was made has expired, and a new agreement entered into with the house of Israel and Judah.

All will see that I admit there is conditional prophecy; but some may say, there is no condition stated by the prophets in many instances. That is true, and there was no necessity of stating conditions, from the fact they were speaking of things that were promised in the covenant, and the conditions were stated there. If there is a single prophecy in regard to the Jewish nation that is not involved in the covenant, then, that prophecy cannot be on conditions; but all predictions of blessings or judgments upon the nation, as long as the covenant is valid, are dependent upon the course the people pursue. Please read Jer. 18: 7—10,—there we have the conditions of prophecy to nations as such. If the Lord utters his judgments against a nation, and that nation repents, the Lord must turn these judgments away, or his word fails. If the Lord has laid down a rule for prophecy under the old covenant, will he not abide by it in every instance? Certainly he will. If the nation is found in a scattered condition, when that covenant ends, must they not remain so, unless some new arrangement is made for their return? Does the new covenant make any provision for the return of the Jews, as a nation? No! From the fact that the covenant does not recognize Jew, or Gentile, as nations, but offers eternal life to all that believe. Now, I would like to refer to one conditional prophecy, where the condition is not mentioned, and show that the prophecy was not fulfilled. Micah 3: 12. "Therefore Zion shall for your sakes, be ploughed as a field." This is stated and no conditions referred to. Now turn to Jer. 26: 18, and we see that the same prophecy is spoken of; and in v. 19, it is stated that the Lord repented of the evil, because the king repented. If this is not conditional prophecy, then I fail to understand what can be conditional.

I think I have said enough in regard to conditional prophecy, and promises of the old covenant. Now let us look for a few moments at the law upon which the covenant is based. If the covenant is disannulled, then of course the law of the covenant cannot be in force, and hence the law and covenant from Mount Sinai are ended, including the seventh day Sabbath. Thus ends the old covenant, or agreement, between the people and the Lord. It ends with Christ the promised seed. It has done its work; it has filled its place. "It was added because of transgression, till the seed should come." He has come and nailed the law to the cross by his death. He has risen from the dead with all power in heaven and on earth, and become the "mediator of a BETTER COVENANT," which was established upon better promises. Heb. 8: 6.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 11, 1856.

Baptism.

No. II.

In our first article, we endeavored to show that "water baptism is a Christian duty."

We would now inquire, who are proper subjects for baptism.

We answer,—those, and only those, who have repented of their sins, and believed on our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

PROOF.

In Acts 2: 38–41, where Peter instructs men what to do who wished to be saved, and remember this is after the resurrection and ascension of Christ, he says—"REPENT and be baptized every one of you." This shows clearly that repentance should precede baptism. Then it follows without controversy, that those who have not repented, are not proper subjects for baptism.

In ver. 41, we read,—"then they that GLADLY received his word were baptized."

Persons who have not come to years of understanding, could not receive the word with gladness, nor any other way; consequently, none are subjects for baptism, but those who are capable of receiving the word.

In Mark 16: 16, we read,—"He that BELIEVETH, and is baptized, shall be saved."

Here again, it is plainly taught that the candidate for baptism has something to do on his part, before he is qualified to receive the ordinance. If he has not BELIEVED, as well as repented, he is not prepared for baptism.

What was necessary in the case of the eunuch as recorded in Acts 8: 36, 37?

"And Philip said,—if thou BELIEVEST with all thine heart, thou mayest."

From these passages, and many more that might be brought from the Scriptures, it appears evident that none are proper subjects for baptism, but those who have repented of their sins, and believed the gospel of Christ.

Infants can neither repent, nor believe, consequently, they are not fit subjects for baptism.

We see no way to avoid this conclusion, and adhere to the Bible. It is true that good men have thought otherwise.

Let us examine a few moments the Scriptures usually brought to sustain infant baptism.

Paul says in 1 Cor. 1: 16, "And I baptized also the household of Stephanas."

Acts 16: 15. "And when she (Lydia) was baptized, and her household."

In neither of these cases is there a word said about infants, hence these passages prove nothing for either side, as there are many households without young children. We are referred to Acts 16: 33. "And he (the keeper of the prison,) took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway."

There is nothing said here, either, about children, but if we examine ver. 32, we find that those who were baptized in this instance, were individuals to whom the word had been spoken by the Apostles, and therefore were not infants.

The verse reads—'And they spake unto him (the keeper of the prison) the word of the Lord,' and to ALL that were in his house;" then it follows, that ALL in his house were capable of understanding the word spoken, and when they believed, the Apostles were ready to baptize them.

In Acts 18: 8, another "house" is spoken of, as receiving baptism, but not a word about infants, or young children.

It reads,—"And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house, and many of the Corinthians hearing, believed and were baptized."

In this case, it will be noticed, that not only the ruler believed, but ALL his house, as well as the Corinthians who were baptized.

The Bible order is plainly this:—

1st,—Hear.
2nd,—Believe.
3d,—Be baptized.

The last example was some twenty years after the ascension of Christ, which shows that baptism was not nailed to the cross as some have claimed.

We think we have now mentioned all the passages that refer to household baptism. We leave the candid reader to judge whether there is any proof in favor of the baptism of infants.

Let us inquire of the historian relative to this point.

Says Kitto,—one of the ablest biblical expositors—"Infant baptism was established neither by Christ, nor his apostles." Vol. 1, p. 287.

Neander, the most distinguished Church historian, says:—"That Christ did not establish infant baptim, is CERTAIN."

Who did? By whose authority?

We find no mention whatever of infant baptism till the time of Turtullian, two hundred years after Christ.

We have now learnt from the best uninspired testimony, that Christ and the apostles did not establish infant baptism; and we can find no trace of it in the Bible. Consequently, we conclude without a doubt, that none but "those who have repented of their sins, and believed on Christ," are proper subjects for baptism.

In our next we purpose to speak of the Bible MODE of baptism.

Our Position.

We have been frequently asked to define our position.

It is well known that the Crisis was first issued for the special object of giving the evidences in favor of the late time argument; and for the general object of spreading vital Christianity, and all Bible truth.

In publishing the Crisis, we had no other aim but to glorify God, and this is our only reason for continuing its publicaiion; and our prayer is, that as soon as it ceases to accomplish this object, it may come to an end.

We freely confess that we have been disappointed and mistaken, and let him that is without fault in these points, cast the first stone at us.

In our "special object," many thought us too rigid,—perhaps we ought to plead guilty—but we will try to atone for past mistakes and errors in judgment, by Christian largeness in our "general object."

Some may inquire,—"what is your creed?"

The Bible.

"Where are your articles of faith?"

In the Bible.

"What is your rule of discipline?"

The Bible.

"What Church do you sustain?"

The Church of Christ.

"What party do you fellowship?"

All that love Jesus.

"But whom do you call your brethren?"

All Christians, whether black or white, rich or poor, bond or free.

"What is your test of fellowship?"

Christian character.

In short, let us say in the language of another:—

"WE ARE CHRISTIANS, to the exclusion of all the names of faction and party; but not to the exclusion of the GOOD of any party.

THE BIBLE IS OUR RULE, to the exclusion of all the creeds, covenants, disciplines and articles of faith ever prepared by uninspired men, and imposed upon the Church.

Christian character is our only test of fellowship and communion, to the exclusion of all the shibboleths of party and tests of bigotry ever urged upon the humble followers of Christ."

This is our present position.

Every thing seems to indicate that we are VERY NEAR the great day when Jesus will be seen coming in all his glory, and we are ready to labor with every Christian in every denomination, and unite our feeble effort for the general good of the Church of Christ.

We are heartily sick of sectarian walls, and wherein we have helped build them, we are willing to assist in pulling them down.

We do not require that one shall think just as we do, or occupy our stand point, before we can call him brother; what we wish to know is this:—does he love God and his truth? is he following the light, and are his motives pure?

Some may ask,—"How broad is your platform?"

We answer,—broad enough to hold every Christian on this planet.

A few words more relative to our paper, and we close.

We are resolved on one thing relative to the Crisis, which is,—that it shall be strictly a PEACE maker.

If our brethren send any unkind expressions in their articles, such words will be omitted; but we are happy to say that we are very RARELY tormented with anything of the kind.

We have but little confidence in the religion of a man who wishes to speak unkind and bitter words to any one. Remember, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

We would say in conclusion, we will try to make our paper as good as we can, and earnestly desire your prayers, that we may do all to the glory of GOD.

Old Oorrespondence.

The following is a copy of a letter from a preacher, to one of the members of his flock. We give it to show the deep-toned piety of those times, as well as their faith.

"Poland circuit, Apr. 4th, 1804.

MY SISTER IN THE LORD:—I received your letter the other day from Portland, and rejoice that though among the wicked, you are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, nor of me his unworthy servant. But I rejoice with trembling,—fearing that it will not always be the case; for I am not ignorant of satan's devices, and am sensible that he will not cease his endeavors to lead you away from your own steadfastness, by presenting all the baits which are the most tempting to youth.

O sister awake! and keep awake! lest in an unguarded hour the enemy take your crown! Watch and pray, be sober and hope unto the end, for the glory that shall be revealed at the coming of Jesus, when the dead shall hear His voice, and come forth, they that have done good, to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation! Awful thought! Oh! let it ever solemnize your mind, and keep you on your guard, lest that day find you unprepared, for as a snare it will come upon those that dwell careless upon the earth.

If you wish in all things to choose the true and perfect way to bliss, measure not your attainments by any who profess religion, any more than by those who do not; for there are many unsound professors, even hypocrites, and deceivers who transform themselves into angels of light. Take heed! take heed!! lest you be led away; as you have received the Lord Jesus, so walk in Him, and then you need not fear the openly profane, nor the poisonous, abominable Pharisee; follow them as far as they follow Christ, and no further; for it is more than probable that you willfind some wicked and proud Methodist.

I have much to say, but time and paper fails. I hope we shall meet in heaven. I have some good times on this circuit. A few have been converted of late. I trust you pray for your servant in the gospel."

Sentence on Mystic Babylon.

BY R. MORRILL.

"Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double, according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double. How much she hath glorified herself and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her."—Rev. 18: 4—7.

In this portion of Scripture we seem to have a prediction of a great movement in this world; and the question arises, has it been fulfilled?

I have supposed that it might have been in the days of Martin Luther,—by him and those who came with him out of the old Roman Catholic Church, or rather that the first part of it was then fulfilled; namely, "Come out of her my people." But on examination of the whole message, I find that the same "people" who are commanded to come out of her, are also to reward her as she rewarded them; which was not done by Luther and his followers.

Some suppose that this message is now being given, and that it will be obeyed by Christians; but let such bear in mind, that, "Reward her even as she rewarded you," is a part of the message. But how has she rewarded the saints of God?

Let Rev. 17: 6, answer. "And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. Also 18: 24.

And will the saints also, in return, drink the blood of the old mother of harlots? or, in other words, will Christians take the sword to destroy her?

I answer, they will not; for Jesus has said, "put up thy sword,  for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Matt. 26: 52.

Therefore this Scripture never will be fulfilled by Christians.

But who will fulfil it?

Let us look to the Bible for an answer.

Verse 8th, immediately succeeding this message, reads thus:

"Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

Rev. 17: 16, 17. "And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. For God hath put it in their hearts to fulfil his will."

We find then that the ten horns are to fulfil this Scripture, or obey this message, and therefore, we are not to look for its fulfillment from any other source.

But there are objections urged against this position.

It is supposed by some, that, as the voice that gave this message, or is to give it, is said to come from heaven, it either refers to a movement in the Church, or to a voice directly from the throne of God.

But this supposition is, I think, unfounded; for the word heaven occurs in the book of Rev., when it cannot refer either to the throne of God, or the Church. See Rev. 12: 3, 7–9, 12. Here, "heaven" evidently means an exalted position, as also in the text under consideration.

Again, it is urged that because the term "my people" is used, it therefore must mean the Church, or God's people.

I answer—if it could be shown that this is to be the literal voice of God, there would be some force in this objection; but if it is to be a movement in the Roman States, set on foot by their great men, this objection is of no force; for it would be very natural for them to use the term "my people," or "my countrymen" in making this move.

Brethren and Sisters in Christ, let us one and all, take heed to the sure word of prophecy, believe and obey it to the end, and we shall surely be saved in God's everlasting kingdom.

Eighteen Things.

In which young people render themselves very impolite:

1. Loud laughter.
2. Reading when others are talking.
3. Cutting finger nails in company.
4. Leaving meeting before it is closed.
5. Whispering in meeting.
6. Gazing at strangers.
7. Leaving a stranger without a seat.
8. A want of reverence for superiors.
9. Reading aloud in company without being asked.
10. Receiving a present without some manifestations of gratitude.
11. Making yourself the topic of conversation.
12. Laughing at the mistakes of others.
13. Joking others in company.
14. Correcting older persons than yourself, especially parents.
15. To commence talking before others are through.
16. Answering questions when put to others.
17. Commencing to eat as soon as you get to the table. And—
18. In not listening to what one is saying in company—unless you desire to show open contempt for the speaker. A well-bred person will not make an observation whilst another of the company is addressing himself to it.—Selected.

A Request.

I wish to say through the Crisis, that if any of the preaching brethren, travelling West through Wisconsin to Iowa, can make it convenient to give us a call, we will accommodate them as well as we can, and help them on their journey. There have been none of our doctrines preached here, and the people are very much prejudiced. We have scattered some papers and books, but most people will not read them. I think it will take a skilful workman to do them any good, but there is nothing impossible with God.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. MERRIAM:—Suffer me to scribble a little for the Crisis. I am visiting among the islands, exhorting, instructing, and giving lectures as I have opportunity. I am generally received with the greatest respect and hospitality, for which I praise God, and my benefactors. But there are exceptions to this general rule, and I will relate one of my adventures to a place which I will call, Nameless. I came to Nameless a perfect stranger, carrying my valise in my hand, walking on foot, just as Jesus used to go. There was nothing great in my humble appearance, no superfluous dress, no ornaments, no gold watch or chain; but, I trust I had the love of God in my heart, and the love of my fellow men likewise.

I began in my usual way, by questioning the people, where I called, like this:

"Do you love God, and the blessed Savior?"

"Yes."

"Well, I am glad of it; then I suppose you love to serve him, and obey his commands, and you love his Word, and try to understand it, and love his appearing too."

"Yes."

"Well, religion teaches us to visit the fatherless and widows in affliction, and keep unspotted from the world; to deal justly, love mercy, and walk humbly."

I then opened my bundle, and gave little books to the children,—all seemed pleased thus far.

I then said, "I have been walking some distance, and am very tired, and want to find a place to rest; could you keep a man like me to-night?"

"I don't think we could, it would not be convenient."

"Can you tell me where I can stay?"

"I guess Mr. —— will keep you."

So on I went to the next place.

"Can you keep me to-night?"

"No, it is not convenient; Mr. —— will keep you."

So on I went, going through the same exhortations, and giving my little books to children in every place.

Next I was directed to a boarding house.

I went to that, and inquired if they could keep a stranger for a night?"

"No, we don't keep strangers, there is a tavern near by; strangers always go to the tavern."

Thus I had enquired at some eight or ten houses, and getting discouraged, I went to the tavern according to the advice and direction of these christians. Most all of them said they had a hope they would not exchange for worlds.

When I enquired, is this a religious people? they answered:

"O yes; we have got a blessed good minister."

"Does he lead the people to be good?"

"O yes; we have good society, we have preaching every Sunday, and we have a Sunday-school, too."

Oh dear! I wished myself among those rough, uncultivated, yet kind hearted, hospitable, generous, noble, christian,—yes, whole hearted christian fishermen, among whom I had been traveling for six weeks past, where there was not a family however poor, but would take the stranger in, with his valise in his hand, and give him the best the house afforded, and do it cheerfully too, and felt glad that I did call, and visit them.

But just as soon as I got where it looked more like a civilized country, with good roads, and meeting houses with their spires pointing to heaven; I found that godliness had lost its power, and had left only a form, without the principles. What is godliness but to be Christ-like; and is this Christ-like to treat a stranger thus, especially when he comes laden with the truths of the gospel, without money or price?

But so they treated my Master, and why should I expect any better treatment than he had. It is enough for me, that I be as my Master. I will bear it patiently. It is but a little while, praise the Lord, before the wicked will cease from troubling, and the weary be forever at rest. Praise God, there is a rest that remains for his people. Praise Him for the hope I enjoy. Oh! let it not be like the hope of the hypocrite.

I went to the tavern, paid tavern price, and had a good praying season in the family next morning.

I made my way from Nameless, as fast as possible. Praised be God, in two hours I got into a different atmosphere altogether, and among a different sort of christians;—those who were Christ-like, for our God has yet a few witnesses on the earth. O yes, and I love to get among them, for when I love God, I know I love His people.

See to it, Brn. and Srs. in the Lord, who love Jesus and His appearing, that you have the marks of Jesus' upon you. One is, "be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."

Others are, courtesy, meekness, temperance, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity or love. Let these things be in you and abound, and you will have an abundant entrance into the glorious kingdom which awaits God's people.

Your Bro. in tribulation and patience,

Letter from Sr. N. J. Pribble.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I write to let you know that I am still seeking for glory, immortality, and eternal life. We are surrounded by all the evils that wicked men can invent, but I expect the Lord will soon send his angels to gather all those who have made a covenant with Him by sacrifice. May God help us to renew our covenant with Him. My prayer is, that we may be like Nathaniel of old, true Israelites indeed. I love the Lord—I know I do, and I love all that love Him in sincerity and in truth. I am thankful for the paper. There are no meetings in this place. My Bible and Crisis, are my daily study.

Your sister, praying that I with you may have an entrance into God's everlasting kingdom. NANCY J. PRIBBLE.

Letter from Bro. S. C. More

BRO. MERRIAM:—I have been much oppressed since my sickness; first, for want of remunerative employmemnt, and now with more of it than I can possibly perform. I am in danger of being overcharged, especially as "that day" is so near, and,—alas! will overtake so many as a thief stealing upon them, and finding them "sowing to the flesh," ready for corruption only. Brother, shall we be found worthy of the benediction of our Savior when He shall come to reward his servants? Then let us press forward and gain the prize which is now so shortly to be given.

With much love to all the scattered flock, now soon to be gathered, I remain your Bro. in Christ. J. C. MORE.

For the Crisis

Letter from D. M. Leavitt.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I should like to say a few words to the little flock through the Crisis. Some may desire to know how it is with me. Well, I am striving for the reward, and am thankful to God that we have a descriptive account given in God's word, of the reward which is so desirable, which buoys us up in the hour of adversity and is to be given, not at death, but when Jesus comes. Where a man's treasure is, there his heart will be also. We are commanded to "lay not up for ourselves treasures on earth where moth and rust doth corrupt, and thieves break through and steal," but lay them up in heaven. Now in order to do this, we must keep the commandments of God, for in keeping them there is great reward, even eternal life, by Jesus Christ. "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." This fact makes me and every other child of God love, and earnestly desire the coming of our Master. What made us look for Him in '54? An argument which we could not gainsay, drawn from the Bible and history. What makes us look for Him now? Because we believe our Bibles, and that his coming is yet future. The word of God has not failed, the failure is in our not understanding it. "But light is sown for the righteous," and if we have the spirit that leads into all truth, we shall have light in our dwellings. May God help us to be humble, is my prayer, for "before honor cometh humility."

The faith of some may be shaken by peace being declared in Europe, but my exhortation is; hold on, "the foundation of God standeth sure." Every thing works for good to them that love the Lord.

Brethren and sisters, be of good cheer, the Master will come and take us into the new earth, where there will be no sorrow. Amen.

Your Brother in hope of immortality,

D. M. Leavitt.

Letter from Br. Calvin Fleming.

Bro. Merriam:—My hope in the speedy coming of Christ to judgment is good and strong, praise the Lord! I feel that I have a hope which all the world cannot take from me,

"Though oft they have tried—
This heart cheering promise—the Lord will provide."

Professors of religion who seem to enjoy themselves, and say, "is not the Lord amongst us?" These also, are trying to destroy my hope in the kingdom, but if Heaven be for us, who can be against us? Praise ye the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever! I sometimes, in my doubts and fears, think, perhaps the Savior will not come as expected, but when I look into the good Book and read of, and observe around me, the signs of the times, my hope is strong. Obituary.

Died at South Adam, Mass., May, 22nd, Sabrina, eldest daughter of Bro. Z. Campbell. She had been four years declining under the weight of that terrible disease, consumption; but her trust and hope was in her God, and a resurrection to eternal life. Bro. and Sr. Campbell have been called to part with two of their daughters, who have previously died of the same disease, and still another of the family, a younger daughter, is declining under the influence of the same fatal malady.

The family is truly an afflicted one. The health of Sister Campbell is yet extremely poor, and it is through much tribulation, they are striving to enter the kingdom, where death shall have no dominion over them. We earnestly recommend them to the prayers of the saints abroad, that the grace of God may sustain them in this trying hour.

G. A. Lapham.

Died in Danville Shipton C. E. June 1st, 1856, Charles Davis, aged 36 years.

He has left in solitary widowhood the companion of his youth, having been married about 7 years, and for a number of years past he was afflicted with lameness and general debility. He came forward and joined the church when it was first organized, and continued a church-going member until laid on a bed of death. He is gone down to the grave a sanctified man. "The spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead" dwelt in Him, and so there is no mystery hanging over his resurrection.

His pious lips gave no utterance to any kind of complaint. Being asked some questions by a Bro. when voice and speech were scarcely intelligible, his reply was,—"Tell the church I am contented with my lot, and to live holy lives and pray for one another in faith, for God is not mocked, but knows the secrets of the heart." Being asked again which he would prefer, to sleep in Jesus or recover? he said—"I would rather the Lord would come."

In the light of revelation he looked upon death as an enemy, and although dressed up in a "white robe," with a "palm" in his hand, and a crown on his head; yet he viewed him as a "wolf in sheep's clothing." He had no sympathy with the Platonic theology of the day, that a man could be dead and alive at the same time, or that a man knows a thousand times more when he is dead, than ever he did in his life time. He saw the long train of evil consequences which have grown out of this fruitful source of all other errors, and was grieved that such anti-resurrectional notions should have had any foothold within our enlightened ranks. He enjoined upon the writer to preach his funeral sermon, and chose beforehand the text,—"I have fought the good fight,' &c., 2 Tim. 4: 7–8. He sleeps in Jesus, waiting for life and immortality through Christ alone at the resurrection. Thrice blessed hope!

Domestic Summary.

Highly Important from Kansas. St. Louis, June 2. We have the following from Leavenworth city, under date of May 28:

An exciting extra of the Westport News, headed "War!! War!!!" reached this city this forenoon.

United States Troops on the way to Kansas.—Buffalo, June 5. One hundred and fifty United States troops passed through here to-day, en route for Kansas.

A fight is expected towards Passowatowmie Creek. Some pro-slavery men tried to drive a free State man from his claim, but he refusing to go, they took him and were about to hang him, when his neighbors came to the rescue and shot some of the pro-slavery party.

A civil war is inevitable.

It is estimated that the loss sustained by the citizens of Lawrence by the recent attack, will amount to $100,000.

It was stated that the whole territory would be placed under military surveillance.

The Republican publishes an extra of the Kansas Herald of the 28th ult., which confirms the report previously telegraphed of the murder of eight pro-slavery men on Passowatomie Creek by a party of Free State men. The victims were most horribly mutilated. In some instances, after their throats had been cut, their legs had been chopped off, also their arms, and their eyes gouged out. All the pro-slavery families at Hickory Point were driven off at the point of the bayonet, and their horses and provision stolen by the Free State men.

Hostile Expedition to Vera Cruz.—New York, May 31. A letter from the City of Mexico goes to confirm the reports received here from Havana touching a hostile expedition to Vera Cruz. The difficulty has reference to certain claims of Spanish subjects against Mexico for losses incurred during the revolution which severed Mexico has once admitted, but now refuses to pay, on the plea that some of them are fraudulent. The writer says:

"I have the informntion from an authentic source, that a squadron is preparing in Spain, which is to be joined by several of the ships belonging to the fleet of Havana, to back the demand for immediate and full payment of the outstanding claims, which the new Minister appointed to Mexico is to present. Ere long you may hear of a second bombardment of San Juan de Ulloa.

Further Reports of Bloody Work in Kansas.—St. Louis, June 5. A letter to the Democrat from Leavenworth, May 31, says a company of pro-slavery men, some days since, had waited on the Free State settlers, and commanded them to leave Kansas within a specified time, or suffer the consequences.

Mr. Philips, the correspondent of the Tribune, being compelled to leave, went to Lawrence.

Judge Conway, who was arrested on the 28th, was confined that day and night, with guards stationed over him, but on the following morning was released, and commanded to leave the territory; not obeying, he was that evening conducted by a committee on board the steamer, and sent down the river.

Mr. Latta, another Judge, was ordered to leave and did so. Robert Riddle had also left. Several others have been commanded to leave.

Mr. Shoemaker, a land receiver, and the only government officer in Kansas known to be a Free State man, is to be notified to leave.

Lady Leavenworth has also been advised to move away to avoid difficulty.

The writer says the Free State men do not manifest sufficient nerve for the crisis, but thinks that if the reports are true that the Free State settlers in the southern part of the territory are in arms, and compelling the pro-slavery men to retreat to Missouri, the effect will be good in the Northern part.

It is reported that 500 men are marching from Wisconsin to Kansas, but it is probably without foundation.

The Kansas City Enterprise (pro-slavery) issued an extra on the 2d inst., which is republished to-day in the Evening News. This extra says that J. M. Baynard, left St. Bernard for Westport on Friday last, and, as he has not been heard from since, it is supposed that he has been murdered by the abolitionists. John W. Forman, H. Hamilton, and John Lux, who went out in search of Baynard, were taken by the Abolitionists, and threatened with hanging.

The extra further says:

Marshal Donaldson and seven men, on Friday night last, were fired upon from Walford's house, near Lawrence, by a party of fifty Abolitionists. A short conflict ensued, which resulted in the wounding of several of the Marshal's posse.

H. H. Carty, just from the Territory, states that some men belonging to the same company with himself, were attacked and all seriously injured by the Abolitionists. He came for men and horses, and twenty-five of Buford's party will immediately start to the rescue.

Capt. Pattis' Company numbering 45 men, went to Hickory point to suppress the outrages in that vicinity, but were attacked by 150 Abolitionists, and two of his men killed. Another fight between the same parties occurred near Black Jack, in which nine Abolitionists and 13 pro slavery men were killed, among whom were Capt. Pattis and James McGee. Capt. Lyng's company of Wyandotte Indians were united to Capt. Pattis' company.

Threatened Attack on Churches in Brooklyn, N. Y.—It was rumored on Saturday and yesterday that Henry Ward Beecher's church, Brooklyn Heights, was to be attacked by an organized band of those who had taken offence, or employed by those who had taken offence, at the very plain language in which Mr. Beecher has discussed the exciting events that have recently occurred in Washington and Kansas. The demonstration was set down for last night, but intelligence of their intentions having reached the Chief of Police of Brooklyn, Mayor Hall and about fifty policemen were present, to check any aggressive or disorderly conduct. The church was crowded, as usual, and there was a large collection outside, including the police, but no attempt at disturbance was made

A week ago last Sabbath, the pastor of the York street Methodist church received an anonymous letter, stating that if he attempted to preach on Sabbath evening, his church would be attacked by a mob. He did preach, however, but an effective police force was stationed round the premises, which doubtless prevented the threatened disturbance.

The State of the Country.—The following in reference to the state of the country, was the conclusion of a sermon preached yesterday morning in the Broadway Church, Chelsea. The Pastor's text was, "I am the Lord, I change not."

"The elements of passion, strife and war are in commotion. This nation as yet in its infancy, already begins to show indications of premature decay and disruption. Have we not painful evidence of this in the present condition of our country? Is there not an apparent deterioration of American institutions! Our national affairs have reached a crisis, and the country seems on the point of being given up to misrule, violence and oppression. Ambitious politicians, and the greedy hirelings of office, threaten to overturn the fairest fabric of government the world ever saw, which our fathers built up with holy hands and cemented with their blood."

Says the Boston Pilot, the leading Catholic paper in this country, when speaking of the report of the American and Foreign Christian Union, recently published in this city:—

"The infamous sect of the Manichæns adopted in the Middle Ages precisely the same means to extinguish Christianity, but they failed signally of success—and so utterly failed, that they were themselves extinguished, and fell backward, shrieking, into chaos. The sects of the present day that have dared to lift a hostile arm against the Church of God—the Spouse of Christ—the Holy Roman Catholic Church—shall meet with the like fate, and speedily.

"The Papal power was never so strong, never before so wide-spreading, and universally felt and feared. We speak not of temporal power. That, men fear not—they despise it. But we speak of power that is power—of the spiritual—not that which restrains men's bodies, and deprives them of free will, but that which governs and guides their souls, and curbs their passions. It was not fear of the temporal aggressions of the papacy that barbed and poisoned the weapons of Voltaire, Frederick, Rousseau and d'Alambert of the last century, and of their followers the atheists and know nothings of to-day, but the dread and horror they felt in view of that power which held the keys of Heaven and of hell—that power which openeth and no man shutteth, which shutteth and no man openeth—which can bless, and which can say anathema."

The report received by the last mail from the Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon, is highly important. The steamer Mary was lying at the Cascades, when the Indians made the first attack, and escaped down the river to give notice of the outbreak. The attack lasted three days;—400 Indians were engaged, of whom 17 were killed and 12 wounded. The Cascade Chief, with 15 warriors were also captured.

The friendly Indians are being collected on the Reservation, and furnished with provisions.

Dr. Root and Mr. Mitchell Alive.—Middletown, June 3. The father of Mitchell, who resides here, has received a letter dated Lawrence, May 22, from his son, stating that Dr. Root and himself are alive. They were fired at and arrested, but are now discharged.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Niagara.

Halifax, June, 4.—The steamship Niagara, Ryrie, from Liverpool, soon after noon on Saturday, May 24, arrived at this port at 5 o'clock this afternoon. She brings 130 passengers for Boston.

In the House of Commons, on Tuesday evening, Lord Palmerston stated that no secret treaty had been entered into between England, France and Austria.

Russia.—The Emperor's coronation day is fixed for the 24th. The Pope is said to have offered to send two prelates to attend and honor the ceremony. As it is performed in the Greek rite, the presence of envoys of the Latin Church will be new.

Italy.—Parma. A correspondent writes from Parma on the 8th:—The state of seige is exceedingly rigorous and annoying to the inhabitants. After ten at night Austrian patrols arrest every man they meet in the streets. More than 200 have thus been arrested. Words can scarcely describe with what indignity these persons, who are only arrested on suspicion, are treated in the prisons where they are shut up indiscriminately. Sometimes twenty days elapse before they are examined, when most of them against whom nothing can be proved, are set at liberty. The prisons in which political offenders are locked up are guarded by Austrians, and in reply to the request of some of these unfortunate, innocent men to be allowed to purchase some better food, the Austrian goaler replied that "prison fare was quite good enough for them."

The Emperors of Austria and of the French are to meet, it is said, upon the Rhine in June.

It is supposed by the Paris journals that by the 1st of August there will not remain a foreign soldier on the Russian territory.—London Times.

Turkey.—Constantinople. A report from Sefer Pacha confirms the statement of the capture of the Circassian village of Sunnech by the Russians, who obtained possession of six hundred head of cattle. The Circassian chiefs assembled at Anapa, claim the assistance of Turkey in re-establishing their communications with the Caucasus. The Turkish Contingent is to be removed to Asia to reinforce the movable columns of Omar Pacha.

The Weser Gazette, under date of Vienna, the 10th inst., states that the health of the Pope is such as to cause serious uneasiness, symptoms of dropsy becoming every day more and more evident. He is 64 years of age.

The Mount of Olives, near Jerusalem, has been purchased by a Madame Polack, the widow of a wealthy banker of the Hebrew persuasion at Konigsberg, in Prussia. This lady intends to beautify the place and improve the whole neighborhood, at her sole expense. The first thing she did was to plant the whole area with a grove of olive trees, and thus restore it to the original state from which it derives its name.

All things considered, we doubt whether the cost of the war, from first to last, will be much under £100,000,000—an immense sum, but evidently not an intolerable one, when it is considered that it falls very much under the expenditure of England in the one closing year of the last great war.

Russia.—The Times' Berlin correspondent writes that the Emperor had given the whole of his fleet a new armament, in consequence of the events of the war. At present the Russian fleet consists of three divisions, making a total of 43 vessels of war, and 3 transports; of the former 9 are steamers.

Trade continued dull at St. Petersburg.

From the Crimea.—Camp before Sabastopol, May 10. The French army continues to embark daily, and we with more dignity and greater leisure follow their example. The French speak confidently of a great campaign in Africa, and even in another quarter of the globe, and they predict that peace will not last for two years. The Russians are equally hopeful that they will have a war in a short time, and they do not disguise their earnest burning lust to phlebotomize* Austria—"Autriche lache et ingrate." The evacuation of the Crimea is taking place with rapidity.

Of the British troops in the Crimea, six regiments are destined for Canada, five for Gibraltar, three for Corfu, and nine for Malta.

* To let out the blood.

The East.—The evacuation of the Crimea by the French proceeds rapidly.

Letters to May 10, state, the Russians had hanged several Tartars for assisting the Allies. Some had been sent into exile, and others condemned to work on the roads for life.

Scurvy had appeared in the English regiments, and could not be accounted for.

It was still a question what could be done with the horses.

Affray in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem.—A letter from Jerusalem, dated 27th ult., and published in the Universe, says,—"The ceremony of distributing the sacred fire," which always takes place annually in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, has this year given rise to a deplorable conflict between the Greeks and the Armenians. A tumultuous crowd rushed in to witness the ceremony, and showed the most riotous disposition, which a body of Turkish soldiers could scarcely check. Some mischievous boys danced and made indecent gestures before the tomb of the Savior, and were applauded by the Mussulmen present.

But before long in the body of the Church a tremendous hubbub arose, accompanied by savage cries. It soon turned out that a conflict had arisen between the Greeks and Armenians, and that the two parties had come to blows. And then a frightful scene presented itself—men were knocked down and savagely beaten and trampled on; shoes and other missles were thrown at each other's heads, the Greeks rushing into the vestry, armed themselves with the staves of the sacred banners and made arms of them; the woodwork of the church was torn down and used as weapons; an altar was demolished, and the fragments were hurled in all directions; and the people in the galleries tore down the lamps and flung them with rage on the combatants below. The pasha and his men rushed into the midst of the melee, and attempted to restore order, but they were pelted and struck; and the pasha would probably have been seriously injured if he had not been dragged away by some Europeans. His soldiers, however, by great exertions, succeeded after a while in expelling a portion of the infuriated crowd from the sacred edifice. The two parties then turned their rage against the thousands of lamps which decorate the facade of the church—the Greeks smashing those of the Armenians, the Armenians those of the Greeks. The Turks at length succeeded in completely clearing the church, though the Greeks in their rage tore up the planks of the galleries and flung them at them with all their force.

Italy.—From the latest accounts concerning the condition of Italy, it appears that deep discontent prevails everywhere in that country. "It is thought by some," says the Paris correspondent of the Londom Times, "that the year will not pass away without this discontent assuming a most marked and formidable appearance."

A very well-informed correspondent of the Augsburg Gazette, who writes from the frontiers of Lombardy, draws a gloomy picture of the state of things in Central Italy, and remarks, that some time before his death, Prince Felix Schwarzenberg remonstrated strongly with the Papal Goverment, and advised it to make internal reforms. In Modena, where the people had always enjoyed the privileges of electing their own burgomasters, new municipal laws have been published, and in future the civic dignitaries will be appointed by the Sovereign. A new police ordinance, directed against swearing, is also likely to make its appearance. A person swearing by the Holy Virgin is to be fined 50 scudi, and by any other saint 25. An oath into which the name of the Most High is introduced, is to be considered a crime, and punished. There has never been so much irreverent and even blasphemous conversation among the lower classes in Vienna, as since the dogma of the Immaculate Conception has been introduced and the nation placed at the foot of his Holiness the Pope.

Late letters from Rome, according to the Universe, announce that the Pope is about to create a new Austrian Cardinal, and to carry out his plan of national Cardinals, by giving the hat to an oriental prelate, who will reside at Rome. The object of the latter choice will be Mgr. Anthony Gazeno, Bishop of Heiopollis or Balbea. It is well known that one great object of His Holiness is to attempt once more to unite the Eastern and Western Churches, and nothing will prepare so readily for this, humanly speaking, is to have in the Sacred College, and in the Councils of the Pope, prelates of the Oriental Churches; and nothing, speaking in the views of faith, will lead to it more effectually than the definition of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception, to which doubtless numberless graces are attached.

The pilgrimages to the Holy Land which were so often made by the pious in other days, and which led eventually to the glorious Crusades, those efforts of Christendom to check the onward march of the fatalist followers of the prophet, have been renewed, and are now as common as in the middle ages. The organization of regular caravans of the pilgrims at stated times at Marseilles, in France, is one result of this. In consequence, a person wishing to visit the Holy Land, now can do so safely, expeditiously and piously at a trifling expense. The late peace by giving freedom to the Eastern Christians, renders these manifestations of piety still more secure, and will multiply Catholic establishments in the Holy Land.

The great step taken by the Archbishop of Paris in introducing the Roman Liturgy instead of the Parisian, is hailed by all as a great movement towards the perfect union and uniformity throughout. Most of the provincial liturgies have now given place to the Roman, and the Church of England which in adopting the Book of Common Prayer, pretended merely to replace the old uses of Sarum, York, &c., by one uniform liturgy, would do well now to give up the new fangled one and take the Roman, for Sarum was better than their present one, and Roman infinitely superior.—Boston Pilot.

THE SCRIPTURE DOCTRINE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By H. H. Dobney,
Baptist Minister, of England.
Fourth Edition.
WITH AN APPENDIX ON
THE STATE OF THE DEAD,
By John Milton,
Author of "Paradise Lost."

1 Vol. 12 Mo., 310 Pages. Price 75 Cents.

This is one of the most important works ever issued upon this solemn subject. Clear, forcible, and sometimes eloquent in his language, the author surveys the whole field, and presents his arguments and examines objections with the facility of "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The style is calm and Christian, a rare excellence in a controversial work. The Universalist, the skeptic, and the infidel, will find here that while the truths they hold are admitted in all their force, yet the reasonableness of revelation and the retribution therein revealed cannot be denied. And the believer in the doctrine of the Eternal agony of the multitudes of the Lost, will find that objections to that opinion exist in the word of God, no less serious than those which arise from the calm consideration of the subject in the light of human reason.

Let all obtain and read this work with care, and we shall await with confidence the verdict of the candid and unprejudiced.

The volume is an elegant 12mo., and contains besides the views of the poet Milton, who, with Luther, Tindale, Bishop Law and Archbishop Whately, defends the doctrine of unconsciousness in death.

It will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the price, 75 cents.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

The best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are un happily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Br. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may perhaps subserve the cause of humanity to present his advertisement to the public.

Encouragement.

BY IAM SHEPHERD.

"Now I know in part,"—Paul.

Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard,
What God hath in reserve for all
Who love, obey his holy word,
Complying with the gospel call.

As yet within the heart of man,
Conceived, the things have never been;
The finite mind may never scan
The splendor, glory, wealth, unseen.

Still the pilgrim in joy may turn
Unto the sacred word and see;
And from its truthful pages learn
Much of the christian's legacy.

See "Palms" expressing victory—
That he shall wave on Zion's height;
The "robes" of spotless purity,
To clothe him in their beauty bright.

See "harps of gold" of thrilling sound,
That saints shall strike in highest strains
Whose music shall through heaven resound
While angels live, and Jesus reigns!

See diadems and "crowns of gold,"
The faithful ones as "kings" shall wear;
The glory, riches, wealth untold,
Which God declares his own shall share.

And see the "city" pure and bright,
Fair "mansions" all prepared for thee,
Honor and life, and love, and light—
The gift of immortality.

Then, wearied saint, dismiss thy fears,
And "upward" let thy motto be;
Press forward, till the Lord appears,
And perfects all that's promised thee.

Watchman.

BY JAMES CRAWFORD.

Behold that man of God
Whose eye is ever clear,
Behold, he reads the word,
As though his God was near,

His heart is full of love,
His call, he will obey,
His advocate is now above,
His prayer,—"Direct my way."

His invitation—come!
His heart is, ever come!
He calls the wanderer home
That he no more may roam.

e calls to "all the earth,"
Ye "heavy laden," come!
O, come, who now do thirst,—
No longer stay from home,

The Spirit says, O come!
The bride, in harmony—
Ye heavens roll the song—
Eternal life 'twill be.

The hour he preaches near,
The signs are in the past;
My Savior now, will soon appear,
My all on Him I cast.

O Watchman, cry aloud,
Sound clear the gospel voice,
His presence, in the cloud,
Makes all in Him rejoice.

Watchman, proclaim with power,
Our God a God of love—
A Savior's love in every hour,
And then ascend above.

Job.

BY JULIA A. FERRIS.

It was the birth-day of his eldest son,
And all his children were convened to hold
Their annual feast. And Job had early risen
With a Father's anxious tenderness,
Fearful his sons might, in their mirth, forget
Their God—and sin. Now, as his prayers for each
Of his dear ones, ascended heaven, he felt
That all was well—that God would hear his prayer.
And safely keep from falling into sin,
Those noble youth—reared with solicitude
So fond. Ah! little thought the perfect man
Of Uz, what machinations, cruel, strange—
Were being wrought by his arch foe to work
His ruin sure: that he was chosen of God
To show the world that virtue, holiness,
And faith, depend not on the outward state;—
That man may bear earth's highest honors; and,
Again, the lowest vale of poverty
With an unswerving rectitude.
Ah! Job
Was perfect. See him, now, as messages
Of evil tidings greet his ears—and one
By one, their tale impart, and leave him thus—
To beggary. But with a brow serene
Job hears unmoved—and trusts his all with God.
But, lo! another comes, the messenger—
Who bears the crushing news, which rends the heart
And oftimes leads to mute and stern despair.
What says the man? Job's children, dead! ALL DEAD!
Ah! now has come the time when Satan looks,
That Job shall curse his God; the moment when
The sons of God bend with delight from heaven,
And gaze exultingly upon the scene,—
The majesty sublime of holy faith.
Calmly Job rises from his seat and lays
His robe aside;—habiliments of grief
Puts on—such as the nation mourning, used.
Meekly upon the ground he prostrate falls,
And blesses God—acknowledging his right
To give, and take again. The seal of God
Is on him—counting him a perfect man.

The Crucifixion.

BY O. P. ALLEN.

The crucifixion of the Redeemer! What a theme for contemplation! Although it were vain for a humble pen like mine to attempt to describe that sublimest of tragedies, yet it is well that the mind should dwell often on that scene which made Calvary forever sacred; for it is by contemplating the sufferings of Christ, that we are lost in admiration of his unbounded love for our fallen race.

It was night in Jerusalem. Sleep had wrapped the great city in deep repose; yet at this quiet hour a few sad forms might be seen passing through the silent streets. The leader was the most illustrious personage the world ever beheld, yet no torch bearer lit up the dark streets before them, and no joyous acclamations of an admiring multitude greeted their ears, but in silence and gloom they passed on through the gates of the city, over the brook Kedron, and at last they stand in the garden of Gethsemane, the favorite retreat of Christ and his disciples. Selecting only three of his followers, the man of sorrows slowly ascends the declivity of Olivet. The acme of human woe now seemed to press upon him. "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death, stay here and watch with me," burst from his lips in accents of deep anguish. He now leaves even his most beloved disciples, to commune alone with his Father.

A lovelier night never lent charms to the environs of Jerusalem, and the perfumed breeze never stole more gently through the olive groves, yet the calm loveliness of the scene brings no soothing balm to the burdened soul of Jesus. But at length, on the stillness of the night air, breaks the agonizing tones of the sufferer in his supplication to the Father. Oh! listen to that pleading voice. "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." Did ever such impassioned supplication, blended with such calm resignation, ascend to heaven? What a deep lesson of confidence and love. His prayer ended, he seeks his disciples, and finding them overcome with sleep, he exclaims with sorrow, "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" Then leaving them to enjoy that which nature so much demanded, he again pours out his agonizing soul in groans of unutterable anguish; so terrible is the agony that rends his prostrate form, the very grass beneath him is crimsoned with the blood that oozes from his wan temples. But why attempt to paint a scene of which we can have so feeble a conception? At length in that trial hour of the Son of God, a bright-winged seraph appeared at his side and poured the soothing balm of consolation into his bleeding heart. How sweetly the words of that seraph-messenger greeted his ear, for they were commissioned by his Father above.

Arising again from the dewy earth, he once more sought his sorrowing disciples. The sound of a multitude was now approaching Mount Olivet, and torches began to gleam through the darkness; but what was the terror and amazement of the loving disciples, when they beheld their Master surrounded by a band of Roman soldiers and rudely borne away by them to the house of the high priest. Alas! they little understood what was to be the conclusion of the fearful tragedy of which this was but the prelude. The mock trial of the Son of God now followed. Behold the heir of universal dominion in the judgment hall of Pilate, surrounded by an insulting crowd. Unmoved he received the harsh blow upon his cheek, and he murmurs not even when they in derision encircle his brow with a crown of thorns, and with bitter scorn hail him king of the Jews. Oh! what a lesson of fortitude and submission. Eternity alone can unfold the depth of that matchless love that upheld him in the endurance of such mockery without one expression of anger. The hasty trial was soon over, and the unjust sentence pronounced, when the innocent Nazarene was ledaway to be crucified.

Morning had dawned upon Jerusalem. That morning which was to be ever memorable as the time when the great sacrifice was offered up for the redemption of the world. Proudly the sun smiled upon the hills and vales of Judea, clothed with all the charms of oriental loveliness. Softly the cool breezes came wafting from the cedar groves of Lebanon, and the glad melody of birds echoed sweetly from the fragrant branches of the olive and the fig tree.

On this bright day a procession might be seen slowly wending its way from the city of Jerusalem up the sides of Mount Calvary. Conspicuous among the crowd was He, who had so lately been condemned, bearing upon his shoulders the cross upon which he was to suffer death. Fainting, at length he sunk beneath the weight of his burden, and a stranger passing by was compelled to bear it for him. Although the fiendish smile of triumph played upon the countenances of the mob around him, yet many followed after him who bewailed the fate of one who had often blessed them with his acts of outgushing tenderness. Jesus, turning with a lingering look of pity upon his weeping friends, murmured with such prophetic tones that it sent a thrill of fearful foreboding to their hearts: "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your childten." These were words of fearful import, yet few divined their meaning, and the jesting crowd pressed on to the scene of the crucifixion.

At length the unresisting body of Christ was stretched upon the rude cross, and fastened to it by spikes driven through his hands and feet, and then convulsed with keenest agony he is raised from the earth, and then the timber being made fast he is left to expire with severest torture. To add to the disgrace of his death, two malefactors were crucified, one on either side. Yet, amid all the insults heaped upon him, and the pain which he endured, the outflowing benevolence of his nature did not forsake him, but lifting his eyes to heaven he exclaims with kindliest accents,—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

The world had scorned and rejected him to suffer death, but he had murmured not, yet when the lamp of life began to grow dim, there came a shock that crushed the life from out his confiding heart. His Father veiled his face from him. His last support was sundered; he could endure no more; and sending forth the startling cry, "Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani," he bowed his head and the Savior of the world expired. Nature shuddered with horror as the light of the world went out in the darkness of death. The sun hid his glorious beams in gloom, adamantine rocks were rent asunder by an earthquake that shook the world with its convulsive throb, and even the inmates of the dusty tombs came forth to add solemnity to the awful event.

Thus closed another scene in the great drama of the crucifixion. The atonement was accomplished, and Calvary forever consecrated as the altar-place, where the Lamb of God was offered up for the redemption of the world.

Seventh day Sabbath.

BY W. SHELDON.

No. II.

In continuing our investigation of this subject, we pass to notice some of the arguments which are employed to enforce the observance of the seventh day Sabbath upon Christians. We will first examine

"THE COMMANDMENTS."

Many passages are quoted, containing the phrase, "The commandments," accompanied with the claim that direct and exclusive reference is made to the ten commandments, which were engraven upon stone; and as the Sabbath is included in these ten, it is made to appear that the keeping of Saturday is in this manner enjoined. But this is reasoning from defective premises; assuming in the absence of proof, and contrary to fact, that "the commandments" mean nothing more or less than the ten, and therefore must include the Sabbath. The falsity of this application of the phrase is shown by Jesus, for he used this phrase, including commandments which were never written on tables of stone. "If thou wilt enter into life, keep THE COMMAMDMENTS. And he said unto Jesus, "which?" (which commandments?) Jesus said, "Thou shalt do no murder. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not bear false witness. Honor thy father and mother; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Matt. 19: 18, 19. The command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," is NOT one of the ten, yet Jesus makes it one of "the commandments," thus proving that this phrase is not confined to the ten commandments. God has many commandments which were never upon the tables of stone, (see 1 Jno. 3: 23,) which are now in force; and furthermore, some in the decalogue are not now in force. Here is a clause which God inscribed upon the tables of stone, with the ten commandments, which is true today if the decalogue has not been affected by the introduction of the gospel economy, for which idea some strenuously contend. "I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the FATHERS upon the CHILDREN, unto the third and fourth generation." Ex. 20: 5. Is this true in this age? No; but it was true in the Mosaic age; hence, the Jews could inquire, "For whose sins was this man born blind, for his own, or for his parents?" They immagined that the iniquity of his fathers might have been visited upon him. Said the Jews, "His blood be upon us and on our children." But the gospel arrangement does not contain this principle, but the reverse; hence, it is folly to claim that the decalogue was not affected by the ending of the old economy. There was an end of the Mosaic system, both moral and ceremonial; yet some of the principles contained in both departments of that system, are enforced in that of the gospel. Some are astonished at such a statement, thinking it impossible that the ten commandments should be done away, yet admitting that all ended at the cross excepting the ten commands. It is said if the ten commandments ended with the old system, we are not now forbidden to steal. But the same statement might be made in reference to other commandments which were not contained on the tables of stone, such as the following: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," &c. This is called by the Savior "the greatest commandment," (Matt. 22: 38,) yet it was not one of the ten, but was connected with the ceremonial department of the old system, which ended at the cross. Are we therefore warranted in saying that we are not now obligated to love God? The latter conclusion is as fairly deducible as the other. Yet in both instances, it depends upon whether these principles were enjoined in the new economy. To illustrate: we were once under British laws. Those laws had some good items; they forbade theft, and murder. But we broke loose from those laws; are we therefore at liberty to steal and murder? That depends upon whether our laws prohibit those crimes.

The whole Jewish system ended at the cross; the ceremonial and moral department gave place to a new economy, in which were items of both departments of the former, still enjoined; but not the Sabbath. From the ceremonial part, commands like the former are still enjoined: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor." Lev. 19: 18. From the decalogue several more in like manner, but the Sabbath is no where enjoined in the new arrangement.

To claim that the decalogue now stands in force as it came from the finger of God, for the sake of dragging the Sabbath down into this dispensation, is to upset the gospel plan, as we have shown, by making children chargeable with the crimes of their forefathers for successive generations, as in the Mosaic age. The seventh day Sabbath cannot be crowded upon christians at such a sacrifice of Gospel principles. We must obey "THE COMMANDMENTS" of the new economy, whether they have been before enjoined or not; but we have nothing to do with any other commandments, and in these we find no seventh day Sabbath enjoined.

To be Continued.

Letter from Bro. C. H. Cotton.

I feel this morning like a weary pilgrim in a strange land, sighing and longing for home.

I am more sadly disappointed than I was last Spring. Then, I thought there might be a possibility that we were mistaken in relation to the exact point of time when deliverance should come, but that the assembling of the nations for the last great conflict was in process. I had no doubt that war would rage, and blood would continue to flow, until the Prince of peace should come, and the kingdoms of this world should give way to the everlasting kingdom.

"Well," says one, "now you are disappointed again, you will give it up, wont you?"

No, NO! Blessed be God, although disappointed, I am not wholly destroyed, neither is my hope or confidence in God's eternal word and promises shaken—NO, Brn. and Srs., if we hold on a little longer, we shall have the bright crowns in reserve for us. Jesus, who purchased them for us with his own blood, will come and place them upon our unworthy heads.

But if we turn back after such light has shone on our pathway, we, of all men, shall be least fit for the kingdom of heaven, and God will utterly, and justly too, abhor us, and we shall become a reproach and a byword among men.

If we are reproached, let it be for the truth's sake, and in such let us rejoice and praise God, that we are accounted worthy to suffer anything for our Redeemer and his cause.

If we should be so happy as to stand in that innumerable company that come up out of great tribulation, that have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," I think we shall be astonished, and wonder why we are accounted worthy to be there, while some kind friend will point us to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

Yes, it is through the merits of Jesus, we shall be saved, if saved at all.

Now, if we expect to be saved by and through Him, let us keep his commandments, for they are not grievous, for in keeping the commandments of God there is great recompense of reward. May God help us to live near the bleeding side of Jesus, that His precious blood may be applied that cleanseth from all sin; that we may love God with all our heart, mind, might and strength; our neighbor as ourselves, that we may love those of like precious faith with a pure heart fervently, and be ready to make any and every sacrifice, that God requires, and that with a cheerful heart.

In short, let us gird on the whole armor of God anew, and fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life.

When I look around upon the world, everything presents a gloomy aspect; yet, we may thank God there are some precious souls in whom we can place confidence—and feel that they are truly the children of God, and heirs of the kingdom.

Out of the sixty, or more, that were baptized in Otis, there are some whom we trust have their names written in the Lamb's book of life; while for others we tremble, yea, and for myself many times, lest a promise being left us, we come short of it.

O what excuse shall we have Brn. and Srs., if we neglect this great salvation after having tasted the good word of life, and the power of the world to come? May the Holy Spirit move upon the hearts of all God's children that are waiting for deliverance.

May the good Lord send his servants this way to feed the little flock with meat in due season, and as they shall minister to us in spiritual things, so we will endeavor to provide for them in carnal things.

One thing more, Brn.,—the old debt. There is nothing I hate much worse, than old debts; and as we have the very best paper that is published in the world, let us have it free from debt. A trifle from each one of us, who are able to spare it, would free our generous brethren from a burden that ought not to rest upon them.

Says one, "I have been unfortunate, I have not received money where I expected it." Such, too, is the case with me; but thank the Giver of all good, I can spare a little, and when I can spare a little more, I will send again, if the debt is not paid.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. W. S. Campbell.

BRO. GRANT:—It might be regarded by some of your readers, as a demand, that I should simply present to them through your paper, my place and position, if not my purposes.

The main object of my coming West this Spring, being deferred for the present, if not entirely prevented by the force of circumstances, and principally owing to an unfortunate choice of location for the settlement in view—I have been, since I became sufficiently recovered in health to admit of it, preaching the gospel of the kingdom in my travels. To me, this is the great and main object, not of this Spring, of one journey, of one locality, but everywhere, and at all times.

Some of our Brethren may yet settle together in the West. I have not abandoned my purpose of preaching the gospel in these lands, but for the present, yield to a condition I cannot prevent; being conscious of having done all I could, and all that was demanded of me personally, I have no explanations to present here, and will simply remark that I expect to visit several places in the West, as I gradually work on Eastward, and shall preach in the East, after my return, if the Lord will. Where I have spoken the great truths of the gospel, I have had a good hearing, and therefore I only leave because it appears to be necessary.

My position is the same as it has been upon the hope and labors of the gospel. I have seen nothing that should change, or materially improve it. When I find any new truths, I shall not be backward to endorse them, but to go back to what has been forsaken, I cannot for any consideration. And my purpose is to remain in the gospel vineyard whether I am East or West, and to be free to preach the gospel as I receive it. If I follow the Apostle, who shall complain of it? I would labor at my trade, or in any honest way to live, and have a gospel which has not lost its life, and in which I can immerse my own soul, rather than be found in ease and freedom from the worldly care and physical toil, with the bleeding truth in chains.

At a future time, and by such means as I may conclude appropriate, I shall give such farther information as in my opinion, may be required, of my journey and its results.

Yours truly,

W. S. CAMPBELL.

For the Children.

I Got A-going and Couldn't Stop.

A little boy named Frank, was standing in the yard, when his father called him.

"Frank?"

"Sir," said Frank, and started full speed and ran into the street.

His father called him back, and asked him if he did not hear his first call.

"Yes sir," said Frank.

"Well, then," said his father, "what made you run into the street?"

"O," said Frank, "I got a-going and couldn't stop."

This is the way that a great many boys get into difficulty; they get a-going and can't stop, The boy that tells lies, began first to stretch the truth a little—to tell a large story, or relate an anecdote with a very little variation, till he got a-going and couldn't stop, till he came out a full-grown liar.

The boy that was brought before the police, and sent to the House of Correction for stealing, began by taking little things from his mother—by stealing sweetmeats and other nice things that were put away. Next he began to take things from his companions at school. He got a-going and couldn't stop till he got into jail.

Those two boys that you see fighting out on the green, began by bantering each other in fun. At length they began to get angry and dispute, and call each other names, till they got a-going and couldn't stop. They will separate with black eyes and bloody noses.

There is a young man sitting late with his companions at the gaming table. He has flushed cheeks, an anxious look, a despairing countenance. He has lost his last dollar. He began by playing marbles in the street, but got a-going and couldn't stop.

See that young man with a dark lantern, stealing from his master's drawer. He is a merchant's clerk. He came from the country a promising boy. But the rest of the clerks went to the theatre, and he thought he must go too. He began, thinking he would only go once, just to say that he had been to the theatre. But he got a-going and couldn't stop. He has used up his wages, and wants more money. He cannot resist the temptation, when he knows there is money in the drawer. He has got a-going—he will stop in the State Prison.

Hark! do you hear that horrid oath? It comes from the foul mouth of a little boy in the street. He began by saying by-words, but he has got a-going and can't stop.

Fifty young men were some years ago in the habit of meeting together in a room at a public house, to enjoy themselves in a social hilarity, where the wine cup passed freely around. One of them as he was going there one evening, began to think there might be danger in the way. He stopped and considered a moment, and then said to himself, "Right about face!" He turned on his heel, went back to his room, and was never seen at the public house again. He has become rich, and the first block of buildings which he erected, was built directly in front of the place where he stood, when he made that exclamation. Six of the young men followed his example. The remaining forty-three got a-going and couldn't stop till they landed in the ditch, and most of them in a drunkard's grave.

Beware, then, boys, how you get a-going. Be sure before you start that you are in the right way, for when you are sliding down hill it is hard to stop.—Ex. paper.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

The Two Covenants.

BY ELD. J. HEMENWAY.

No. II.

Continued.

Gal. 4: 24, "Which things are an allegory, for these are the two covenants, the one from Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage which is Agar."

We learn by the Apostle's language, that the bond-woman and her son represent the covenant from Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. Having examined the covenant from Mount Sinai, we learned that it was temporal and was added to the promise, until the seed should come to whom the promise was made. The promise was made to the son of the free-woman, hence the son of the bond-woman cannot be heir with the son of the free. Hager and her son represent the covenant from Mount Sinai, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children—the Jews.

Sarah and her son represents the new covenant, and answereth to the Jerusalem which is above, which is free, and the mother of us all. What saith the scripture?

Ans. "Cast out the bond-woman and her son; for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman."

By this we learn that the Jews, as literal descendants of Abraham, as such, have no promise under the old covenant, by which they can become heirs to the inheritance promised to Abraham, through his seed,—Isaac. All the land that was promised the Jews was the land of Canaan, and that was promised in the covenant from Mount Sinai; and all prophecy relative to the Jews possessing the land of Canaan, ends with the old covenant; and as the Jews did not comply with the terms of the covenant before it ended, there is no promise (that is valid) of their return to the land, either in this age or the age to come, unless it can be found in the new covenant.

The Scripture saith, "the son of the bond-woman (old covenant) shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman," Gal. 4: 30. "For the promise that he should be heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed through the law, (or old covenant) but through the righteousness of faith; for if they which are of the law, (or covenant from Mount Sinai) be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect." Rom. 4: 13, 14. The only way in which the Jews could be saved under the law, was to exercise faith in the promise of a seed to come which was Christ. Gal. 3: 11. "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God it is evident; for the just shall live by faith; and the law is not faith," hence the Jew cannot be saved without faith in the promised seed, and we find no promise or prophecy either in the old or new covenant, that the Jews as a nation will repent, and return after the new covenant is made.

Now let us find the new covenant, its promises, and requirements. Paul, in Heb. 7th and 8th chapters, speaking upon the subject of Christ as being made a priest after the order of Melchizedec, and contrasting it with the Levitical priesthood, says: "But now hath he (Christ) obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, established upon better promises." Here the apostle gives us to understand that Christ was then acting as the mediator of a new covenant, and then tell us, that "if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second;" and the Lord finding fault with them, saith—"Behold the days come that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand, to lead them out of Egypt." Heb. 8: 9. Here we are informed by Paul that the covenant which was established upon better promises, is not according to the old one. In the 10th and 11th verses, we are told what the covenant is: "For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel, after those days, saith the Lord. I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts, * * * and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother. saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me from the least to the greatest." The old covenant was on tables of stone, but this is on the heart. Under the Jewish dispensation the people must go to Jerusalem to hear the law read, but under the new, the law is in the heart. Under the old covenant when one entered the church, he must be taught to know the Lord, but under the new, they must know the Lord before they enter the church of God. Hence all that have the law written on the heart, know the Lord from the least to the greatest.

Moses dedicated the old covenant, and Jesus the new. Moses was the mediator of the old, Jesus is the mediator of the new. By reading Matt. 5: 1–13, we find what is promised in the new covenant. "Blessed are the poor in Spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Here the poor, that have the spirit, have the promise of the kingdom of Heaven, from the fact that if they have the spirit, they are Christ's, and if Christ's, they are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise that was made to Abraham, which was, that he and his seed should have the world, or land under the whole heaven for an everlasting possession. The qualification here required, is to have the Spirit.

Again: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Here the characteristic is meekness; and thus we see that the new covenant gives a reward to those that possess the spirit of Christ; if we have that, we shall be meek, merciful, pure, and PEACEMAKERS. From the 20th verse of the 5th chap. to the 13th verse of the 7th chap., we have the law given, by which we must be governed in order to form a character that will be acceptable to the Lord. From verse 21 to 27, we have the rule by which we are to be governed, if our brother hath ought against us. From verse 27 to 33, we have a law in regard to lust, &c.; 33d to 38th, the law relative to oaths; 38 to 43, on resisting evil, going to law, &c.; 43 to 48, concerning our enemies. Chap. 6 presents the law for giving alms, prayer and forgiveness, fasting, laying up of treasures and trusting in God; chap. 7, in regard to judging and how we should deal with our fellow men; and then we are told the consequences that will follow if we hear these sayings and do them not.

In the above we are taught to act upon principles that are contrary to the nature of the natural man. The principle upon which this law is based, is LOVE, and all that have the law written on their hearts are governed by this principle. No "eye for eye or tooth for tooth," in this covenant, but, it is good for evil in all cases.

The ordinances of this covenant are baptism and the Lord's Supper; showing our faith and expectation of seeing our Lord come again and raise the dead, and then the promises of the covenant will be fulfilled. It is evident that we are living under the new covenant from the Apostle's testimony in regard to Christ, who is made priest, or mediator; and if the new covenant is made, the law is written on the hearts of those that have entered into the covenant with the Lord. Paul teaches thus in 2 Cor. 3: 3, "Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart." Any that have the law written on the heart by the spirit of God, certainly must know the Lord; and when a person is converted to the Lord, he enters into the covenant, and the Lord writes it on his heart, and when the new covenant dispensation ends, then the Lord bestows the things promised in the covenant.

Now, Brethren, let us be governed by the law of the new covenant, and then we shall be FREE—free from envy, strife and every evil work; and when our great High Priest comes, we shall be saved in the promised land. O Lord, hasten the time.

Seventh day Sabbath.

BY W. SHELDON.

No. III.

To make it appear that the keeping of the seventh day Sabbath (Saturday) is enjoined upon christians, many texts are quoted which speak of—

"THE LAW OF GOD."

It is affirmed that this phrase has exclusive reference to the ten commandments engraven upon stone, among which is the seventh day Sabbath. It is stated that there were two distinct laws in the Mosaic age, only one of which expired at the cross. But upon examination we shall find that there was but one law with a moral and ceremonial department—that the phrases "law of Moses" and "law of God" were only interchangeable phrases, applied to the same thing, sometimes to the tables of stone, at other times to the ceremonial department, and frequently to the whole.

Firstly, the law given at Horeb, and engraven on stone, is called "the law of Moses," by the inspired prophet: "Remember ye the LAW OF MOSES my servant, which I commanded him in HOREB." Mal.

What law is here spoken of?

Ans.: The one given in "HOREB."

What law was that?

"The day thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in HOREB * * the Lord spake unto you, * * and he declared unto you his covenant which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone." Deut. 4: 10–13. This is the law which was given in "Horeb" and is directly called "the law of MOSES;" and the same is elsewhere called the "law of God."

If the "law of Moses" expired with the introduction of the gospel economy, which is an admitted fact, then the decalogue, as such, is not an unending code, as it is styled "the law of Moses," which has had its day, though some of its principles are enforced under the new economy; but the Sabbath has never been brought into the new arrangement.

Let no one hereafter deny that the ten commandments form a part of the "law of Moses," which was only to last "till the seed (Christ) should come,"—being now a discharged "SCHOOLMASTER;" having served his time out; however some of the lessons of this master are still taught in the new school, but not a single lesson of seventh day Sabbath keeping!

Again; the ceremonial department of the law is repeatedly called "the law of the Lord." Luke 2: 24. "To offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the law of the Lord, "a pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons." Is there anything said about "turtle doves" or "young pigeons," on the tables of stone? No; but there is in "the law of the Lord," therefore the ceremonial part of the law is likewise styled "the law of the Lord."

The law of God which belonged to the former dispensation, did enjoin the keeping of the seventh day Sabbath; but the law of God which belongs to this age does not enjoin it. This is where some blunder—they seem to overlook the fact that God has laws for each dispensation, which are alike in some items, yet they belong to their respective ages, not being adapted to other ages, and should never be confounded.

Never should we go to the law of a preceding age, to force Sabbath keeping upon the present age. If it is not enjoined in the law of this age, it is not for us.

We need not weary the reader with numerous quotations to prove that "we are not under the law" for all know that the Scriptures thus teach; but it becomes us to guard against that claim of two laws. We have clearly proved that what is called "the law of God" in one instance, is likewise called "the law of Moses," in another instance, and vice versa. The Scriptures do not speak of the laws, but always of "the law," whether reference is made to the ten commandments, or others of more importance. Paul quotes the following commandments from "THE LAW" (not laws) a part of which are from the tables of stone, and a part from the ceremonial department; yet they are items of "THE LAW."

"Thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not bear false witness, thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying; namely, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Rom. 13: 9.

The last command is not one of the ten These items of "the law" which expired at the cross, are now component parts of the gospel system, which is distinct from the preceding one, though containing some of its elements; but destitute of the Sabbath policy.

Rum and Rifles.

In looking over the New Haven fit-out, for Kanzas, of men, Bibles and rifles, encouraged on by the Conn. Divinity, to which all seem to say, Amen, by the immediate help of material aid; I could but compare it with primitive Christianity, to see how fast we were approaching that peaceful millennium which old Dr. Beecher used to declare was right upon us. But he, unlike his SONS, was not expecting it to come in with guns and swords, but they were to be beaten into plough shares and pruning hooks. Wonder what the aged father thinks now, after thirty or forty years toil in evangelizing the West!! O how very humiliating to see such an apostacy, or wide departure from the pure peaceful gospel of Jesus the Messiah.

BIBLES and RIFLES!! How unlike. The Bible in its applicaiton, saves men and gives life—the Rifle in its application, destroys and kills men. See the contrast,—one saves the life of its enemies, the other takes it away; and these sent out together as the fruit of New England Religion!!! How much more consistent to send RUM and RIFLES—then one would be a mutual help to the other in the work of death. Would that religionists would come back on to Bible ground and trust the God of Wm. Penn for protection, and then we might look with brighter hopes for the dawn of that celestial DAY, theologically PROMISED.

Yours for the soon coming of a peaceful kingdom. L. BOUTELL.

Life in Africa.

Rev. Mr. Beachman, a member of the London Wesleyan Mission, has recently returned from a visit to Africa, and in the sketch of the social condition of the negroes inhabiting the Gold Coast and its vicinity, he furnishes a truly awful picture, thus:

Scarcely has one of their barbarous and bloody customs been abandoned, from the earliest period of which anything is known of them. They will even pave their court-yards, palaces, and even the streets or market places of their villages or towns with the skulls of those butchered in the wars, at feasts, funerals, or at sacrifices to Bossum.

Still their wives and slaves are buried alive with their deceased husbands or masters. When Adahanzen died, two hundred and eighty of his wives were butchered before the arrival of his successor, which put a stop to it, only to increase the flow of blood and the number of deaths in other ways. The remaining living wives were buried alive, amid dancing, singing and bewailing, the noise of muskets, horns, drums, yells, groans and screeches. The women marching by headless trunks, bedaubed themselves with mud and blood. Their victims were marched along with large knives passed through their cheek s The executioners struggle for the bloody office, while the victims look on and endure with apathy. They are too familiar with the horrid sacrifice to show terror, or to imagine that all is not as it should be. Their hands were chopped off, and then their legs sawed off, to prolong the amusement. Even some who assisted to fill the graves were then hustled in alive in order to add to the sport or solemnity of the scene. Upon the death of the king's brother, four thousand victims were thus sacrificed. These ceremonies are often repeated, and hundreds slaughtered at every rehearsal. Upon the death of a king of Ashantee, a general massacre takes place, in which there can be no computation of the many victims.

At their Yam customs, Mr. Bowditch witnessed spectacles of the most appalling kind. Every cabocer, or noble, sacrificed a slave as he entered the gate. Heads and skulls formed the ornaments in their possession. Hundreds were slain; and the streaming and teaming blood of the victims was mingled in one vast brass pan, with various vegetables and animal matter, fresh as well as putrid, to compose a powerful Fetchie. At these customs the same scenes of butchery and slaughter occur. The king's exectioners traverse the city, killing all they meet. The next day desolation reigns over the land. The king during the bloody saturnalia, looked on eagerly and danced in his chair with delight.

The king of Dahoney paves the approaches to his residence, and ornaments the battlements of his palace, with the skulls of his victims; and the great Fetchie tree, at Bodagry, has its wide spread limbs laden with human carcasses and limbs. The want of chastity is no disgrace, and the priests are employed as pimps.

"Murder, adultery and thievery," says Bossum, "are here no SIN."

The Test of Good Preaching.

Whoever hides the truth by embellishment of words; by a vain exhibition of wit and fancy; by opaque learning; by the impenetrable thickness of nice distinction; by stupidity and lifelessness; by insane solemnity and sanctimonious conventionalism—is a desecrator of the pulpit, and a breaker of the Sabbath day. Stupidity hides the truth just as fatally as levity. Consecrated dullness is no better than flippant folly. If a window fails to let the light through, it makes little difference whether the obscurity comes from the web of a big, lazy spider, or from the nimble weavings of a hundred pert little spiders. God's truth, really, earnestly, pungently spoken, for a direct and practical purpose, with distinct results constantly following—that is preaching, no matter what are the particular methods of speech. Doubtless some are better than others. But every sincere and truthful man must use that way by which God has enabled him to achieve success; some by solid statements, some by inexorable reasoning, some by illustration and fancy, some by facts and stories—just as God has given power to each one. But the test is the same in the highest and lowest. Fruit must follow. The truth of God must shine through the human instrument, evince its divinity by signs following—the awakening of the conscience, conviction of sin, conversion to God, and a life redeemed from selfishness, and set aglow with Christian goodness and benevolence.—Independent.

Honesty in Little Things.

The following curious account of a practical sermon is copied from the Vermont Chronicle:

"A brother in the ministry took occasion to preach on the passage in Luke 16: 10, 'He that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much.' The theme was, 'that men who take advantage in small things of others, have the very element of character to wrong the community and individuals in great things, where the prospect of escaping detection or censure is as little to be dreaded.' The preacher exposed the various ways by which people wrong others; such as borrowing; by mistakes in making change; by errors in accounts; by escaping taxes and custom house duties; by managing to escape postage; by finding articles and never seeking owners; and by injuring articles borrowed, and never making the fact known to the owner when returned. One lady the next day met her pastor, and said, 'I have been up to Mr. —, to rectify an error he made in giving me change a few weeks ago, for I felt bitterly your reproof yesterday.' Another individual went to Boston to pay for an article not in her bill, which she noticed was not charged when she paid it. A man going home from meeting, said to his companion, 'I do not believe there was a man in the meeting-house to-day, who did not feel condemned.' After applying the sermon to a score or more of his acquaintances, he continued—'Did not the pastor utter something about finding a pair of wheels?' 'I believe not,' neighbor A. 'He spoke of keeping little things, which had been found.' 'Well, I thought two or three times he said something about finding a pair of wheels, and really supposed he meant me. I found a pair down in my lot a while ago.' 'Do you,' said his companion, 'know who they belongto?' Mr. B. lost them a short time ago.' The owner was soon in possession of his wheels."

Holy Life.

The beauty of holy life constitutes the most eloquent and effective persuasive to religion which one human being can address to another. We have many ways of doing good to our creatures, but none so efficacious as leading a virtuous, upright and well ordered life. There is an energy of moral suasion in a good man's life, passing the highest efforts of the orator's genius. The seen, but silent beauty of holiness speaks more eloquently of God, and duty, than the tongue of men and angels. Let parents remember this. The best inheritance parents can bequeath to a child is a virtuous example, a legacy of hallowed remembrance and associations. The beauty of holiness, beaming through the life of a loved relative or friend is more effectual to strengthen such as do stand, in virtue's way and raise up those that are bowed, than precept, command, entreaty and warning.

Metals are known by their weight, and men by their talk. Material gravity makes gold precious, and moral renders the man so.

Glass, from the contiguity of gold, acquires an emerald lustre. So, by the proximity of the excellent, a fool attains to cleverness.

Baptism.

No. III.

Having spoken of the duty and subjects of baptism, we now inquire, what is the Bible mode of baptism?

In our first article we endeavored to prove that baptism is a Christian duty; in the second, that none but believers are proper subjects; and in this, we shall endeavor to show clearly, that baptism can be administered in no other way than by IMMERSION.

PROOF.

1. We will notice the signification of the words employed to represent this ordinance.

The Greek word, bapto, is the root from which all the various words expressing baptism are derived.

The primary signification of this word is, "to dip."

See Donnegan's Greek Lexicon.

Greenfield's Lexicon gives the following definition:—"to dip, plunge, immerse."

A secondary meaning of bapto, is, to dye," as one mode of dyeing was by dipping the cloth into the coloring matter.

Baptizo, the word rendered baptize in the Bible, is a derivative from bapto, and signifies to dip or immerse, and never has any other meaning, as is admitted by some of the most able critics.

Prof. Stuart admits, that "ALL LEXICOGRAPHERS AND CRITICS OF ANY NOTE ARE AGREED" that both these words mean to dip, plunge, immerse.

Prof. Porson, a celebrated Greek scholar at the London Institution, assured Dr. Newman, that baptizo signified a total immersion.

The most distinguished Greek scholars are compelled to admit, that bapto is never used to denote baptism, and baptizo never signifies to dye.

It will be noticed that baptizo is not translated, any more than to substitute e for the final o.

Had it been translated, it must have been rendered, immerse, dip or plunge. We hope that the new translation, by the American Bible Union, will be faithful on this point.

The word baptizo does not in itself denote the substance in which the ordinance should be performed, but simply the fact of a burial in something; and it is never correct to say a thing is baptized until it has been immersed in the element employed.

If there were no other proof than that derived from the true meaning of the original words, that baptism can be administered only by immersion, there would not be room for a doubt in our mind.

We are taught by those who have critically examined all the passages in the Greek classics, where the words are found which are used in the Bible to denote baptism, that they invariably denote immersion.

There is not a single case where baptizo conveys the idea of sprinkling.

II. We will now notice some of the Bible examples of baptism.

"John did baptize in the wilderness, . . . and there went out unto him all the land of Judea, ... and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan." Mark. 1: 4, 5.

It may be asked if the preposition in may not be rendered at? Prof. Robinson, a Pedo-baptist, and the learned author of the lexicon of the New Testament, translated the word (en), by in or into, in all the passages referring to John's baptism.

It appears evident, that John went to Jordan for baptism, because much water was needed.

We read in John 3: 23,—"And John also was baptizing in Enon, near to Salim, because there was much water there."

Here, the reason is given, which would be no reason, if he only sprinkled a few drops upon them, as is practiced at the present day.

When Philip baptized the eunuch, it is said,—"They went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him.

And when they were come up out of the water, the spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more." Acts 8: 38, 39.

These accounts of baptism are in harmony with the idea, that they were immersed.

We find nothing in the Bible that favors the opinion of sprinkling, or pouring people for the purpose of baptizing them.

The Greek preposition (is) rendered into in Acts 8: 38, and "ek" which is translated out of in verse 39, are correctly rendered according to their primary signification.

In Matt. 3: 6, where the Apostle is speaking of John's baptism, he says they "were baptized of him in Jordan."

Why go into Jordan, if he was only to sprinkle them?

Some think the jailer and his house, as recorded in Acts 16: 32–34, could not have been baptized by immersion, because say they, there was not sufficient water in the prison. That point remains to be proved.

Besides, it is not said they were baptized in the prison, but it is expressly stated that after the baptism, "when he had brought them into his house he set meat before them."

Then, supposing it could be proved that there was not sufficient water in the prison for baptism, they might have been baptized after leaving the prison, before they went to the house.

Another objection is raised relative to those who were baptized on the day of Pentecost, mentioned in Acts 2: 41. It is not said the 3000 were baptized that day, but suppose they were, we see no difficulty.

In verse 37 we are taught that not only Peter, but the rest of the apostles were present.

We learn from Acts 1: 15., 2: 1, that there were about one hundred twenty present at this time; but if none baptized but the twelve apostles, then they could have easily immersed the whole 3000 in five hours.

We learn from history that "On the great Sabbath of the Easter festival, the 16th day of April, A.D. 404, Chrysostom, with the assistance of the clergy of his own church, baptized by immersion 3000 persons in one day, and in one place."

Again:—"In 496, Remigius, bishop of Rheims, baptized in the same day, by immersion, Clovis king of France, and 3000 of his subjects."—Christian Review, Vol. 3, pp. 91–2.

III. We now inquire of the historian relative to baptism in the first two centuries.

"In the first century baptism was administered by immersing the candidate WHOLLY in water."—Mosheim, Vol. 1, p. 87.

All probably are aware, that Mosheim is a standard Church historian, and we have never been able to find any history to contradict this statement, but much to give confirmation.

In this same first century, John baptized the Savior,—the Apostles received their commission from Jesus to preach, and baptize, and had done it under the special care and direction of the Savior. The beloved disciple John lived until within four years of the close of the first century.

Now we ask in all candor, can it be supposed for one moment, that John the Baptist, Jesus and the apostles, did not administer baptism in the proper manner?

Says Kitto in his Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature,—"The whole BODY was immersed in water."—Vol. 1, p. 288.

Says Neander, who is considered the best church historian,—"Baptism was ORIGINALLY BY IMMERSION."

"The candidate in the primitive churcq was immersed in water, and raised out again."—Tholuck.

We should be satisfied when we know the practice of the church under the immediate care of the apostles, in relation to the ordinance of baptism.

"According to apostolical instruction and example, baptism was performed by immersing the whole body."—Hahn.

"We are immersed in water, . . . let down into the water and dipped. . . . . Peter immersed in water."—Turtullian.

"In the apostolic age, baptism was by immersion."—Winer.

"The apostolic church baptized ONLY BY IMMERSION."—Bretschneider.

We hardly can conceive how a point can be clearer than that "the BIBLE mode of baptism," is by immersion.

In our next, we purpose to say a few words relative to the signification, or object of baptism.

Question.

Bro. Beach asks for the meaning of the word "Ghost" in Job 14: 10.

The verse reads,—"but man dieth, and wasteth away; yea man giveth up the ghost and where is he?"

The original word—(gah-vag) here rendered ghost, is found nine times in the Bible, and means when literally translated,—"expired and died."

In the new translation by the Amer. Bible Union, this passage in Job is rendered—"Man expires, and where is he?" This is the true idea of the original. The phrase,—"giveth up the ghost," is all translated from that one word.—(gah-vag) which means, "wasted away, expired, or died." There is no idea conveyed in the original, that any part of Job was alive, when he was DEAD.

HYMN BOOKS.—There are yet a few more of this valuable yet cheap Hymn Book of Bro. Brewer's left, which can be had of him at Providence, R. I., or at the Crisis office.

I hope all that have not, will speedily avail themselves of the privilege of getting a full supply, so that we may sing in them, and all have a book. Twenty-five cents for Hymns good enough, and enough of them, to sing till the Lord comes. Yours, for a book for each, so as not to be dependant on your good neighbors.

The Believer's Rest.

BY SR. S. J. HIGGINS.

O my leaness, my leaness! There is quite a sense of destitution on the part of the church, a want of life; and many enquire for the cause, while they are struggling to maintain a godly walk and conversation, and are frequently heard to say, —"how hard it is to live religion now," as though we had passed under some new dispensation. Now I believe this is all a mistake. This world was never a friend to grace. The difficulty is here; our people have been doctrinized till they have all become doctors of divinity; and as is tritely observed, when several physicians are located in one village, a large proportion of the people are expected to die; so our spirituality, or vital godliness has nearly died out. There are many professors—many who have been believers—many who expect to believe again, and many who believe many things that are true and some things that are not so true; but there are few BELIEVERS in the gospel sense of the term, at the present time.

"What think ye of Christ, is the test
To try both your faith and your scheme,
You cannot think right of the rest,
Unless you think rightly of Him."

"I am the vine, ye are the branches." The Jews were disjoined or severed from the vine by unbelief, and all, both Jews and Gentiles, must be and are united by faith. Faith not in a fine spun theory of even truth; but let me paraphrase so as to be understood.

I believe and am perfectly convinced that I am helpless, wretched, and lost, naturally, and as there is no eye to pity, or arm to save but Jesus; I must perish unless He saves me; He is revealed as the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world,—he saves his people from their sins. I see him in the gospel addressing himself to me, "Come unto me, I will in no wise cast you out. Come unto me, ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

Proud human nature says "not now, you have no need."

Yea, but I am heavy laden, I must come now.

"Nay, but stop awhile, you can make yourself much better."

I have tried, and the more I try the worse I am.

"But stay till tomorrow."

I hear him say, "to-day if ye will hear his voice harden not your hearts." I will not presume on to-morrow, to-morrow is none of mine.

"But perhaps to-morrow some propitious circumstance will make your way easier, you may have some help that you have not now, and then your cross will be lighter."

I have presumed on to-morrow till I fear I have already wearied the patience of the long-suffering God, who is now waiting to be gracious, and I am resolved to wait no longer.

"Aye, you may find that it is now too late, for His spirit will not always strive."

I'm resolved to try, if I perish at the foot of the cross, and no sinner ever perished there—

"Just as I am without one plea,
O, Lamb of God, I come to thee.

Holy Father, I come to thee in the name of Jesus, for His sake receive me, forgive all my sins, all my errors, all my ingratitude, receive me graciously, and love me freely. I give myself away to thee, I dedicate myself to thee, to be thy servant. I reckon myself dead indeed unto sin. I believe thou didst love me, and hast so loved me as to give thine only Son to die for me. I believe for His sake thou dost NOW receive me—forgive me—and cleanse me in His most precious blood. I ask thee, as thou hast bade me come with boldness, yet further, to shed abroad thy love in my heart, and fill me with thy spirit, that it may bear witness with mine, that I am verily thy child. I read thine own encouraging promises—thou hast said thou art more willing to give the holy spirit, than parents are to give good gifts to their children. I believe this also,—

"The spirit answers to the blood,
And tells me I am born of God."

But I think I hear some one say, "I cannot believe till I feel."

O, then you wish to be saved by feeling, do you? Let me tell you solemnly, as I would not trifle with your soul, that all the feeling you get without first believing God's naked promises, is worse than nothing; and when the circumstances which gave rise to them are past, your good feelings are all gone—your religion all gone, all the bright retinue of christian graces are wanting, and all your trying to maintain a christian walk is only trying to keep up the same miserable self-delusion that has rocked you so long in the cradle of self-security. Now cast them all aside, come up to the naked promises, and as sure as on His word you dare rely, this faith shall give the witness.

But I hear it further objected, "God must give the power to believe."

Must I give you power to believe my word? How absurd. God must work some special miracle that you may believe he has spoken the truth!

"But do we not read 'By grace are ye saved through faith and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God?'"

Yes, but by critically examining the original text, you will find it warrants no such conclusion. "By grace are ye saved through faith and that not of your own deserving;" i. e., this grace, this gift is given you by God. He gave his Son and with him all things! Blessed be his name. Exceeding great and precious promises, and I need no miracle to make me believe them. Peace flows from believing; by believing we lose all condemnation, all guilt, all fear. By believing, the weary soul finds rest. We which do believe do enter into rest. 'Tis ours to yield entirely, and believe fully, and our business to keep believing. "Faith, mighty faith the promise sees and looks to that alone." It does not keep counting the pulse of feeling. They that do believe do find rest for their souls. The believer rises in the morning, knowing that he has dedicated himself to the Lord; he believes—what?

1st, That all past sins are forgiven for Christ's sake.

2d, That he is now washed and cleansed from all sin,—not a part.

3d, That the spirit of God fills and rules his heart, feeling or no feeling.

4th, He believes Christ is able to keep that which he has committed to his hands, that His grace is sufficient, that he will not be tempted above what he is able to bear, but he will with the temptation make a way to escape.

He proves the grace of God sufficient, he is kept in perfect peace because his heart is stayed on the Lord.

He proves the burden of the cross light, and his yoke easy. Although he is weak, he is united to a strong Savior, and he can constantly sing—

He saves me now—I do believe,
O, praise his holy name.

O Brn. believe! O ye ministers believe, and preach Christ Jesus and him crucified, risen, interceeding, and speedily coming to save all who believe.

Amen. "Even so come Lord Jesus and come quickly." S. J. HIGGINS.

For the Crisis

Letter from Bro. Chas. A. Sumner.

The importance of a thorough settlement in the great doctrine of our Lord's personal appearing to judge the earth, and of the state-intermediate for those who die not seeing his full glory, is becoming more and more impressed on my mind, the farther I advance in life and study. I am strengthened continually in the conviction, that at this time there is an especial call for all holding Scriptural tenets in regard to these great matters to "let their light shine."

My position, of which I am scarcely fit to speak, is such that facts and characters transpire before me, as constant witnesses to what I say.

The mass of christians (so-called) may, in all charity, be said to be AFLOAT in vague speculation on theological matters, or totally indifferent concerning the faith once delivered. Alas! my dear friend, do you grieve to hear me say this? Well, is it not so? Unmistakably!

I hold to the large importance of gospel light on the appearing of Christ, and on the doctrine of purgatory (Roman Catholic or Protestant) for several reasons, some of which I take occasion to set forth.

And first; they are essential truths for the perfection of christian character. Now all truth from God is elevating, but I see here special points calculated in more than ordinary measure to destroy the inner life.

We have referred to the present acknowledged condition of the religious world. Now nothing is with more explicitness, and emphasis of manner laid down in Holy writ, than are the two truths under contemplation. We want substantial truths and healthy doctrine—here it is.

Some seem to fear that God is manifesting himself and his purposes too much in the Book as we read it. Nothing more clearly shows their temper. Their fears are good against any Revelation, and the only wonder, is, that they ever believed at at all; it is respectable, however, to have a little religion. The character nourished with the correct views is able to stand against the assaults,—the airy scaffolding built by superstition being burned, he walks on ground. I rejoice in the day of my redemption from the error of immortalism. Where before, on reading the Bible my vision was blurred, and I sorrowed because I could not see and understand, I now feel the rock and taste the sparkling water fast gushing up.

Some of our objectors believe one thing in regard to the dead, and some another; few are settled alike, and we are called by them, "persons of one idea," on this part of Scripture belief. It might be answered that it were better to be men of one idea, than men of no idea at all; but probably they would see no force in that remark.

The doctrines have great, and blessed effect in building up principle in man for the concord which springs on a hope in them. How can we embrace the pure faith and seek to aggrandize ourselves, and look down upon our neighbors? God is near. There is not even a moment of wailing prayer between death and the judgment! Watch!

It is hard to touch upon one point of christian excellence without implying another.

We spoke first of the reflex influence of a harmonious social state—think of that which goes out!

Suppose, being ignorant of existing civil laws and regulations, I were to ask a king for an impossible grant, impossible from the nature of his constitutional obligations, his previous enactments, what would he think of me? The world would say, "fool." Very well.

I heard a minister pray for his afflicted church member thus:

"O Lord send the spirits of the dear departed, gone before, that they may comfort him."

Will God send them?

If our doctrine be true, is not God grieved with such prayers—the God who would be worshipped in spirit and truth? Is it not the absolute, and inevitable tendency of error to unsettle and render visionary and sceptical the human character?

Our doctrine, then, actually takes the man or woman out of a morbid, unsound state,—this is its first effects. How essential then to perfection!

The world is full of strange doctrine. Wherever the truth is spoken, it must be spoken in very great plainness. There is no allowance, now-a-days, for equivocation, or halting. Those who hold with us cannot afford to be mealy-mouthed. I am glad of it. There is a developing necessity looking towards perfection. What is more essential for devoted piety, than substantial truth, settled, incontrovertible truth. Truth at the door; truth shaping our daily supplications; truth finding the unbeliever all air or mud with respect to immediate or (so-called) remote futurity,—truth that cries and must be heard on acceptance,—pray, friend, what is more essential?

CHAS. A. SUMNER.

Gen. Theo. Seminary, N. Y. City,
May, 27th, 1856.

We rejoice to hear from our Bro., and though in a Theo. Sem., we are thankful that he is not bound with theological chains and hand cuffs. My Bro., sell not your birthright to the kingdom, but contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. Truly, my Bro., the time has come to speak plainly on the great truths to which you have referred, and may "the God of Jeshurun" be your sun and shield till the day of glory dawns, and the Prince of Peace returns.—ED.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. V. Fisk.

BRO. MERRIAM:—For the first time, I seat myself to write a few broken thoughts to the little flock scattered abroad.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, who are sanctified through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, my prayer to God for you is, that you might hold fast the beginning of your confidence firm unto the end, that no man take your crown. When we cast our eyes over the past movement of the Advent body, and see what a state of things now exists through unbelief, and the casting away of confidence in the Lord, and see how many dear hearts have been made to bleed at every pore, I say when we have seen such a state of things as now exists among this class of people, I feel to thank God through our Lord Jesus Christ, that he knows all things, and will guide the old ship Zion with all on board, safely into the harbor of eternal rest. The scenes that are daily transpiring all around us are of such a character as should awaken a deeper interest in all of our hearts for holiness and purity of mind, and a closer walk with God. O how many have been led since the passing of the time in fifty-four, to give up their hope of the speedy Advent of our Lord.

We see in the 2nd chap. of Daniel that the image there brought to view brings us down through four forms, or states of government, to a divided state of the toes of that image, in which the God of heaven will set up a kingdom which will stand for ever and ever, and it will not be given to another people. Are we not now where we may look with deep interest for the downfall of that City referred to by John the Revelator, when speaking of the "mother of harlots?" We see also the three unclean spirits like frogs, which come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet, have been doing their work in gathering the kings, and the whole world together to the great battle of "that day of God Almighty." Who among us can fail of seeing a perfect fulfilment in this feature?

O, how strikingly is the Christian's course marked out in the word of God, as onward he goes towards the port of endless rest; for he has no rest here on this tempestuous ocean of time, but as he travels onward, he has promised to him an additional light, which is to shine more and more, even to the perfect day; such a soul will rejoice in God.

It is important that our hearts be established in the present truth—and we endure to the end. Paul has taught us that we are "bound to give thanks alway to God for you beloved of the Lord; because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth."

Again, we are instructed by our Savior, in another important truth, which is brought to view in the twenty-fourth of Matthew; that is, the signs which should precede his coming, and what we should learn by them. O what a striking caution is there given by our Savior—"take heed that no man deceive you;" and then follows a history of what shall take place—the abomination spoken of by Daniel the prophet—the shortening of the days for the elect's sake, and his coming as the lightning which shineth out of the East even unto the West. O what a scene there is to take place at the coming of Christ, when every eye will see him and wail because of Him! What a solemn day to those that are unprepared to meet him. How important then that we should hold fast the beginning of our confidence firm unto the end.

In the twenty-fifth chapter, he likens the Church to ten virgins which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom; at which time they met with a disappointment in not seeing their Lord—in consequence of which, they all slumbered and slept—and then a cry was made at midnight, when all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps and went out in expectation of seeing the coming bridegroom. So we thought to have seen our Savior ere this; the great Author of all things has otherwise ordered; we are still here and the parable is not yet fulfilled.

God's people are a tried people, sighing for the abominations done in the land, and longing to be delivered from the yoke of bondage of sin and death—into the kingdom of God's dear son.

I do thank the Lord with all my heart, that I ever believed in the time of the Lord's coming to earth again, for in so doing, God has blest my poor soul and given me confidence in his word, and a boldness in the cause of truth, that I probably should never have obtained through any other means. I believe that God was with his saints in preaching the time.

It is the desire of my heart to do the will of my heavenly Father, and be ready for the coming and kingdom of Jesus to gather all the humble, waiting ones.

Your unworthy Brother,

VARNUM FISK.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. Marden.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I thought while reading Sr. Blanchard's letter, if my letter had cheered one heart as others have mine, I am amply repaid. As I wrote in my letter dated Nov. 25, of my acquaintance with the Crisis, perhaps it would be as well to explain it in few words.

Some months previous to its publication, I dreamed you were at our place—sat apparently very thoughtful with a paper in your hand; you arose up and carried it out open, after some time you returned with the same, but with still deeper solemnity on your countenance, and went out with it again in the same way. I told my dream to no one until one cold winter's morning when at my brothers. Some papers were brought from the post-office, and on opening them I recognized them to be the same, and was still more surprised to see that you were the Editor, it being the first intimation I ever had of it. I then gave up all traditional teachings and preconceived opinions, if I had any, and sought diligently to know the truth, and if ever I knew what it was to hunger and thirst, I have hungered and thirsted after righteousness; and I am happy to inform you that I would not exchange the light that I now have on the Scriptures, for worlds like this. At this time, I was unable to read but little, if any, it so increased the pain in my head and left eye, caused by the pressure of the skull on the optic nerve.

But through the goodness of God I have been able to read it myself, or hear it read every week since; but shall probably remain a sufferer while time continues. I think there may not be one among all the readers of the Crisis that prize it more highly than myself; without it, I am indeed lonely, with it and the Bible, I am contented and happy. I have often wished that others could view that dream as I have since the Crisis' second going out. Bro. Burnham asks the question,—"Who among us will become impatient and go away, and where will we go?" I answer, I am content to remain where I am. I think by the grace of God, that dream, with the aid of the Crisis, has kept me from feeding on the husks of "spirit lands, immortal souls, a visionary heaven, and an ideal Christ." I have had much to contend with since embracing different views from most of the family circle, but we have an assurance in His blessed word, that all things work together for good to them that love God, and I know I love God, and that blessed Savior who has done so much for me,—more than all earthly friends.

Shall I not have the prayers of the Brn, and Srs, that I may be preserved blameless until His coming and kingdom.

Letter from Br. W. S. Sheldon.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I am now in Minnesota where my services are needed. I am not here to backslide, or to get rich, but to work for God. Here is a chance to do something; and it is my pleasure to do all I can by preaching and scattering wholesome publications. I will write more when I get settled.

Domestic Summary.

THE CIVIL WAR IN KANSAS.—The following special despatch is confirmatory of previous advices:—

LAWRENCE, June 5.—An open field battle took place at Palmyra on the afternoon of Monday, 2d inst. It lasted nearly three hours. The parties were nearly equal. The pro-slavery men were a roving band under Capt. H. C. Patte, correspondent of the Missouri Republican. Five of the pro-slavery men surrendered, with 25 horses and mules, arms and amunition, 2 drums and a large quantity of articles stolen at the sacking of Lawrence. The U. S. troops knew of the battle, but did not interfere. The Free State settlers clustered to Palmyra, and 100 got there after the battle was over. The troops went down next day to disperse the Free State men and release the prisoners.

Another attack was made on Franklin, where the Missourians had assembled in force, with a cannon and amunition. Only one of their companies got there, and they were short about 15 men; after 20 minutes the small party retreated. No particulars.

Civil war exists here.

The troops are here in force, but have done nothing yet but help Gov. Shannon to get Sharpe's rifles.

PRO-SLAVERY ACCOUNTS FROM KANSAS—Two Towns reported Captured by the Free State Party—Murders—Guerrilla Fighting—Marshal Donaldson killed—Civil War in Earnest.—ST. LOUIS, June 9. An extra of the Westport Times of the 5th says that reliable news has been received of the burning of the town of Bernard, by the Free State forces, on the night of the 3d inst., and the destruction of from $12,000 to $15,000 worth of property.

A company of six men had arrived at Westport, stating that at three o'clock on the morning of the 4th the abolitionists attacked and captured Franklin. They numbered 300, and were opposed by only 12 or 15 pro-slavery men. Mr. Fishmaker and two others are reported killed. The men who made this report belonged to Mr. Fleming's company of emigrants, who, they say, fought against the abolitionists for an hour, but being outnumbered, fled when the town was taken.

The Investigating Committee are in this city.

The independence (Mo.) correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, writing under date of June 3, says:

Marshal Donaldson and four men, who had been discharged from official duty, were killed near Hickory Point, on the 3d inst. The Marshal was in the act of arresting some of the men who had attacked Capt. Patti's company.

After the surrender of Patti's company, the Free Soilers commenced the work of destroying houses and driving men, women and children from their houses near Hill Creek. One hundred and fifty men, under Capt. Reed, left Sante Fe in pursuit of the marauders, but Col. Sumner arrived at Black Jack in time to prevent a conflict.

It is reported that Franklin was not taken, though attacked by a large party of abolitionists.

Gov. Shannon issued a proclamation on the 4th, commanding all persons belonging to military companies unauthorized by law to disperse; otherwise they would be dispersed by force of the U.S. troops. The proclamation requires all civil officers of the government to be vigilant in enforcing the laws against offenders, and protecting the property and persons of all law-abiding citizens.

The proclamation further says that all aggressive parties from outside the territory will be repulsed; that the military force under control of the Executive is ample to enforce the laws, and protect the rights of the citizens. The proclamation of President Pierce of Feb. 11 is appended, and notice given that it will be strictly enforced.

A requisition has been made on Col. Sumner for a sufficient force to insure obedience to the proclamationr

CHICAGO, June 10. The Democratic Press has a letter from Lecompton, June 4, giving details of a skirmish with Capt. Patti's company. The account states that 30 Southerners, proceeding from Westport to Bull Creek, under command of Patti, encountered about the same number of Free State men.

Patti had a number of Free State prisoners, whom he arrayed in front as a shield. Then his company fell back under cover of the unarmed prisoners, and hid behind logs and trees. The Free State men then dropped down in the grass, and a scattered firing was kept up for two hours, till Patti surrendered unconditionally. Three Missourians of Patti's company escaped; among them Coleman the murderer of Dow. The Free State party took thirty horses, a number of Sharpe's rifles and United States muskets, besides a quantity of goods stolen from Lawrence.

A party of pro-slavery men, including a son of Gov. Shannon, made a night attack on the house of Capt. Walker, 5 miles from Lecompton, but they were repulsed and young Shannon taken prisoner. He was released the following day, after which Shannon took a company of U. S dragoons, and spent two days in searching the houses of Free State men, taking possession of all the arms, amunition, &c., which could be found.

P. M. A man who has just arrived here from Kansas City says a general rendezvous of pro-slavery men is appointed at Bull Creek, preparatory to another attack on Lawrence. Gen. Whitfield is to command. They expect to concentrate 600 men before starting. The men are mostly furnished with U. S. muskets. The Free State men are deficient in arms and provisions.

It is rumored that Donaldson and other pro-slavery men were killed in a fight among themselves, at Franklin, the difficulty growing out of the distribution of goods stolen at Lawrence.

THE HOSTILITIES IN KANSAS—ANOTHER INROAD OF MISSOURIANS—CHICAGO, June 9.—The latest Kansas dates confirm the intelligence of a fresh outbreak of hostilities. Capt. Patti's company having been overpowered by a force of Free State men, Gen. Whitfield left Westport on the night of the 2d, at the head of 100 men, in pursuit. They were supposed to be about forty miles from Westport, on the Santa Fe road. Col. Sumner also left for the scene of disturbance with eight companies of dragoons.

The Chicago Tribune has a letter dated Lawrence, May 31, which states that the Free State settlers are in imminent peril—that forces from Missouri are again invading the Territory and the farmers have been obliged to organize companies to guard their property against bands of marauders.

ST. LOUIS, June 9.—The account taken from an extra of the Kansas City Enterprise, (pro-slavery,) and telegraphed from here, that nine abolitionists and three pro-slavery men were killed in an encounter between a band of one hundred and fifty abolitionists and Capt. Patti's company, proves to be an exaggeration. Capts. Pattis and McGee, reported dead, are alive, and but two or three persons were killed in all. Capt. Patti's company was captured, the Free State party being greatly superior in numbers Gen. Whitfield, with 100 men, has gone to their rescue.

CONFIRMATION OF THE REPORTED BATTLE IN KANSAS.—NEW YORK, June 12.—The Kansas special correspondent of the Tribune gives the following account of the skirmish at Palmyra, confirmatory of the telegraphic despatches:

LAWRENCE, June 3.—A field engagement has at last been fought, and, although on a comparatively small scale, exhibiting all the horrors of a battle. Five pro-slavery men are wounded, three of them at least, mortally. The pro-slavery men were completely routed. Twenty one prisoners were taken, including the correspondent of the Missouri Republican, who was acting as officer with them. Several fled, including Coleman, the murderer of Dow, who was of the party. The Free State men got some 25 horses, several of which had been formerly stolen from them. Eight Sharpe's rifles were also recovered, and some 20 or 30 Colt's revolvers, and bowie knives, etc.; and arms and ammunition of all kinds fell into the hands of the victorious party, together with wagons, tents, and provisions; and a great many articles taken at the sack of Lawrence, have been found among their baggage. The Free State party had two men wounded. There is also a Free State man, who is mortally wounded; but he was shot by his friends. He had been in the camp of the enemy a prisoner, and with two other Free State men, who were also prisoners, he was placed by the pro-slavery men in the front of the engagement without arms. I can neither learn this man's name nor the names of any of the other men killed or wounded. These particulars I learned direct from the spot last night. The attack commenced in the afternoon and was of short duration.

NEW YORK, June 13.—The Daily Times has the following special despatches of Kansas news:

ST. LOUIS, 12.—Osawatomie, a Free State town, was sacked by a Georgia mob on the 6th inst. The printing office was destroyed, houses were burned, sixteen horses were stolen, and the jewels were taken from ladies' ears and fingers.

Palmyra has also been sacked, and robberies occur daily.

LATER FROM OREGON—BATTLE WITH THE INDIANS.—NEW YORK, June 14.—The Oregonian, of May 15, gives an account of another battle at Rogue river, where a party of 250 volunteers, under Gen Lamerick, surprised a band of Indians encamped on a bar of Rogue river, near the meadows. and firing upon them, killed 30, and completely routed the remainder. The volunteers lost none, but had two wounded—a Mr. Mercer, of Wilkinson's company, badly. He was brought to the hospital at Deer Creek, and it is thought has since died. The Indians fought for some time, but finally retreated. Gen. Lamerick made preparations to follow, hoping to strike an effectual blow. The volunteers captured ten horses.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune says:

Intelligence from Mexico indicates that much alarm is felt by the government respecting the Spanish expedition, and foreshadows an application for the protection of the United States. Southern members of Congress suggest the granting of protection on condition of a cession to the United States of the Tehuantepec route, with the circumjacent territory.

GRASSHOPPERS IN THE INDIAN COUNTRY.—The Van Buren (Ark.) Intelligencer of the 24th ult. says:

We learn from a gentleman just from the Indian country, that the grasshoppers are entirely ruining the crops in some portion of that country. They are in some places as thick as musquitos in the Mississippi swamps, moving about in armies. They are said to be worse among the Seminoles than any where else; so much so that many of them have despaired of making any corn at all, and to those it is particularly distressing.

CHURCHES IN SAN FRANCISCO.—There are in San Francisco, 30 churches having an average attendance of 9665 persons, which is estimated to be one-fifth of the total Christian population in the city. The amount of church property is now $762,500; but as the property was purchased when real estate commanded high prices, it is estimated that its original cost was $1,250,000. Of the churches two are Episcopal, four Presbyterian, five Catholic, four Congregational, three Baptist, three Methodist, one Unitarian, two French, and three churches are attended solely by colored people.

QUAKERS IN THE UNITED STATES.—There are at the present time in this country, 716 churches belonging to the Quakers, and the number of attendants is estimated at 283,000.

Arrival of the Daniel Webster.

NEW ORLEANS, June 11.—Steamship Daniel Webster, from Aspinwall, 4th, has arrived. She brings California dates to May 20.

Great excitement existed at San Francisco in consequence of the assassination of James King, editor of the Bulletin, in the streets, by a man named Casey. The affair occurred on the 14th, and King died on the 16th. Casey was arrested and committed to jail; the citizens had become very much excited in the matter, and a meeting of the Vigilance Committee was called. Placards of an inflammatory nature were posted, calling upon the citizens to take the law into their own hands.

On the 18th, 3000 citizens, completely organized into divisions and companies, and armed with muskets, marched by three streets from the committee room, and taking possession of the jail, took thence Casey, together with Cora, the gambler and murderer of Gen. Richardson, and carried them to the committee room. Here they were kept strongly guarded up to the time of the sailing of the steamer. It was supposed they would both be hung by the mob.

The whole city was draped in mourning for the death of Mr. King, who was highly esteemed. Casey was formerly an inmate of Sing Sing Prison, a statement of which fact in King's paper led to the difficulty.

The Vigilance Committee had fully re organized throughout the State, and have, it is said, a fund of $75,000 and are determined to drive all the gamblers from the State.

Gen. Walker's position in Nicaragua was unchanged. The cholera, black vomit, &c., were raging among the troops.

The Panama riots had been settled, and the road is now considered safe for travellers.

Success prompts to exertion, and habit facilitates success. Habit also gives promptness, and the soul of despatch is decision One may write a book or paint a picture, while another is deliberating about a plan or title page. The more we do, the more we can do. If we go forward with spirit and confidence, we shall succeed. The best are idle half the time, and he who does nothing, renders himself incapable of doing anything, while our capacity is invigorated by occasions of necessity. Our expenditure of intellectual wealth makes us rich, and we acquire ideas by imparting them.

ON LISTENING TO EVIL REPORTS.—The longer I live the more I feel the importance of adhering to the rule which I have had laid down for myself in relation to such matters, viz.,

1. To hear as little as possible whatever is to the prejudice of others.
2. To believe nothing of the kind until I am absolutely forced to it.
3. Never to drink in the spirit of one who circulates an ill report.
4. Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindness which is expressed towards others.
5. Always to believe that if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given of the matter.—Life of Simeon.

It is painful to see the extent of external religion in the world. Everything appears to be for mere show and effect, without there being any heart or genuine feeling in it.—Litchfield Republican.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Ericsson.

SANDY HOOK, June 13. The Steamer Ericsson is coming up the Bay. She brings Liverpool dates of the 28th ult.

The news is unimportant. The Italian question is still unsettled. It is stated that the Pope proposes the meeting at Rome of a Congress of Italian Sovereigns, with Plenipotentiaries from Austria and France.

Denmark is putting her fleet into an effective state.

A new Russian loan is spoken of, of which part is to be offered in London, and part in Hamburg.

The Spanish Government is taking energetic measures against Mexico to enforce the claims of her Spanish subjects.

Napoleon is considering a scheme for founding a territorial nobility in Algeria.

The Earl of Elgin moved in the House of Lords, for despatches relative to troops for Canada. A discussion ensued, when Lord Clarendon expressed a good feeling towards the United States, but declined to recal Mr. Crampton. No new fact was elicited respecting the state of affairs with the United States.

Spain is fitting out a fleet to demand reparation from Mexico for alleged outrages.

EFFECTS OF THE AUSTRIAN CONCORDAT.—A journal of Mulhouse, the Lion d'Israel gives the following account of an incident which is commented on in severe terms by the Siecle:

A very wealthy Jew, named Pincherlie, inhabits Verona, where his numerous and unostentatious charities procured for him universal esteem. This person possessed an only daughter, who has recently reached her seventh year. On the day when he celebrated this event, he received a letter from the cure of the parish in which he resided, stating that his daughter could no longer continue to live with him, and that she must prepare herself to enter a convent, in order to be brought up in the Catholic religion. The explanation given by the cure for this demand was as follows:

"When your daughter was two years old she was extremely ill; her nurse, who was a Catholic, in order to save her son, baptized her in the room without witnesses. According to the Catholic religion and the Austrian laws, the baptism is perfect and binding, and you have no right, as a Jew, to keep a Catholic child in your house."

Owing to the personal influence of the father, and the present state of political matters in Lombardy, the father and child were permitted to take exile in Turin. A touching scene then occurred. Many persons of high standing in Verona, the workmen and servants of M. Pincherlie, all Catholics, waited upon the bishop, and implored him to allow the father to retain possession of his daughter without being compelled to exile himself. That prelate, giving way to the prayers of the deputation, consented to this request, but on two harsh and unacceptable conditions. The girl might remain in the house of her father until the age of fourteen, when she was to choose between the two religions; the second condition, which rendered the first illusive, was that Catholic priests were to be permitted to instruct her in the hatred of everything that she had been taught from her childhood to love and respect. Will the father accept these conditions? Will he consent to purchase the right of residing in Verona at so dear a price? Can he live under the arm of that savage Austrian law which menaces the father in his holiest affections?

The following are the comments of the Siecle:

If such are the fruits of the concordat concluded between Austria and Rome, this concordat will become the signal of the most terrible misfortunes. Let Austria be aware that she is on the decline which leads nations to their ruin. Her alliance with the two great nations of the west imposes on her duties which she fails to recognize. The time is past when the house of Austria could give to the world the spectacle of the abominations, murders, and spoliations, which accompanied the re-establishment of Catholicism in her States.

The Jew who is to be deprived of his daughter, in the name of Jesus Christ, is in possession of an immense fortune. The anxiety for worldly goods enters at least as much as the anxiety for souls into the minds of the Catholic clergy of Verona. Can France or England, the allies of Austria, permit such attempts? This we do not believe.

POLAND AND SPAIN.—The Paris correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer, writing May 22, says:—

Four o'clock. I resume my pen to announce to you a most gratifying piece of intelligence:

The restoration of the Kingdom of Poland, resolved upon by the Czar, at the recommendation of his Majesty Napoleon III., Emperor of the French.

The joy which this intelligence is calculated to produce, is much lessened by the impression suggested by all recent accounts from Madrid, that a revolution is imminent in Spain.

FROM HAYTI.—Dates from Aux Cayes to 24th ult., announce the insurrection there as not put down The rebels, 6000 strong, were in front of Aux Cayes. Martial law had been declared, and the citizens called upon to take arms against the rebels.

Two or three skirmishes had taken place, and 20 of the insurgents taken prisoners.

All business was suspended, and the stores closed. Coffee scarce.

THE SCRIPTURE DOCTRINE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

BY H. H. DOBNEY,
Baptist Minister, of England.
Fourth Edition.
WITH AN APPENDIX ON
THE STATE OF THE DEAD,
BY JOHN MILTON,
Author of "Paradise Lost."

1 VOL. 12 MO., 310 PAGES. PRICE 75 CENTS.

This is one of the most important works ever issued upon this solemn subject. Clear, forcible, and sometimes eloquent in his language, the author surveys the whole field, and presents his arguments and examines objections with the facility of "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The style is calm and Christian, a rare excellence in a controversial work. The Universalist, the skeptic, and the infidel, will find here that while the truths they hold are admitted in all their force, yet the reasonableness of revelation and the retribution therein revealed cannot be denied. And the believer in the doctrine of the Eternal agony of the multitudes of the Lost, will find that objections to that opinion exist in the word of God, no less serious than those which arise from the calm consideration of the subject in the light of human reason.

Let all obtain and read this work with care, and we shall await with confidence the verdict of the candid and unprejudiced.

The volume is an elegant 12mo., and contains besides the views of the poet Milton, who, with Luther, Tindale, Bishop Law and Archbishop Whately, defends the doctrine of unconsciousness in death.

It will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the price, 75 cents.

For sale at the Crisis office, Boston; P. Richardson, 177 8th Avenue, New York; George T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may perhaps subserve the cause of humanity to present his advertisement to the public. Poetry.

For the Crisis.

We Long too See the Lord.

BY E. M. PHETTEPLACE.

Come Jesus, come and reign;
Bring back to earth again,
All her Eden bowers.
O, come thou from above,
Bring to us peace and love,
And celestial flowers.

O, come Thou on the cloud,
With songs of triumph loud.
O, bring salvation
From pain, and sin, and care.
O, change our feeble prayer
To exultation.

O! let the trumpet sound,
And bring up from the ground
The loved there sleeping.
Hasten the time along,
When we shall swell the song,
Instead of weeping.

For here we mourn and sigh,
And raise our voices high,
While tears are falling;
But soon thy voice we'll hear
In accents loud and clear,
Thy children calling.

We long to see him come,
To take his children home.
O happy morning!
We ever will endure,
For His promise is sure,
Although we've scorning.

When the earth is restored,
And God by all adored
In bright glory reigns;
Then we'll rejoice and sing,
And praise for aye our King,
On fair Eden's plains.

Scituate, May 12, '56.

Be Earnest.

Be earnest—struggle on and up,
The rugged hill of life;
Drink to the dregs the brimming cup,
Of earnest toil and strife.

Rouse—dream not all thy hours away,
Labor, and toil, and strive;
This is no world for idle play,
A reckoning must arrive.

Be earnest, gird thine armor on,
Look not at praise of men;
Look for the praise of only one,
The Great and Holy Lamb.

Be earnest—wake the sluggish soul,
Rouse for the noble fight;
Give up thy heart; yea give the whole,
And work, with all thy might.

Rest not—place high aloft thy mark,
Place it in Heaven above,
Then aim; perhaps the way'll seem dark,
The light will come—God's love.

Be earnest—stop not, no delay—
Act in the present hour;
Yes, act; and acting, humbly pray,
That God would give the power.

Be earnest—though thy labor seem
To thee, to come to nought;
Work on—ere long a heavenly gleam
Will show what thou hast wrought.

Be earnest—the great Master toiled,
And prayed, and why not we?
Be earnest in his service, then,
That like Him thou mayst be.

And when at last thy toil is o'er,
And He in glory come,
Thoul't hear the welcome message said,
"Servant, thou hast well done."

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. Allard.

Bro. Merriam:—We all value the Crisis very much. There is to me a thrilling interest in many things that you notice.

One thing is very certain, the time has not yet come, when "the watchmen see eye to eye," but it certainly will come, for all the promises will be fulfilled in a manner worthy of a God. I think they will be literally fulfilled; although there may be some figurative language, yet the reality will exceed the figure.

The promises of the Old Testament are confirmed in the New. Prophecy is promise. 1 John, 3: 8. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."

I think it would be destroying the works of the devil, to restore everything that the devil has ruined. He never ruined the New Heaven and the New Earth; for they have not yet existed. But this world, that was created so fair and good, so perfect that God himself called it not only good, but very good; satan has almost ruined. O how has God's fair creation been marred; he has been dishonored in the work of his hands. This earth was once a paradise, and it will be again in every particular. Every tree, plant, and shrub were perfect; the beasts were gentle, kind, and good—were perfectly obedient. Man was king, godlike, and held open, visible communion with his Maker.

All this must be restored, to have the work of the devil destroyed.

In the times of the restitution, at the second coming of Christ, the earth will be brought back to its first state. The curse will be taken from the earth, from man and from beast. From the earth so that it shall yield an abundance. Springs shall break forth in the desert, and pools in the parched ground. Instead of the thorn shall come forth the fir tree,—instead of the brier, the myrtle. Every thornbush is the effect of the curse,—"Cursed is the ground for thy sake, thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee." Gen. 3: 18.

Ezek. 36: 29. "I will call for the corn and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you. And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field." 35th verse, "This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden."

The animal creation will be restored. I do not see any Bible proof that the beasts will be raised, but they will be restored to their primitive innocence,—will again be subject to man, dwell in their dens and holes in the earth in a natural state.

Isa. 11: 7. "And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den."

God has provided nourishment for every creature, without their tearing each other for food. Isa. 11: 6. "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

Man will be restored, 1st, to soundness of body. Isa. 35: 6. "Then shall the lame man leap as an heart, and the tongue of the dumb sing." Isa. 33: 24. "And the inhabitants shall not say I am sick."

Ex. 23: 25. "I will take sickness away from the midst of thee.

This last is a promise made to Israel when they were brought out of Egypt.

Jer, 16: 14. "It shall no more be said, the Lord liveth that brought the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt," —the events of the second gathering are so much greater.

2d.; To oneness of language.

Isa. 33: 19. "Thou shalt see a fierce people, a people of deeper speech than thou canst perceive, of a stammering tongue, that thou canst not understand."

Zeph. 3: 9. "For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent. From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants even the daughters of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering."

3d. Man shall have a Holy Ghost religion.

Heb. 8: 10. "I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: I will be to them a God and they shall be to me a people. And they shall not teach every man his neighbor and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord; for all shall know Him from the least to the greatest."

Jer. 32: 39. "And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me forever, for the good of them, and of their children after them."

Jer. 3: 14: 18. "I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will give you pastors according to my heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land. At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart."

I know these promises are made to the Jews; But there are no promises made to the Jews, but stand equally good to us. If ye have faith in Christ, "Then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

All christians, and Jews inwardly, will be one in the restitution. Ezek. 34: 23–26. "And I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them and he shall be their shepherd.

And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them; I the Lord have spoken it. And I will make with them a covenant of peace, and I will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods.

And I will make them, and the places round about my hill, a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; There shall be showers of blessings.

And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase."

This dispensation closes up with a time of trouble, such as this world never saw—scenes of blood and carnage.

"The pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the destruction that wasteth at noon day," is all abroad in the earth.

Calamity after calamity, destruction upon destruction comes like an avalanche.

"Perilous times shall come. "The wicked do exceeding wickedly; and because iniquity abounds, the love of many waxes cold.

Wicked seducers are waxing worse and worse. The day of vengeance, and the year of God's redeemed are coupled together in a most fearful manner. "The day of vengeance is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed is come." In the midst of all this wickedness, Christ comes and destroys the wicked, and raises the righteous dead.

In the first place, the righteous living are collected by the angels. David says, "the chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels." "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet." Matt. 24: 31.

Two shall be in the field; two in the mill, one be taken, the other left. The The righteous taken for protection, the wicked left for destruction. The righteous are caught up to meet the Lord in the air, to return to earth with the Lord, after the wicked are destroyed. The righteous are placed on this earth.

Satan is bound a thousand years.

The saints reign with Christ during this time. Rev. 5: 10. "And we shall reign on the earth." Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, shall personally inherit the land, with the martyrs and all the righteous.

Matt. 19: 28. "Ye that have followed me, in the regeneration, (or renovation) when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? Heb. 2: 5. "Unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak."

The world has ever been governed through the ministry of angels; but in the dispensation of the fulness of times, we shall reign with Christ.

Again. There will be an open, tangible, visible communication between heaven and earth. Christ says to Nathaniel, hereafter shall ye see the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man. This remains to be fulfilled.

If it had not been for sin, I don't know but the Lord God would have continued to have walked and talked with man. In the days of Moses the communication was sometimes visible. The Lord Jesus Christ will reign personally on the throne of David. This is the time when the Redeemer's kingdom shall extend from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth—when He shall see of the travail of His soul, and be satisfied. They shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree, with none to make them afraid. Luke, 1: 32–33. "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his Father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." The same kingdom is delivered up to God the Father, at the end of the thousand years.

I Cor. 15: 25. "For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. 25th. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God even the Father, when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power."

It is on this earth, with the curse taken off, that Christ is to reign,—and subdue all things under him. At the end of the thousand years, satan is loosed for a little season, and tempts the people to take the sword to destroy the holy city, when fire comes down out of heaven, and destroys them.

After this "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven." Here is a city described such as this world never saw; its length, breadth and height are equal. Every gate "was of one pearl."

Christ is near to come. The last struggle is just upon us. Heaven and earth will soon witness the scene.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. P. S. W. Deyo.

Bro. Merriam:— While reading the last number of the Crisis, I was so cheered, I thought I would try and pen a few lines for the paper, although I am not in the habit of writing for the press.

First, I must say I am thankful to God, and to you, for sending me the Crisis without any compensation; my prayer is, that the Lord will bless you in your affliction, and in your labors of love.

Although I have not been a firm believer in the time movement, yet I long to see the Lord, and was willing for him to come at any time. I felt fellowship for those that differed with me on that subject, as well as many others.

I am a firm believer that christian character is the only true test of fellowship. I have had a strong belief ever since the prospect of peace in the East, that the peace and safety cry mentioned in 1 Thess. 5: 3, is to be fulfilled at this time. I have believed, and still do, that the Eastern war is the commencement of the "battle of that great day of God Almighty," spoken of in Rev. 16: 14. There may be a short space of peace, yet the elements for the last conflict are not dead or asleep.

The church will still be making progress, so that it may be fitly joined together into one building at the coming of the Just one. I am glad that the subject of church order and the gifts is being considered, and it is my prayer that the matter may be fully settled. I was pleased with the articles of Bro. Burnham, and Wethercell on the gifts.

I wish to say a word about my labors last winter, as many of my friends have not heard from me, or at least, I have not heard from them. I have left my former place of labor, which was Northern Indiana, and Michigan. The prospect seemed good in several places, but I will speak of one six miles South of Michigan city. Indiana; where I had twelve meetings in the fore part of January, when it was so cold that few could come out; but I am informed that the Lord blessed the word that was spoken in weakness; and that since I left, eight have been baptized, and ten have joined the Christian Church.

Brn., I do not feel discouraged, although my exposure in Jan. has disabled me for preaching much since. I have not been able to do much good here, only by lending the Crisis and what few tracts I had been able to get. I found one Sr. of the Methodist church that believes in the life and death doctrine, but has not heard or thought much about the Lord's coming soon. She says she has believed in the sleep of the dead and destruction of the wicked, six years, and that she came to this conclusion by studying the Bible. She thinks that all true christians will yet believe it, and that those opposed will be spiritualists. She is now assisting me in lending tracts to her Brn.

I don't know as I shall stay long in this place, as I talk of going to Iowa as soon as the way opens for me.

Yours in the blessed hope,

Peter S. W. Deyo.

P. S. Bro Morgan:—If you come into Northern Ill. I would like to see you.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. C. E. Gierlow.

Bro. Merriam:—I would like to say a few words through the Crisis in regard to Dr. Decker's pamphlet, which I have received, and read, with much interest.

If chronology be correct, the 70 weeks of Dan. 9, must have commenced in the spring of 445, B. C.; but I somewhat doubt whether the daily sacrifice was restored previous to the 7th month of that year, as no sacrifice is mentioned by Nehemiah previous to that time. If it commenced in the spring, by adding 445 B. C. and 521, A. D. we have 966 for the length of the daily sacrifice. But, as I think, we have no right to more than half of the 445th year, and probably, not more than as much of the last of 521, we can deduct 1 year from this sum, leaving 965. By joining this number to the 1335 of Dan. 12th, we have exactly 2300 for the length of the daily sacrifice and the abomination of desolation. By this calculation all the prophetic periods are made to harmonize. I am surprised that I never before saw the impropriety of extending the 2300 days beyond the 1335.

If I wished to purchase two pieces of cloth, which joined together must be 2300 yards long, should I be consistent to take a measure of that length, and extend it one or two yards beyond the length of the cloth, or, in other words, cut the cloth so much shorter than the measure, and yet say the measure was the length of the cloth? In the '54 arrangement, we carried the 2300 measuring-line beyond the only events it was intended to cover.

But by Bro. Decker's calculation the ends of the periods meet, and all prophecy seems to be in harmony with them. Should time continue much longer this harmony must cease; as we have no other "commandment," no other "daily sacrifice," from which to date the commencement of the periods.

"Well," says one, "what are you going to do, if this time fails? Give up your Bible, and the coming of the Lord?"

No! I will still hold on to both! But will acknowledge that there is a defect in chronology, somewhere, though at present this does not appear possible; for if the periods began prior to B. C. four forty-five, they must have terminated; but as the resurrection has not yet taken place, this cannot be true. If we commence them this side of 445, we cannot (I think) harmonize the 70 weeks with the history of our Savior.

"But," says one, "how do you know that the abomination of desolation Dan. 12, is the transgression of desolation of Dan. 8th?"

I answer, since all Adventists and many others admit that both of these terms apply to the Roman power, it does not seem to be worth while to argue this point; for the "abomination of desolation," or papal form of that government, is not any less "the transgression of desolation," than the preceding, or pagan form, inasmuch as it combines hypocrisy with transgression.

I never knew until three days ago, that the three chains of prophecy; viz., Dan. 8th and 9th, and that of the 12th chaps., could be exactly fitted into each other, as they seem to be by the present arrangement. I presume that some others are also ignorant of this fact; especially those who have recently subscribed for the Crisis, and commenced to investigate this important subject. For the benefit of such I have penned this article, hoping thereby to impart to them somewhat of the joy I experienced upon making this discovery.

With present light, I see no possibility of avoiding Bro. Decker's conclusion. It is the strongest, and best sustained "time" argument I have ever seen, particularly that part relating to the image of the beast, and the 2300 days. Truly, "Thy Word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path;" and it "shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day."

Dear Brn. and Srs., I have not had the privilege of hearing one advent sermon since I came to this place, bnt I am trying to keep up with you in the christian's narrow path. At times, I am very thirsty, and instead of the little streams, I have to drink from the fountain of eternal truth; and I find myself strengthened and invigorated thereby, growing in grace, in wisdom, in knowledge and in the love of our Lord Jesus Christ. At the North, I was too much inclined to lean upon those of like precious faith, but now I have to lean upon God. 'Tis well! I find Him to be abundantly able to sustain and comfort me, under all circumstances, and I doubt not, if I am faithful to the end, He will bring me safe into His everlasting Kingdom,—

"When the long dark night of time is past,
And the light of eternity's come at last;
When the weary saint no more shall roam,
But dwell in a sunny, peaceful home."

We have now arrived at a period in the fulfilment of prophecy, where we may look with confidence for the commencement of the plagues on the apostate Church of Rome. "For she saith in her heart I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." Is she not saying this now, having been married to the (so called) mightiest monarch of Europe, who on his part has recently acknowledged, and ratified that infamous union by appointing the Pope to be god-father of his child. "Therefore, shall her plagues come in one day, death, mourning, and famine, and she shall be utterly burned with fire, for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Do we see any signs of the accomplishment of this prediction? Listen to the news that has begun to reach us from across the ocean, indicative of a speedy revolution in the governments of Italy. Tidings have already been communicated from there of a nature calculated to cheer the heart of the way-worn pilgrim, and to assure him that his warfare is well nigh finished, and that he is nearing his beloved home.

God grant that we may soon be gathered with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, into the promised land, where—

"Sickness, sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more!"

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. H. Beach.

Bro. Merriam:—It is with pleasure that I read the Crisis, and I hope that he who sends it me, will be richly rewarded. It is most twenty-five years since I first gave my heart to God, and united with the M. E. Church. Some five or six years ago, Bro. M. Grant and Bro. Matthewson came to Newfield and preached the Word. The Bible became a new book to me, and the Lord revived his work gloriously; seventy or more were baptized. When the time was preached, I believed it, and to day, I believe the children are almost home. We have had no preaching in Newfield for a number of weeks.

I hope the Lord will send some one here to stir us up. Pray for us, Brn., that we may hail the day with joy when Jesus comes. I want a home in his kingdom.

Your Bro. expecting eternal life, when the kingdom is set up. H. Beach.

Winchester Centre, May 4, '56.

P. S. I have been to a funeral to-day, and the Elder took his text in Job 14: 1–12. He said that the giving up of the ghost, was giving up the soul, and undertook to tell where he the soul was; and now if you, or some other Bro. will tell us through the Crisis what the giving up of the Ghost is, you will oblige one seeking for the truth. H. B.

For the Children.

The Bible.

This little Book I had rather own,
Than all the gold and gems,
That e'er in monarchs coffers shone—
Than all their diadems.

Nay, were the seas one chrysolite,
The earth a golden ball,
And diamonds all the stars of night,
This Book were worth them all!

Shutting the Door.

"Don't look so cross, Edward, when I call you back to shut the door; grandmother feels the cold wintry wind; and, besides, you have got to spend all your life shutting the doors, and might as well begin now."

"Do forgive me, grandmother. I ought to be ashamed to cross you. But what do you mean? I am going to college, and then I am going to be a lawyer."

"Well, admitting all that, I imagine Squire Edward C——, will have a good many doors to shut, if he ever makes much of a man."

"What kind of doors? Do tell me, grandmother."

"Sit down a minute, and I will give you a list."

"In the first place, the doors of your ears must be closed against bad language and evil counsel of the boys and young men you will meet with at school and college, or you will be undone. Let them once get possession of that door, and I would not give much for Edward C——'s future prospects.

"The door of your eyes, too, must be shut against bad books, idle novels, and low, wicked newspapers, or your studies will be neglected, and you will grow up a useless, ignorant man; you will have to close them sometimes against the fine things exposed for sale in the shop windows, or you will never learn to save your money, or have any left to give away.

"The door of your lips will need especial care, for they guard an unruly member, which makes great use of the bad company let in at the doors of the eyes and ears. The door is very apt to blow open; and if not constantly watched, will let out angry, trifling, or vulgar words. It will backbite, sometimes worse than the winter's wind, if it is left open too long. I would advise you to keep it shut much of the time, till you have laid up a store of knowledge, or at least till you have something valuable to say.

"The door of your heart must be well shut against temptation, for conscience, the door-keeper, grows very indifferent if you disregard his call—and sometimes drops asleep at his post, and when you may think you are doing very well, you are fast going down to ruin.

"If you carefully guard the outside doors of the eyes, ears and lips, you will keep out many cold blasts of sin, which get in before you think.

"This 'shutting doors,' you see, Eddy, will be a serious business; one on which your well-doing in this life and the next, depends."

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

"Gift of the Holy Ghost."

BY W. SHELDON.

Curious notions have recently obtained in relation to the "Holy Ghost," or "Holy Spirit," (which imports the same, as the two phrases are used interchangeably in the Scriptures, and are also the same, verbatim, in the original Greek.) It is maintained by some mistaken theologians that the Holy Ghost is not now to be imparted to believers, alleging as a reason, that the baptism of the Holy Ghost was invariably followed by signs, and speaking with tongues, which is not now witnessed. Now if the requirement to be baptized is still binding, then it is positive that the Holy Ghost is to be enjoyed by christians now, as the requirement to be baptized and the promise of the Holy Ghost, are inseparably connected; hence, if this requirement is yet binding, the promise is still good.

Said Peter, "Be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off; even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts ii. 38, 39. Here the promise of the Holy Ghost runs parallel with the requirement of baptism. Show me where the former ends, and by the same rule I will show you where the latter ends!

1. It is objected that the holy Ghost is not here promised till after baptism. Well, this is no proof that it cannot be enjoyed before baptism. Other passages prove it can be, and has been, both previously and subsequently; but if it can be received, even after baptism, it proves our point: and if it can be enjoyed subsequent to baptism without being accompanied by the various primitive gifts, why repudiate the "gift of the Holy Ghost" before baptism, upon the plea that the signs do not follow, and thus give demonstration of its reception? Do the gifts of prophecy, &c., follow even those who are baptized?

2. It is objected that the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and the gift of the Holy Ghost are not the same—that the miracles only accompanied the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and not the gift. This is a gross blunder. The same signs that were witnessed under the baptism of the Holy Ghost, were also witnessed under the gift of the Holy Ghost. Acts x. 45, 46: "Because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. For they heard them speak with tongues," &c. There is no distinction to be made between the two phrases—they import the same. The gift of the Holy Ghost is co-extensive with baptism; hence advocates of baptism should not oppose the work of the Holy Ghost in our day, upon the plea that the gift to work miracles does not follow, unless they concede the invalidity of their baptism, which they make a pre-requisite to its reception, when they admit its reception in any sense!

3. It is often stated that the only gift of the Holy Ghost which we can receive is in the Bible—its work, or mission having been confined to the apostolic age. We concede the fact that this is not an age of miracles, the end for which they were wrought having been subserved, but we do boldly claim that the Spirit of God, or the Holy Ghost, distinct from the Bible, should be possessed by Christians; otherwise, our friends would make baptism a pre-requisite to understanding the gospel, or Bible, (which they conceive to be the gift of the Holy Ghost,) and at the same time maintain that a man is unfit for baptism till he does understand the things concerning the kingdom—that he must understand the Bible, in order to believe! "How much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit (Holy Ghost) to them that ask him." Luke xi. 13.

Must we pray for that which is in the Bible, and yet be told that it can only be received by baptism, and hence no necessity for it after baptism?

"The fruit of the Spirit (Holy Ghost) is love, joy, peace," &c. Gal. v. 22.

Can we expect the fruit of that which has never been planted?

"If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii. 11.

"Praying in the Holy Ghost." Jude 20.

Let us not abandon a truth because it has been abused by others.

The Two Covenants.

BY ELD. J. HEMMENWAY.

No. II.

Gal. 4: 24, "Which things are an allegory, for these are the two covenants, the one from Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage which is Agar."

We learn by the apostle's language, that the bond-woman and her son represent the covenant from Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. Having examined the covenant from Mount Sinai, we learned that it was temporal, and was added to the promise, until the seed should come to whom the promise was made. The promise was made to the son of the free-woman, hence the son of the bond-woman cannot be heir with the son of the free. Hager and her son represent the covenant from Mount Sinai, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children—the Jews.

Sarah and her son represents the new covenant, and answereth to the Jerusalem which is above, which is free, and the mother of us all. What saith the scripture?

Ans. "Cast out the bond-woman and her son; for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman."

By this we learn that the Jews as literal descendants of Abraham, as such, have no promise under the old covenant, by which they can become heirs to the inheritance promised to Abraham through his seed,—Isaac. All the land that was promised the Jews was the land of Canaan, and that was promised in the covenant from Mount Sinai; and all prophecy relative to the Jews possessing the land of Canaan, ends with the old covenant; and as the Jews did not comply with the terms of the covenant before it ended, there is no promise (that is valid) of their return to the land, either in this age or the age to come, unless it can be found in the new covenant.

The Scripture saith, "the son of the bond-woman (old covenant) shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman," Gal. 4: 30. "For the promise that he should be heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed through the law, (or old covenant) but through the righteousness of faith; for if they which are of the law, (or covenant from Mount Sinai) be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect." Rom. 4: 13, 14. The only way in which the Jews could be saved under the law, was to exercise faith in the promise of a seed to come which was Christ. Gal. 3: 11. "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God it is evident; for the just shall live by faith; and the law is not faith," hence the Jew cannot be saved without faith in the promised seed, and we find no promise or prophecy either in the old or new covenant, that the Jews as a nation will repent, and return after the new covenant is made.

Now let us find the new covenant, its promises, and requirements. Paul, in Heb. 7th and 8th chapters, speaking upon the subject of Christ as being made a priest after the order of Melchizedec, and contrasting it with the Levitical priesthood, says: "But now hath he (Christ) obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, established upon better promises." Here the apostle gives us to understand that Christ was then acting as the mediator of a new covenant, and then tell us, that "if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second;" and the Lord finding fault with them, saith —"Behold the days come that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand, to lead them out of Egypt." Heb. 8: 9. Here we are informed by Paul that the covenant which was established upon better promises, is not according to the old one. In the 10th and 11th verses, we are told what the covenant is: "For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel, after those days, saith the Lord. I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts, * * * and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother. saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me from the least to the greatest." The old covenant was on tables of stone, but this is on the heart. Under the Jewish dispensation the people must go to Jerusalem to hear the law read, but under the new, the law is in the heart. Under the old covenant when one entered the church, he must be taught to know the Lord, but under the new, they must know the Lord before they enter the church of God. Hence all that have the law written on the heart, know the Lord from the least to the greatest.

Moses dedicated the old covenant, and Jesus the new. Moses was the mediator of the old, Jesus is the mediator of the new. By reading Matt. 5: 1–13, we find what is promised in the new covenant. "Blessed are the poor in Spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Here the poor, that have the spirit, have the promise of the kingdom of Heaven, from the fact that if they have the spirit, they are Christ's, and if Christ's, they are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise that was made to Abraham, which was, that he and his seed should have the world, or land under the whole heaven for an everlasting possession. The qualification here required, is to have the Spirit.

Again: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Here the characteristic is meekness; and thus we see that the new covenant gives a reward to those that possess the spirit of Christ; if we have that, we shall be meek, merciful, pure, and PEACEMAKERS. From the 20th verse of the 5th chap. to the 13th verse of the 7th chap., we have the law given, by which we must be governed in order to form a character that will be acceptable to the Lord. From verse 21 to 27, we have the rule by which we are to be governed, if our brother hath ought against us. From verse 27 to 33, we have a law in regard to lust, &c.: 33d to 38th, the law relative to oaths; 38 to 43, on resisting evil, going to law, &c.; 43 to 48, concerning our enemies. Chap. 6 presents the law for giving alms, prayer and forgiveness, fasting, laying up of treasures and trusting in God; chap. 7, in regard to judging and how we should deal with our fellow men; and then we are told the consequences that will follow if we hear these sayings and do them not.

In the above we are taught to act upon principles that are contrary to the nature of the natural man. The principle upon which this law is based, is LOVE, and all that have the law written on their hearts are governed by this principle. No "eye for eye or tooth for tooth," in this covenant, but, it is good for evil in all cases.

The ordinances of this covenant are baptism and the Lord's Supper; showing our faith and expectation of seeing our Lord come again and raise the dead, and then the promises of the covenant will be fulfilled. It is evident that we are living under the new covenant from the Apostle's testimony in regard to Christ, who is made priest, or mediator; and if the new covenant is made, the law is written on the hearts of those that have entered into the covenant with the Lord. Paul teaches thus in 2 Cor. 3: 3, "Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart." Any that have the law written on the heart by the spirit of God, certainly must know the Lord; and when a person is converted to the Lord, he enters into the covenant, and the Lord writes it on his heart, and when the new covenant dispensation ends, then the Lord bestows the things promised in the covenant.

Now, Brethren, let us be governed by the law of the new covenant, and then we shall be FREE—free from envy, strife and every evil work; and when our great High Priest comes, we shall be saved in the promised land. O Lord, hasten the time.

For the Crisis.

What is Truth?

No I.

"This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines, the commandments of men." Matt. 15: 8, 9.

When the Savior was on the earth, and quoted these words of the Prophet Isaiah, the Jewish people were very religious, very zealous for their traditions, as Paul said of them:—"For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God but not according to knowledge." They esteemed themselves, as the favored of God above all people, and indeed they had some reason so to think, for to them were committed the "oracles of God." God chose that nation from among the nations of the earth, that his power and glory might be manifested, and the laws of his government revealed to the children of men. God gave to Moses, the servant of God, his law, written on two tables of stone, with his own finger.

In that law was comprehended all the obligations mankind were under, both toward God, and one another. On the one table was written the laws expressive of obligations to God, and on the other, of obligations to men.

The sum of these commands is thus expressed by Christ,—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength; and thy neighbor as thyself."

On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. All the word of God is founded on these "ten commandments" called the moral law. in distinction from the ceremonial, which was an appendage to it, till the promised seed should come. While under the ministration of condemnation, the Jews corrupted the law of God, by introducing many traditions, which, in effect made void the law of God. They even had more regard for them than for the law itself.

Thus the Savior, in the chap. in which our text is found, reproves the Scribes and Pharisees, for transgressing the commandment of God, by their tradition. As they complained of the disciples for violating their tradition, by eating with unwashen hands; the Savior refers them to a command of God, which they had made of none effect by their tradition. He calls them hypocrites, and quotes the words of our text, applying it to them, and concludes by saying,—"Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. Let them alone; they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."

In comparing the state of things at the present time with that in the time of the Savior, we find many points of similarity. We find a vast majority of professed Christendom, paying more regard to the commands and institutions of men, than to the truth of God.

The prophet speaks of a time when darkness should cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; and if the prophecy would apply in the time of our Savior, it is not altogether inapplicable at the present time.

But why this darkness? Because the Word of God has been laid aside for tradition. They have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, and broken the everlasting covenant.

As David says in the 119th Ps.,—"It is time for thee, Lord, to work; for they have made void thy law. How have they done it? By substituting their traditions instead of it. Truth has been laid aside for error—darkness has been chosen for light. They chose darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. They have heaped to themselves teachers having itching ears; have turned away their ears from the truth; and are turned unto fables.

"What is truth?" This is an important question at this present time, when there are such a multitude of views.

Says the Savior,—"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." David says—"Thy law is the truth." We find professed Christians advocating many conflicting views on Scripture doctrine. They cannot all be right; they may many of them be wrong. If their fear toward God is taught by the precept of men, we know it is wrong.

What do they teach? They teach that man is possessed of an immortal soul, or spirit, which lives after the death of the body, either in happiness or misery; that the souls of the righteous fly away beyond the bounds of time and space, to some unknown region called the "spirit land," where they sing praise to God forever. That the souls of the wicked go down to the chambers of hell, a symbolic lake of fire and brimstone, and are there tormented forever and ever. They teach that the coming of the Lord is a spiritual coming; that he comes at death; that he came at the destruction of Jerusalem: that the conversion of the world is the coming of Christ. Some teach that he will come personally at the end of the world, which will not be till after the millennium, at least 1,000 years in the future, if not 360,000. They teach that the world is in its youth, just coming to the state of manhood; that it is to progress in knowledge and holiness till all the world is full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters fill the sea. They have also changed the ordinance of the Lord Jesus Christ—to be baptized; substituting sprinkling of infants and adults, for the baptism of believers.

If any of these views are assailed by an individual, they brand him as an heretic; and if he belongs to any of their bodies, and embraces views conflicting with their own, they say, "this the Church condemn as fundamentally erroneous, and semi-infidel, and cannot tolerate in any of her members;" then "by a solemn vote" they cause his "name to be erased from the roll of her members."

"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Is. 8: 20. We will look at these opinions in the light of the word of God.

"What is man?" Is he mortal or immortal? Tradition says, man is immortal! "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Gen. 2: 7. Nothing said of his being an immortal one.

Again: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the ground; for out of it was thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." 3: 19. Nothing said of his soul flying away from his body, beyond the bounds of time and space; but on the contrary, he returns to the ground.

Again: "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4. "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor, and glory forever." "Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light," &c. 1 Tim. 1: 17. 6: 16.

Again, Paul says:—"Who (God) will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." What are men exhorted to seek for? Glory, honor, and immortality. If they possessed it, would they seek it? Nay. When shall they obtain it? When they die? No! no! "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ." Rom. 2: 16. In 1 Cor. 15: 50–58, we learn that immortality is put on by the saints at the sounding of the last trump; that then death will be swallowed up in victory; that then the grave will loose its victory, and the song of triumph will be sung, "O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory!"

When is it? At the resurrection, when the Lord comes from heaven, as saith the apostle in 1 Thess. 4: 16. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so be forever with the Lord." Christ says—"I am the way and the truth and the LIFE; and no man cometh to the Father but by me." The Father has life in himself, and has given to the son to have life in himself; that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father should give him. Because the Savior taught the Jews that they must come to him for life, or perish, they turned away from him. I am that bread of life; he that eateth me, even he shall live by me. Except ye eat the flesh and drink the blood of the son of man, ye have no life in you. He that believeth in me, hath everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day.

When will the saints be with Christ? Tradition says,—When they die. "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me." John 17: 24. "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am ye may be also." John 14: 2–3.

Did he go away? "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again, I leave the world and go to the Father." John 16: 28. "And he led them out as far as to Bethany. And he lifted up his hands and blessed them; and it came to pass that while he blest them, he was taken from them, and carried up into heaven." "And when he had spoken these things while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said,—Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." He (Christ) went away to his Father's house; Stephen had a vision of him at his Father's right hand. He will come again. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear [illegible] in glory." "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." These are plain texts of Scripture, showing us that we are not to be with Christ, till he comes again.

Inferences may be drawn from some passages to the contrary; but it is not easy for faith to rest on inference, when we have what is plain—unequivocal.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." How much better then, is truth than tradition.

To be Continued.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 25, 1856.

Explanation.

It may be noticed that two articles in the last paper are repeated in this—and by the way we think they will bear a second reading; but the reason for their repetition is this:—Some have not had the privilege of reading them once.

On account of a mistake of the pressman, our papers fell short last week about two hundred. We did not discover the error until the type for the outside was partly distributed, but we succeeded in getting the inside printed and sent it to those who had not received a perfect copy, with a promise that they should have the continued articles in this paper.

We trust the like will not happen again.

Baptism.

No. IV.

Having spoken of the duty, subject, and mode of baptism; in this, our last, we purpose to notice its object or signification—or in other words, inquire WHY we should be baptized.

We answer,—to show our faith in the burial and RESURRECTION of Christ, and that our ONLY hope of a future existence, should we die, is in the resurrection of the dead.

PROOF.

Col. 2: 12, "BURIED with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the DEAD."

Here we are taught,—

1. That we are BURIED with Christ.
2. It is a burial by BAPTISM.
3. We rise again, and the whole operation expsesses our faith in the fact that God raised him from the DEAD.

Hence Paul says in 1 Cor. 15: 29, where he is endeavoring to prove not only resurrection from the dead, but that they have already shown their faith in such an event; says—"Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"

When we admit that baptism is a type of the resurrection, then, this passage that has caused so much controvery, is very plain.

The simple point is this:—it the dead rise not, what is the meaning of your baptism?

Christ had been dead, as Paul declares, but was then alive, but if he had not risen, then why be baptized?

Says Theodoret, one of the Greek fathers—"He who undergoes baptism is therein buried with his Lord, that having partaken in his death he may become partaker in his resurrection also."

When we consider that immersion is the only mode of baptism, and that the only hope of a future existence of those who die, is in a literal resurrection of the material organism, then we can see the importance of baptism, which expresses such a faith.

When we are buried beneath the yielding wave in baptism, our future life in this world, depends upon our being raised out of the water; so, when we are laid in the grave, our future existence in the world to come, is dependent on a resurrection of the dead.

This faith we show by our baptism.

Says Paul in Rom. 6: 3–5, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his DEATH? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

We think all may see that baptism is intimately connected with the resurrection.

We see no way by which it is so, unless it be employed as a type. This we believe to be the truth. Here we might draw another strong argument, showing that baptism was not nailed to the cross, as some have claimed, but on the contrary continues to the end of this dispensation. The point is this:—a type is in force till the coming of the antitype.

It is CERTAIN that the resurrection of Christ was not the final antitype of baptism, because he enjoined it after he rose from the dead; hence this ordinance must continue in force, until the last believer has obeyed, or observed this rite; or till we come to the great antitype—the resurrection of the dead.

We think no one can be baptized understandingly, who does not place their only hope of a future existence, either in being translated at the coming of the Lord, or, in the literal resurrection of the dead.

We have now endeavored to answer our Sr's. inquiry, by showing—

1. That baptism is a Christian duty.
2. That believers are the only proper subjects.
3. That IMMERSION is the ONLY Bible mode.
4. That baptism is a type of the resurrection of the dead.

Discussion.

"The discussion at the Lowell Street Chapel, reached a very satisfactory termination, on Monday evening last. Evidences from the Bible, showing the continued existence and ability to communicate, of those who have passed from the earth-life, in the most clear and positive light, were presented on the Spiritualist side. Scarce an attempt was made, on the contrary part, to invalidate any portion of these testimonies; but the time was spent in citing passages which apparently teach an opposite doctrine. As the existence of such conflicting passages had not been denied, and as the Spiritualist side did not assume the infallibility and consistency of the Bible, these did not meet the case. At length 'the brethren' who had invited the discussion and opened their Chapel for it, came to the very discreet conclusion that further discussion was 'unprofitable,' and introduced and carried a motion to adjourn sine die! Whether they will 'live to fight another day' remains to be seen. The debate had continued some six evenings, and on the Spiritualist side was very ably conducted by Mr. PIKE, Mr. EDSON, Dr. GARDNER, and others. On the opposite, Elder GRANT, the minister of the society meeting in the Chapel, and a very ingenious, though courteous, conscientious, and fair-minded disputant (save that his mental optics seem a little awry with his theological notions,) was the chief speaker. We trust that at least an opening was made for the admission of 'more light' into some very dark minds."

The above is copied from the New England Spiritualist whose able editor, MR. NEWTON, was one engaged in the discussion.

Several of the leading spiritualists freely admitted that modern spiritualism could not be sustained by the Bible, while others thought differently. They endeavored to show that angels are the spirits of disembodied men, but we found the Bible declaring that man was made a little LOWER than the angels, but at the resurrection is to be made equal.

If angels are the spirits of dead men, then it follows, that there were no angels till some men died, and if men had never died, then there could have been no angels.

With this view we failed to see how man could be made a little lower than the angels, unless angels existed first.

One of the prominent spiritualists remarked to me the last evening, at the close of the debate, "Your people have gained ground by this discussion;" and he was free to state that the Bible was against them. An effort was made to prove that the resurrection takes place at death, but the writer failed to see any success.

We called repeatedly for ONE plain passage from the Bible to show that angels are the spirits of men, but we called in vain. We urged our spiritualist friends to give ONE single portion of Scripture, that clearly teaches that man is immortal, or that any part of him is alive between death and the resurrection.

We confess that our "mental optics" were so "awry" that we failed to see that our request was met by our opponents, consequently we agreed with them, "that further discussion was unprofitable."

We say in conclusion as said Mr. Newton at the close of his article,—"We trust that at least an opening was made for the admission of 'more light' into some dark minds."

New Bedford.

The Church in New Bedford are evidently growing in grace. Their social meetings are becoming more and more interesting; their songs and prayers more earnest and heartfelt, while the big tear drops moisten the eyes of the old soldier of the cross.

The work of a revival seems to be already begun, as is evidenced from the heartfelt confessions from those who have not lived up to the requirements of the Bible.

During all the trials of the last twelve years, in which time many societies have been divided and sub-divided, in New Bedford, the adversary has never been able to drive a dividing wedge.

They have learned the happy way of serving the Lord together, though they may honestly differ in opinion.

They are willing that Christian character should be the test of fellowship, rather than some doubtful point in theology. Would that others might copy the example.

There are some of the Lord's true followers in New Bedford, who love to sacrifice for the good of their fellow-men.

They have an interesting Sunday school besides being active in the weekly distribution of tracts among the citizens of the Palace-city.

They have a pleasant house for worship, and seem to spare no pains to make the Christian pilgrim feel at home when he comes among them. We love to visit them in New Bedford and Fairhaven. May the peace of God abide on them.

We were much interested last evening in the remarks of a Baptist minister, who was present for the first time. He has labored extensively in several States, and seen thousands seeking the Lord, but for the last six or seven years, he had not known what course to take. He was anxious to find a holy people, who were willing to have God work in his own way, instead of trying to do everything by man's wisdom, and human machinery.

He felt satisfied that a large number of popular ministers, instead of aiding, only stood in the way of the spread of pure religion. He remarked that he fully believed that the Lord would come literally, that the earth would be the saint's home, and that we are very near the great day of the Lord.

He rejoiced that he had found those who believed these things, and who looked at the state of the world and church in the same light as himself. He had felt fettered and hand-cuffed where he had been, and knew not what to do.

We are thankful, that the Lord is opening the eyes of some to see the true state of things in which we are living. May "God speed the right."—ED.

New Bedford, June 23, '56.

Notice.

We would say to those who took the Prophetic Messenger, and have received the Crisis in its place for the last fourteen weeks, that their subscription for the Messenger expires with this number of the Crisis.

Bro. Morgan desired us to relieve him of his burden, and furnish his subscribers with the Crisis until they had received the amount of their subscription for the Messenger, so that they should not be wronged by its discontinuance; this we have done without any compensation thus far, excepting a few who have already forwarded money to renew their subscription for the Crisis.

We hope that none of those who have received the Crisis in the place of the Messenger, will cut our acquaintance. We cheerfully relieved Bro. Morgan of his burden, expecting, that when the time came to speak, that we should find his patrons, our patrons.

Unless this should be the case, of course we must suffer considerable loss.

If there are any who do not wish the paper, we trust they will notify us immediately.

We know, and feel that these are hard times, and at this season, especially, and for this reason, we hope our Brn. feel like lending a helping hand, and thus "our mutual burden bear."

We trust we shall not be disappointed in our expectations.

Comfort.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, it affords us joy to see the "old debt" vanishing away before your benevolence, like a snow bank in the presence of a June sun. We are satisfied that ere long there will not be a trace of it left.

For the Crisis.

The Rural Beauty of the Kingdom.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Who that possesses a glowing, lively, active, observing mind, does not love rural beauty? Who does not love to stand upon the top of some lofty mountain, and look long and eagerly around, and mentally drink in the varied beauty of fields, groves, rivers, brooks, ponds, lakes, valleys, orchards, pastures, plains and hills? Who does not love to stroll, in sunshiny, dewy morn, along the bank of some deep, rolling river, and listen to the subdued voice of the sweeping tide, and the sweet warbling of the lively birds in the foliage that skirts its meandering course, and inhale the balmy, fragrant atmosphere that broods its shores and waters? Who does not delight to walk the fertile valley, when the flowers laugh in beauteous glee, and flitting insects in glittering livery sport in the mellow light? Who takes no pleasure in passing amidst rich, glowing fields of waving grain, that almost intelligently seem to invite the sickle and the appetite? What person does not become quite lost in the enchantment of the vision of various tinted fruits, depending from the well laden trees, and shrubs that adorn the face of fields, gardens, and the open pastures?

Everything here is, indeed, "beautiful in its time;" even though it be sadly marred with "the curse." How gracefully are the thousands of cattle spread upon the hills! How lovely are the numerous flocks of sheep scattered on the multitude of the pastures, and the "lambs" feeding "after their manner!" How interesting is the course of the winding, babbling brook, as it finds its way among the hills, and the leaping of the fountains, as they throw up their clear waters in the meadows, and among the rocks!

With what pleasure do we behold the opening loveliness of the blushing rose, and look upon the delicate hues of the sweet-scented lily! And yet in her best estate at present, Rural Nature shows but a feeble portion of her beauty. She mingles her enchanting songs, with dismal groans—her sweetest smiles are bathed with constant tears—her garments of attractive beauty she winds with melancholy changes of mourning weeds—on promising beds of glowing health, she sorely sickens—and amidst an almost endless variety of teeming life, she makes her grave. And yet we love her, court her, praise her and enjoy her. But her perfection, at length, will surely come. Her God himself will undertake to deck her in her best attire.

She shall again put on her primal robes, and wear her more than Eden diadem.

Her mountains, in peaceful sublimity, shall tower toward the heavens, clothed with eternal verdure, and bathed with an atmosphere as salubrious as that which angels breathe. Her hills shall quietly invite the creeping vine, and flourishing herb in undecaying, and undying growth, which the saintly hand shall train, and the redeemed eye shall bless. Her fields shall be spread abroad with sweet, unfading flowers, and luxurious, springing grass which again shall never wither before the the desolating drought of burning summer. Her pleasant valleys shall smile in immortal loveliness, as decked in everlasting beauty they invite the musical echoes of the songsters of the air. Her extensive groves—the box, the pine, the fir-tree, growing in changeless symmetry, the mighty cedars of Lebanon, and all the trees of the field shall lift up thankfully their unmarred branches to the Lord, and joyfully receive the embrace of the healthy breezes, as they playfully sweep along. Her majestic rivers shall ceaselessly roll their pellucid waters amidst enrapturing landscapes, bordered with sparkling glory, deliciously inviting the happy loiterers on their banks to bathe in their mirror-like bosoms.

Her pastures shall be covered with grateful and ever satisfied flocks, and herds, fearlessly mingling with harmless lions, sprightly leopards, and all the wonderful beasts of the wilderness. Infant hands, having passed the promised change, shall lead, with playful familiarity, the tiger on the plain, and the larger youth delightedly toy with the gliding serpent, in safety. The sunlight of heaven shall be seven times augmented, and the silvery moonbeams glow like present sunlight. Angels, with swelling songs of gladness, shall walk in unembarrassed association with the elect millions redeemed, as the Lamb shall lead them to fountains of living water, and respond the Amen of their immortal anthem! "There no tears shall ever fall, or heart be sad; there the glory is for all, and all" shall be forever "glad."

Hail scenes of music, of light, of joy, of love, of rest, of peace, of smiles, of purity, of life, of health, of knowledge, of beauty, of IMMORTALITY!!

A Popular Error.

BRO. GRANT:—I send you for publication a summary of the evil consequences of the preaching, and belief of that popular doctrine of going to Heaven at death, as extracted from a very excellent work entitled,—"Debate on the State of the Dead," between Thomas P. Connelly and Dr. Field. The Dr. proceeds to say, (and justly so)—

The doctrine advocated by him (Connelly) is essentially the same as that preached by the serpent in the garden of Eden,—"Thou shalt not surely die." It was productive of the most disastrous consequences then, and ever since it has conflicted with the word of God, and operated injuriously on the best interests of mankind. The following are some of its evil consequences:

1. It involves in mystery and confusion the word of God, contradicts the Mosaic account of creation and of the fall of man, necessitates a mode of interpretation, which if universally adopted would unsettle every doctrine of the Bible.

2. It makes skeptics and infidels of many intelligent men, who are unable to reconcile the laws of nature, and the deductions of reason, with what are declared to be the doctrines of revelation, and, therefore, they reject the Bible altogether.

3. It destroys the fundamental doctrine of the Bible—the resurrection of the dead, and substitutes for it, the comparatively inglorious doctrine of a re-construction of an almost superfluous body, thus depriving the resurrection of all its importance and glory.

4. It causes some to believe that at death, their souls or spirits are clothed in a sort of ethereal or spiritual body, and thus practically to believe that the resurrection is past already.

5. It gives rise to the conclusion, that if the essential and living part of man—the soul, never dies, then the resurrection of dead men to life is a contradiction.

6. It is the stronghold of Restorationism, and Universalisms and Swedenborgianism.

7. It affords the critic support for the invocation of saints, purgatory, prayers for the dead, and of many of the superstitions of popery.

8. The popular delusion about apparitions, nursery tales about ghosts, and the spirit-rapping delusion rest on this doctrine.

9. It causes the atonement and mission of Christ to be misunderstood, undervalues his death and the penalty of sin.

10. It deprives Christ of the honor of of dispensing immortality in his mediatorial character.

11. It makes death a savior, and the sole instrumental cause of our first personal introduction to God, and to heaven; thereby depriving our blessed Lord, who is the resurrection and the life, of this honor.

12. It supersedes the necessity for the coming of Christ and a general judgment, and deprives these events of all their importance and solemnity.

13. It is one of the main causes of the inefficiency of the gospel. The wicked are taught to believe that they are naturally and necessarily immortal; from which they consequently infer that they will somehow or other escape the penalty of the divine law, as it is popularly understood, and live forever in a condition no worse than the present.

I have thus (affirms the Dr.) summed up some of the effects of the doctrine of the propoisiton, (of T. Connelly, i. e., that the dead are conscious,) one of which is fraught with more mischief to the world than all other errors of Protestantism combined; I allude to the doctrine of purgatory, invocation of saints, and prayers for the dead, which are fruits of the doctrine of immortal-soulism. Think, my friends, of the imposition practiced on the ignorant by a crafty priesthood through this error. How many millions of dollars have been extorted from the credulous, under the pretense of praying their friends and relatives out of purgatory! Tetzel had the presumption to say, that he had saved more souls out of purgatory by the sale of indulgences than Peter saved by his preaching!!

A gentleman in Bardstown, Ky., and a member of the legal profession, told me some years ago, that there was a number of wills on record in that county, containing large bequests to the priesthood for praying the souls of the testators out of purgatory!! A few years ago the whole Catholic church in the United States prayed for the repose of the soul of Bishop England, of South Carolina! Upon the supposition that the souls of the saints are alive, they have been enrolled as mediators, and the most abominable follies and superstitions have been practiced. If the doctrine I teach were universally believed, all this would cease, and Popery with all its corruptions and crimes would be banished from the earth.

Now, I defy any man to show that the doctrine I hold in reference to the state of the dead, can produce any injury whatever, to the living. It is liable to no abuses, leads to no superstitions or delusions. No harm whatever can result to any man from believing that at death he ceases to be conscious—falls asleep in Christ until it is his pleasure to restore him to life and incorruptibility.

What danger is there, my friends, to the church from believing, and zealously inculcating the doctrine, that future life and happiness are dependent on a good christian character; that a resurrection from the dead is indispensable to an introduction to the joys and felicity of paradise? None whatever. The belief is eminently calculated to humble the pride of man, and make him feel his dependence on the grace of God for life and salvation.

The answer we give to those time-servers, who acknowledge the doctrine to be true, but ask what good will result from teaching it, is, that it has a practical influence in the formation of christian character—in making men faithful, honest, and circumspect. As all hope of living forever, depends on conditions, this fact increases the probabilities of a strict and unwavering compliance. It is a powerful stimulus to obedience.

Again, Dr. Field truthfully observes in the opening of this debate, "What can be more important to us, than the origin, nature and destiny of man?

How can we understand the plan of salvation without knowing who is to be saved, and what we are to be saved from?

How can we understand and apply a remedy if we know nothing about the constitution of the patient, or the disease?

In order, then to understand man, we must study his nature, his constitution, his moral and physical condition. We must ascertain what he lost by the fall, into what circumstances and misfortunes it placed him, and what would have been the result, had not God provided a remedy for him. This knowledge is indispensable to a clear perception, and a proper appreciation of the gospel of our salvation.

Hoping these extracts may prove acceptable to the beloved in Christ, I remain yours truly in the blissful hope of the gospel, looking forward to that holier, happier and more permanent state of things, which God has promised to his faithful ones;—that state of things which shall immediately succeed the final overthow, wreck and utter extermination of this present wicked, oppressive, iniquitous, hypocritical, false and rotten state of society, systems and governments which now pervade the whole entire groaning creation; yes, I look for this. Amid the glaring and vivid lightnings of the coming of the Son of man and the deep-toned thunderings of the Seventh trumpet, which shall shake this wicked world from the very centre to her circumference, removing at once every trace of the fall, yea, heaven itself shall not escape the violence of its shock. Hag. 2: 22, Heb. 12: 25–29. When a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes rule in judgment, then the meek shall inherit the earth, and increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. My God and Savior hasten it. O come and bless thy people now, take to thee thy great power and reign. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven; for thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

And now may the abundant grace of our Lord Jesus the Messiah forever be with his people. Amen.

in glory." "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." These are plain texts of Scripture, showing us that we are not to be with Christ, till he comes again.

Inferences may be drawn from some passages to the contrary; but it is not easy for faith to rest on inference, when we have what is plain—unequivocal.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." How much better then, is truth than tradition.

To be Continued.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 25, 1856.

Explanation.

It may be noticed that two articles in the last paper are repeated in this—and by the way we think they will bear a second reading; but the reason for their repetition is this:—Some have not had the privilege of reading them once.

On account of a mistake of the pressman, our papers fell short last week about two hundred. We did not discover the error until the type for the outside was partly distributed, but we succeeded in getting the inside printed and sent it to those who had not received a perfect copy, with a promise that they should have the continued articles in this paper.

We trust the like will not happen again.

Baptism.

No. IV.

Having spoken of the duty, subject, and mode of baptism; in this, our last, we purpose to notice its object or signification—or in other words, inquire WHY we should be baptized.

We answer,—to show our faith in the burial and RESURRECTION of Christ, and that our ONLY hope of a future existence, should we die, is in the resurrection of the dead.

PROOF.

Col. 2: 12, "BURIED with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the DEAD."

Here we are taught,—

1. That we are BURIED with Christ.
2. It is a burial by BAPTISM.
3. We rise again, and the whole operation expresses our faith in the fact that God raised him from the DEAD.

Hence Paul says in 1 Cor. 15: 29, where he is endeavoring to prove not only resurrection from the dead, but that they have already shown their faith in such an event; says—"Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"

When we admit that baptism is a type of the resurrection, then, this passage that has caused so much controvery, is very plain.

The simple point is this:—it the dead rise not, what is the meaning of your baptism?

Christ had been dead, as Paul declares, but was then alive, but if he had not risen, then why be baptized?

Says Theodoret, one of the Greek fathers—"He who undergoes baptism is therein buried with his Lord, that having partaken in his death he may become partaker in his resurrection also."

When we consider that immersion is the only mode of baptism, and that the only hope of a future existence of those who die, is in a literal resurrection of the material organism, then we can see the importance of baptism, which expresses such a faith.

When we are buried beneath the yielding wave in baptism, our future life in this world, depends upon our being raised out of the water; so, when we are laid in the grave, our future existence in the world to come, is dependent on a resurrection of the dead.

This faith we show by our baptism.

Says Paul in Rom. 6: 3–5, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his DEATH? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

We think all may see that baptism is intimately connected with the resurrection.

We see no way by which it is so, unless it be employed as a type. This we believe to be the truth. Here we might draw another strong argument, showing that baptism was not nailed to the cross, as some have claimed, but on the contrary continues to the end of this dispensation. The point is this:—a type is in force till the coming of the antitype.

It is CERTAIN that the resurrection of Christ was not the final antitype of baptism, because he enjoined it after he rose from the dead; hence this ordinance must continue in force, until the last believer has obeyed, or observed this rite; or till we come to the great antitype—the resurrection of the dead.

We think no one can be baptised understandingly, who does not place their only hope of a future existence, either in being translated at the coming of the Lord, or, in the literal resurrection of the dead.

We have now endeavored to answer our Sr's. inquiry, by showing—

1. That baptism is a Christian duty.
2. That believers are the only proper subjects.
3. That IMMERSION is the ONLY Bible mode.
4. That baptism is a type of the resurrection of the dead.

Discussion.

"The discussion at the Lowell Street Chapel, reached a very satisfactory termination, on Monday evening last. Evidences from the Bible, showing the continued existence and ability to communicate, of those who have passed from the earth-life, in the most clear and positive light, were presented on the Spiritualist side. Scarce an attempt was made, on the contrary part, to invalidate any portion of these testimonies; but the time was spent in citing passages which apparently teach an opposite doctrine. As the existence of such conflicting passages had not been denied, and as the Spiritualist side did not assume the infallibility and consistency of the Bible these did not meet the case. At length 'the brethren' who had invited the discussion and opened their Chapel for it, came to the very discreet conclusion that further discussion was 'unprofitable,' and introduced and carried a motion to adjourn sine die! Whether they will 'live to fight another day' remains to be seen. The debate had continued some six evenings, and on the Spiritualist side was very ably conducted by MR. PIKE, MR. EDSON, DR. GARDNER, and others. On the opposite, Elder GRANT, the minister of the society meeting in the Chapel, and a very ingenious, though courteous, conscientious, and fair-minded disputant (save that his mental optics seem a little awry with his theological notions,) was the chief speaker. We trust that at least an opening was made for the admission of 'more light' into some very dark minds."

The above is copied from the New England Spiritualist whose able editor, MR. NEWTON, was one engaged in the discussion.

Several of the leading spiritualists freely admitted that modern spiritualism could not be sustained by the Bible, while others thought differently. They endeavored to show that angels are the spirits of disembodied men, but we found the Bible declaring that man was made a little LOWER than the angels, but at the resurrection is to be made equal.

If angels are the spirits of dead men, then it follows, that there were no angels till some men died, and if men had never died, then there could have been no angels.

With this view we failed to see how man could be made a little lower than the angels, unless angels existed first.

One of the prominent spiritualists remarked to me the last evening, at the close of the debate, "Your people have gained ground by this discussion;" and he was free to state that the Bible was against them. An effort was made to prove that the resurrection takes place at death, but the writer failed to see any success.

We called repeatedly for ONE plain passage from the Bible to show that angels are the spirits of men, but we called in vain. We urged our spiritualist friends to give ONE single portion of Scripture, that clearly teaches that man is immortal, or that any part of him is alive between death and the resurrection.

We confess that our "mental optics" were so "awry" that we failed to see that our request was met by our opponents, consequently we agreed with them, "that further discussson was unprofitable."

We say in conclusion as said Mr. Newton at the close of his article,—"We trust that at least an opening was made for the admission of 'more light' into some dark minds."

New Bedford.

The Church in New Bedford are evidently growing in grace. Their social meetings are becoming more and more interesting; their songs and prayers more earnest and heartfelt, while the big tear drops moisten the eyes of the old soldier of the cross.

The work of a revival seems to be already begun, as is evidenced from the heartfelt confessions from those who have not lived up to the requirements of the Bible.

During all the trials of the last twelve years, in which time many societies have been divided and sub-divided, in New Bedford, the adversary has never been able to drive a dividing wedge.

They have learned the happy way of serving the Lord together, though they may honestly differ in opinion.

They are willing that Christian character should be the test of fellowship, rather than some doubtful point in theology. Would that others might copy the example.

There are some of the Lord's true followers in New Bedford, who love to sacrifice for the good of their fellow-men.

They have an interesting Sunday school besides being active in the weekly distribution of tracts among the citizens of the Palace-city.

They have a pleasant house for worship, and seem to spare no pains to make the Christian pilgrim feel at home when he comes among them. We love to visit them in New Bedford and Fairhaven. May the peace of God abide on them.

We were much interested last evening in the remarks of a Baptist minister, who was present for the first time. He has labored extensively in several States, and seen thousands seeking the Lord, but for the last six or seven years, he had not known what course to take. He was anxious to find a holy people, who were willing to have God work in his own way, instead of trying to do everything by man's wisdom, and human machinery.

He felt satisfied that a large number of popular ministers, instead of aiding, only stood in the way of the spread of pure religion. He remarked that he fully believed that the Lord would come literally, that the earth would be the saint's home, and that we are very near the great day of the Lord.

He rejoiced that he had found those who believed these things, and who looked at the state of the world and church in the same light as himself. He had felt fettered and hand-cuffed where he had been, and knew not what to do.

We are thankful, that the Lord is opening the eyes of some to see the true state of things in which we are living. May "God speed the right."—ED.

Notice.

We would say to those who took the Prophetic Messenger, and have received the Crisis in its place for the last fourteen weeks, that their subscription for the Messenger expires with this number of the Crisis.

Bro. Morgan desired us to relieve him of his burden, and furnish his subscribers with the Crisis until they had received the amount of their subscription for the Messenger, so that they should not be wronged by its discontinuance; this we have done without any compensation thus far, excepting a few who have already forwarded money to renew their subscription for the Crisis.

We hope that none of those who have received the Crisis in the place of the Messenger, will cut our acquaintance. We cheerfully relieved Bro. Morgan of his burden, expecting, that when the time came to speak, that we should find his patrons, our patrons.

Unless this should be the case, of course we must suffer considerable loss.

If there are any who do not wish the paper, we trust they will notify us immediately.

We know, and feel that these are hard times, and at this season, especially, and for this reason, we hope our Brn. feel like lending a helping hand, and thus "our mutual burden bear."

We trust we shall not be disappointed in our expectations.

Comfort.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, it affords us joy to see the "old debt" vanishing away before your benevolence, like a snow bank in the presence of a June sun. We are satisfied that ere long there will not be a trace of it left.

For the Crisis.

The Rural Beauty of the Kingdom.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Who that possesses a glowing, lively, active, observing mind, does not love rural beauty? Who does not love to stand upon the top of some lofty mountain, and look long and eagerly around, and mentally drink in the varied beauty of fields, groves, rivers, brooks, ponds, lakes, valleys, orchards, pastures, plains and hills? Who does not love to stroll, in sunshiny, dewy morn, along the bank of some deep, rolling river, and listen to the subdued voice of the sweeping tide, and the sweet warbling of the lively birds in the foliage that skirts its meandering course, and inhale the balmy, fragrant atmosphere that broods its shores and waters? Who does not delight to walk the fertile valley, when the flowers laugh in beauteous glee, and flitting insects in glittering livery sport in the mellow light? Who takes no pleasure in passing amidst rich, glowing fields of waving grain, that almost intelligently seem to invite the sickle and the appetite? What person does not become quite lost in the enchantment of the vision of various tinted fruits, depending from the well laden trees, and shrubs that adorn the face of fields, gardens, and the open pastures?

Everything here is, indeed, "beautiful in its time;" even though it be sadly marred with "the curse." How gracefully are the thousands of cattle spread upon the hills! How lovely are the numerous flocks of sheep scattered on the multitude of the pastures, and the "lambs" feeding "after their manner!" How interesting is the course of the winding, babbling brook, as it finds its way among the hills, and the leaping of the fountains, as they throw up their clear waters in the meadows, and among the rocks!

With what pleasure do we behold the opening loveliness of the blushing rose, and look upon the delicate hues of the sweet-scented lily! And yet in her best estate at present, Rural Nature shows but a feeble portion of her beauty. She mingles her enchanting songs, with dismal groans—her sweetest smiles are bathed with constant tears—her garments of attractive beauty she winds with melancholy changes of mourning weeds—on promising beds of glowing health, she sorely sickens—and amidst an almost endless variety of teeming life, she makes her grave. And yet we love her, court her, praise her and enjoy her. But her perfection, at length, will surely come. Her God himself will undertake to deck her in her best attire.

She shall again put on her primal robes, and wear her more than Eden diadem.

Her mountains, in peaceful sublimity, shall tower toward the heavens, clothed with eternal verdure, and bathed with an atmosphere as salubrious as that which angels breathe. Her hills shall quietly invite the creeping vine, and flourishing herb in undecaying, and undying growth, which the saintly hand shall train, and the redeemed eye shall bless. Her fields shall be spread abroad with sweet, unfading flowers, and luxurious, springing grass which again shall never wither before the the desolating drought of burning summer. Her pleasant valleys shall smile in immortal loveliness, as decked in everlasting beauty they invite the musical echoes of the songsters of the air. Her extensive groves—the box, the pine, the fir-tree, growing in changeless symmetry, the mighty cedars of Lebanon, and all the trees of the field shall lift up thankfully their unmarred branches to the Lord, and joyfully receive the embrace of the healthy breezes, as they playfully sweep along. Her majestic rivers shall ceaselessly roll their pellucid waters amidst enrapturing landscapes, bordered with sparkling glory, deliciously inviting the happy loiterers on their banks to bathe in their mirror-like bosoms.

Her pastures shall be covered with grateful and ever satisfied flocks, and herds, fearlessly mingling with harmless lions, sprightly leopards, and all the wonderful beasts of the wilderness. Infant hands, having passed the promised change, shall lead, with playful familiarity, the tiger on the plain, and the larger youth delightedly toy with the gliding serpent, in safety. The sunlight of heaven shall be seven times augmented, and the silvery moonbeams glow like present sunlight. Angels, with swelling songs of gladness, shall walk in unembarrassed association with the elect millions redeemed, as the Lamb shall lead them to fountains of living water, and respond the Amen of their immortal anthem! "There no tears shall ever fall, or heart be sad; there the glory is for all, and all" shall be forever "glad."

Hail scenes of music, of light, of joy, of love, of rest, of peace, of smiles, of purity, of life, of health, of knowledge, of beauty, of IMMORTALITY!!

A Popular Error.

BRO. GRANT:—I send you for publication a summary of the evil consequences of the preaching, and belief of that popular doctrine of going to Heaven at death, as extracted from a very excellent work entitled,—"Debate on the State of the Dead," between Thomas P. Connelly and Dr. Field. The Dr. proceeds to say, (and justly so)—

The doctrine advocated by him (Connelly) is essentially the same as that preached by the serpent in the garden of Eden,—"Thou shalt not surely die." It was productive of the most disastrous consequences then, and ever since it has conflicted with the word of God, and operated injuriously on the best interests of mankind. The following are some of its evil consequences:

1. It involves in mystery and confusion the word of God, contradicts the Mosaic account of creation and of the fall of man, necessitates a mode of interpretation, which if universally adopted would unsettle every doctrine of the Bible.

2. It makes skeptics and infidels of many intelligent men, who are unable to reconcile the laws of nature, and the deductions of reason, with what are declared to be the doctrines of revelation, and, therefore, they reject the Bible altogether.

3. It destroys the fundamental doctrine of the Bible—the resurrection of the dead, and substitutes for it, the comparatively inglorious doctrine of a re-construction of an almost superfluous body, thus depriving the resurrection of all its importance and glory.

4. It causes some to believe that at death, their souls or spirits are clothed in a sort of ethereal or spiritual body, and thus practically to believe that the resurrection is past already.

5. It gives rise to the conclusion, that if the essential and living part of man—the soul, never dies, then the resurrection of dead men to life is a contradiction.

6. It is the stronghold of Restorationism, and Universalisms and Swedenborgianism.

7. It affords the critic support for the invocation of saints, purgatory, prayers for the dead, and of many of the superstitions of popery.

8. The popular delusion about apparitions, nursery tales about ghosts, and the spirit-rapping delusion rest on this doctrine.

9. It causes the atonement and mission of Christ to be misunderstood, undervalues his death and the penalty of sin.

10. It deprives Christ of the honor of of dispensing immortality in his mediatorial character.

11. It makes death a savior, and the sole instrumental cause of our first personal introduction to God, and to heaven; thereby depriving our blessed Lord, who is the resurrection and the life, of this honor.

12. It supersedes the necessity for the coming of Christ and a general judgment, and deprives these events of all their importance and solemnity.

13. It is one of the main causes of the inefficiency of the gospel. The wicked are taught to believe that they are naturally and necessarily immortal; from which they consequently infer that they will somehow or other escape the penalty of the divine law, as it is popularly understood, and live forever in a condition no worse than the present.

I have thus (affirms the Dr.) summed up some of the effects of the doctrine of the propoisiton, (of T. Connelly, i. e., that the dead are conscious,) one of which is fraught with more mischief to the world than all other errors of Protestantism combined; I allude to the doctrine of purgatory, invocation of saints, and prayers for the dead, which are fruits of the doctrine of immortal-soulism. Think, my friends, of the imposition practiced on the ignorant by a crafty priesthood through this error. How many millions of dollars have been extorted from the credulous, under the pretense of praying their friends and relatives out of purgatory! Tetzel had the presumption to say, that he had saved more souls out of purgatory by the sale of indulgences than Peter saved by his preaching!!

A gentleman in Bardstown, Ky., and a member of the legal profession, told me some years ago, that there was a number of wills on record in that county, containing large bequests to the priesthood for praying the souls of the testators out of purgatory!! A few years ago the whole Catholic church in the United States prayed for the repose of the soul of Bishop England, of South Carolina! Upon the supposition that the souls of the saints are alive, they have been enrolled as mediators, and the most abominable follies and superstitions have been practiced. If the doctrine I teach were universally believed, all this would cease, and Popery with all its corruptions and crimes would be banished from the earth.

Now, I defy any man to show that the doctrine I hold in reference to the state of the dead, can produce any injury whatever, to the living. It is liable to no abuses, leads to no superstitions or delusions. No harm whatever can result to any man from believing that at death he ceases to be conscious—falls asleep in Christ until it is his pleasure to restore him to life and incorruptibility.

What danger is there, my friends, to the church from believing, and zealously inculcating the doctrine, that future life and happiness are dependent on a good christian character; that a resurrection from the dead is indispensable to an introduction to the joys and felicity of paradise? None whatever. The belief is eminently calculated to humble the pride of man, and make him feel his dependence on the grace of God for life and salvation.

The answer we give to those time-servers, who acknowledge the doctrine to be true, but ask what good will result from teaching it, is, that it has a practical influence in the formation of christian character—in making men faithful, honest, and circumspect. As all hope of living forever, depends on conditions, this fact increases the probabilities of a strict and unwavering compliance. It is a powerful stimulus to obedience.

Again, Dr. Field truthfully observes in the opening of this debate, "What can be more important to us, than the origin, nature and destiny of man?

How can we understand the plan of salvation without knowing who is to be saved, and what we are to be saved from?

How can we understand and apply a remedy if we know nothing about the constitution of the patient, or the disease?

In order, then to understand man, we must study his nature, his constitution, his moral and physical condition. We must ascertain what he lost by the fall, into what circumstances and misfortunes it placed him, and what would have been the result, had not God provided a remedy for him. This knowledge is indispensable to a clear perception, and a proper appreciation of the gospel of our salvation.

Hoping these extracts may prove acceptable to the beloved in Christ, I remain yours truly in the blissful hope of the gospel, looking forward to that holier, happier and more permanent state of things, which God has promised to his faithful ones;—that state of things which shall immediately succeed the final overthow, wreck and utter extermination of this present wicked, oppressive, iniquitous, hypocritical, false and rotten state of society, systems and governments which now pervade the whole entire groaning creation; yes, I look for this. 1. Engage in no business inconsistent with the strictest morality—none in which you cannot daily seek the blessing of the Most High.

2. Follow your chosen vocation—and that alone—whatever temptations to speculation or rapid acquisition may present themselves.

3. Adopt no "tricks of the trade," however sanctioned by custom, that involve deception or untruthfulness.

4. Never incur a debt beyond your resources.

5. Always live within your means.

6. Devote a fixed portion of your income beforehand to charitable uses, to be employed and accounted for as systematically as family expenditures.

The man who will regulate his business by such simple rules as these, may free himself from the feverish excitements of adventurous traffickers, and assure himself, with God's blessing, of an honest competence.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. M. E. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—For the first time I attempt to write a few lines for the Crisis, and if I should fail of accomplishing any good, or benefitting any, I may possibly provoke some more able, while they see my inability, to resume their pen. It was said of one, "she hath done what she could." I write for the encouragement and comfort of my Brethren and Sisters, who with me have been disappointed in not seeing him whom our souls loved. But the promise is sure—"I will come again." Praise the Lord. As the fulfillment of this promise is yet in the future, I embrace it with a firmer grasp than ever. True, our reckoning has run out, but shall we fold our arms and go to sleep? Never—no, never. Is not the last part of the voyage the most dangerous? If so we must double our diligence and be on the watch; if we are among the breakers, surrounded by fog, and in danger of rocks and sand bars, remember Father is at the helm, and the Bible is our compass pointing correctly forever; and the gallant ship, though she goes down the mighty swells almost out of sight, rises majestically, and soon will enter the harbor with all her faithful crew in safety. It is true, many are making shipwreck of their faith; but it is no reason that we cannot go through. Because some become infidels, others love the pleasures and riches of this world, or on the other hand some run off the track into fanaticism, it does not prove that there is no right way; for we learn from our chart that there is a strait gate and a narrow way that leads to life, and few there be that find it. I believe I have been enabled to find it, and by the grace of God, have been trying to walk therein; but never have I viewed the way so strait, as since the passing of the time. I have seen the danger of thinking that theory would save us; if it would, there would be many saved; but Paul says. Eph. 2: 8, 9,—"By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast." Bible theory is good, and the truth will stand, and I am glad that while we have the Bible in our houses, and in our hands, we can read and understand for ourselves, if we have that Spirit that was promised to lead into all truth. We as a people, have said much about trusting in the Lord, but I fear after all, we have trusted more or less in ourselves, and to our teachers; but we read—"cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm," while they that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion which cannot be moved, but abideth forever."

In order to trust in God, we must have faith in him and his word, and without wavering, for says James—"he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed." Perhaps we all feel the importance of more faith and trust in God, if so, my prayer is,—Lord give it to us, we need it in this time of trial. In 1844, with unshaken confidence I believed the Lord would come, and on that memorable day, the tenth of the seventh month, while I looked upon the earth as the sun rose in splendor, I thought of the cities of the plains. But the day past, and no fire; also the second and third, and the world stood, and no deliverance for God's people, but my poor heart sank within me, and in the language of the wise man, I could say—"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." My feet came well nigh slipping; the tempter came, but the Lord held me up, and gave me strength to resist him, and he fled; praise the Lord for that deliverance. And while I canvassed the subject, I became fully settled that the four universal kingdoms were in the past, and the division of the fourth into ten; also that the little horn power had had its day, therefore the next great event was to be the setting up of God's everlasting kingdom. I believe it to-day, and although eleven years have past, yet signs have continually been developing, which show there is no mistake that we are near the end. I believed too, that the Lord would come in '54, and with an honest heart I confessed it to the world; but alas! I have been again mistaken and disappointed, and the trial has been more severe, and the anguish of the heart more keen, than before; but I have found the grace of God sufficient, and that promise sure, that as thy day is, so shall thy strength be. Precious promise. O how sweet. I do know that the Lord is good; bless his name forever. I feel like going through and enduring to the end, for such are to be saved. I am aware that there is something to endure here, the scoffs of a wicked world, together with our disappointment, and trials, and I am sure while I say trials, my Brn. and Srs. know what I mean. But hope thou in God, for thou shalt praise him.

Now Brn. and Srs., since it is fallen to our lot to live in these perilous times, we must watch and pray lest we enter into temptation. It seems to me that temptations are many—the Lord help us to resist them, and draw near to God, and he will draw near to us. I think we can get near to God by faith, so that we may know that he hears us pray, and that we receive the things for which we ask. O let us be up and doing; if we cannot do as much as formerly, do what we can; the Lord is willing to save all that will come to him. The hope is before us, and the prize at the end of the race, and we are not to run with uncertainty, but so run that we may obtain.

Your sister in Christ, earnestly desiring eternal life. M. E. Smith.

Meredith, May 18, '56.

Letter from Sr. Crabtree.

Dearly Beloved Brn. and Srs.:—How are you prospering in the heavenly way? Are you still strong in the faith, giving glory to God? Or do you feel sad and cast down; and when you look within and examine your own heart, do you feel that you are not "crucified with Christ and dead to the world" as you should be? Do you feel to mourn and weep over your unworthiness? If so, do not despair, do not throw down your weapons of warfare, and say that the struggle is useless; we have still an Advocate with the Father,—Jesus is still our merciful High Priest, and O do not give up the conquest here. How many have done so, and turned back to perdition. May God grant that we be not among the number. I long to meet you in a better world than this, where sorrow and sighing are never known. When I think of that bright world where God will reign in righteousness, and all the saints now sleeping in the dust of the earth will be raised, and together with the living saints be made immortal,—I long to be there. O, praise God, we are going home to die no more! What though friends may forsake, and foes deride, we have a hope that will buoy us up amid the trials of this unfriendly world. The Lord is on our side and we need not fear. We have not taken the position we have on our own responsibility; we have not left the world and a backslidden church in our own strength. Had we done so when our hope failed us, when Jesus tarried and persecution came, we should have fallen unless the Lord had been our strength. O let us gird on the armor of God anew, and above all, take the shield of faith, whereby we shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. Sometimes the way looks dark and lonely, and sometimes temptation will come in like a flood; but Father knows all about it, and he will not suffer us to be tempted above what he will give us strength to bear. I feel determined, by the grace of God assisting me, to serve him till he comes.

I started to go the whole journey and I have never regretted that I set out in this good way. 'Tis true, I have not always lived so near the Lord as I should, and when I look back and see the many crooked paths I have made, I feel to repent, and by God's grace assisting me, I will strive to be a better christian than I have been.

This dark and cloudy day will not always last; Jesus will come and take his weary, waiting, watching children home. I believe there are signs in the past that bespeak with certainty the speedy return of the Prince, the rightful Heir of David's throne. And when I think of these things, I feel to pray that there may be union among those who profess to be looking for Jesus. I believe that God will work and do his own will in his own way.

One Bro. asks,—can we not agree to disagree?

I believe we can, if we are christians.

And now dear Brn. and Srs., let us put away the unfruitful works of darkness.—such as anger, wrath, malice, evil-speaking and bitterness; and put on charity, which is the bond of perfection; and if we do, then God will own and bless us, and we shall not be confounded on the day of judgment.

May God send us a blessing is the prayer of your unworthy sister,—

Amelia Crabtree.

Obituary.

Died in Bath, Stuben Co., N. Y., May 30, Louiza, daughter of Bro. Palmer, aged 14 years.

She was well in the evening, and filled her seat at the table, assisted in washing the dishes, and did some sewing; but by 3 o'clock in the morning she was no more.

Although a few weeks have passed, the memory of that solemn hour is vivid in the mind.

Louiza is gone, never to return, if the dead rise not; but praise the Lord for the Christian's hope that takes hold on the resurrection of loved ones laid away in the embrace of death.

Soon the glad day will come, when Louiza will come again from the land of the enemy.

Domestic Summary.

Wonderful Instance of Sagacity in a Dog saving a Child's Life.—We take the following from the Trinity, California Times. It certainly records one of the most remarkable instances we have ever heard of, of canine "sagacity" as it is called, but which, in this instance seems more like the exercise of the same reason with which man is gifted, but the exclusive possession of which he arrogates to himself:

"Wm. Dredge lives about five miles from town, at the base of the mountains which tower North of us. A short time after midnight on the morning of Wednesday last, he was aroused from his slumbers by the mournful howl of a dog. No menace on his part could rid him of the presence of the strange intruder. The dog continued to walk around the cabin, still repeating his dismal moaning and howling, occasionally making efforts to effect an entrance through the closed doorway. Surprised and somewhat alarmed at this singular demonstration, Mr. Dredge at last hastily dressed himself and unbolted the door, when a large mastiff rushed within. The dog at once caught hold of his pants and employed every gentle means to induce the gentleman to accompany him outside.

Dredge's first impression was that the animal was mad, and yet so peculiar and earnest were the dumb entreaties, that he finally yielded and proceeded without the cabin. A joyful yell was the result, and the delighted brute now capering and wagging his tail before him, and now returning and gently seizing him by the hand and pants, he induced Dredge to follow him.

Their course was up the precipitous sides of the mountain, and soon they were forcing their way through a snow drift that had settled in one of its numerous embrasures. Here comes the wonder. Upon the snow lay the body of a woman, who had evidently perished from cold and exhaustion. Her limbs were already stiffened in the embraces of death. But what was the surprise of Mr. Dredge to see that faithful dog ferret out from a bundle of clothing that lay by the side of the woman, a young child about two years of age, still warm and living. A little inspection, aided by the pale starlight and the brightness of the snow, enabled him to discover that the person of the woman was nearly naked. With a mother's affection she had stripped her own person in order to furnish warmth to her exposed infant. The trusty dog had completed her work of self-sacrifice and immolation.

Mr. Dredge immediately conveyed the child to his cabin, and arousing some of the neighbors, proceeded again to the mountain to secure from attack of wild beasts the person of the unfortunate woman. Her body was buried the next day. The child and dog have been adopted by this good Samaritan. But as yet he has been unable to obtain any light as to the name of the woman, or how she happened to stray on the dismal mountain side at such an unfortunate hour. The child is doing well, and is truly a handsome boy.

From Kansas.—Chicago, June 18. Mrs. Brown, wife of the Editor of the Herald of Freedom, has just arrived here. She left Lawrence June 12, on which day a band of 250 Missourians were encamped three miles from Lawrence. She met Col. Sumner, en route for Lawrence, with a strong body of troops, including a company of Artillery.

Seventy-five men, constituting the first company of the Emigrant Aid Society, left yesterday for Kansas.

The pro-slavery Committee at Leavenworth had renewed their notice to the Free State men to quit the Territory.

Col. Sumner had warned the Missourians to desist and to commit no overt act.

Col. Whitfield arrived at St. Louis on Monday, on his way to Washington.

Kansas.—Col. Sumner Threatened to be Hung. A telegraphic dispatch states that Col. Sumner ordered Gen. Whitfield's army to leave the Territory on Saturday, when the whole number, four hundred, left and went to Westport, where they were reinforced by one hundred and fifty Missourians, and returned on Sunday, threatening to hang Col. Sumner if they caught him. A collision between the United States troops and Whitfield's party was expected, unless the latter changed their purpose. Col. Sumner is the only man in command of the U. S. troops who would like to see justice done to the Free-State men, and for his attempt to avert a murderous and unlawful attack upon them, he is threatened to be hung!

Mormon Leader Shot.—Detroit, June 19. James D. Strong, the Mormon leader at Beaver Island, was shot on the 16th, by two of his former followers. At latest accounts he was still alive, but in a critical condition. His assassins are under arrest.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Arago.

New York, June 17.—The steamer Arago arrived at her dock at 1 o'clock. She brings Havre and Southampton dates of 4th inst.

The excitement in reference to the American question was increasing. The Times says the recognition of Walker is not necessarily to be followed by war, although it greatly embitters the dispute.

The English government will act with forbearance, if Crampton is dismissed, and will probably assume a temporizing policy till after the Presidential election.

Some of the journals advocate a vigorous policy on the part of England, but the majority counsel firmness with conciliation.

The question of the Danish Sound Dues was to be discussed in Parliament on the 6th.

The Times also says that the dismissal of Mr. Dallas must follow immediately that of Mr. Crampton.

The last intelligence from the United States caused a flatness in the money market.

The Daily News reiterates the hopes of the Times on the preservation of peace, and considers that if a war should take place, it would only be looked at in the light of a civil one.

The other leading morning journals view the matter in the same light.

The Times scoffs at the notion of a war between Spain and Mexico, and says that scarcely a month would elapse, from the first operations of the Spanish fleet at Vera Cruz, before the government at Washington would intervene in the discussion, and transfer its discussion to Havana.

Mr. Henri Place, one of the administrators of the Credit Nobiliers at Paris, had failed for nearly a million sterling, causing great depression on the Bourse.

Nothing important from other quarters.

The East India steamer Solient, arrived at Southampton on the 4th, with nearly $4,000,000.

LATEST.

The London Times of the 4th says that from further information received, it considered that war was daily becoming more imminent, whilst the Daily News adheres to the improbability of such an event.

Arrival of the America.

ENGLAND.

Halifax, June 18.—The news relates mostly to American difficulties.

The Atlantic's arrival was anxiously awaited, as Mr. Crampton was expected to be on board, and a considerable sensation of relief was felt when it was known he was not.

The London Morning Post which has published several false reports recently respecting American affairs, caused an excitement by the following editorial announcement:

"Government of the United States has intimated to Mr. Crampton its desire that he would forthwith quit American territory, and his Excellency has, in consequence, retired from his post, and arrived at Toronto, Canada."

THE EAST.

Dates from the Crimea are to the 21st. Nothing important from either Constantinople or the late seat of war.

FRANCE.

The French papers are filled with accounts of the destructive inundation.

The Emperor's visit to Lyons and other scenes of the calamity, has gained him immense popularity. The extent of the disaster is very great. Five hundred houses were destroyed at Lyons, and one hundred and fifty at Avignon.

At latest accounts the waters were subsiding.

Ten million francs have been voted by the government for the relief of the sufferers, and the Empress has opened a subscription list.

The agricultural show at Paris continues to be a great source of attraction.

The liabilities of M. Place, the bankrupt director of the Credit Mobilier, are estimated at 18,000,000 francs.

PORTUGAL.

The vine and potato crops seem likely to fail on account of much rain.

SPAIN.

The fleet to be sent to Mexico is reported to number 11 ships—2 ships of the line, 3 frigates, 2 corvettes, and 4 steamers.

ITALY.

A Paris despatch states that the notes presented by France and Austria to the Neapolitan government, are nearly identical. No reforms are positively indicated by name, but the general tone is urgent and pressing. Austria objects to foreign active interference, and hints that the present crisis has been planned by Sardinia, stating, however, that Austria has no desire to interfere with Sardinia's liberal institutions. France, however, hints at an intervention should any outbreak take place in Naples or Sicily.

In the British Parliament, Lord Clarendon has consented to produce the papers addressed by Sardinia to the conferences at Paris, and intimated his opinion that, before the close of the session, there must a discussion on the affairs of Italy. He added that he had reason to believe that both France and Austria were desirous of removing their troops as soon as possible from the Italian territory.

The Piedmontese Chamber of Deputies have presented General Marmora with an acre of valuable building land in the city of Turin.

M. Mazzini announces his intention of withdrawing altogether from politics, and emigrating as a private citizen to the United States.

GREECE.

The King of Greece has asked for the Infanta of Spain, sister of the King, in marriage, for the heir to the Greek throne. A favorable answer is given by Spain

King Otho is about to set out for Germany.

PRUSSIA.

Emperor Alexander has been enjoying the hospitality of the King of Prussia, at Berlin.

Baptism of the French Imperial Prince.—The following, says Galignani, are some few details of the preparations now in progress at Notre Dame for the baptism of the Prince Imperial. The whole of the church will be decorated with paintings to harmonise with the style of the building, and all the windows filled with colored glass, so as to throw a soft light over the interior. The keystones of the vaulted roof and the capitals of the columns will be gilded. In the centre of the transept, and on an estrade approached by six steps, will be placed on the right and left the legate, the archbishop, the cardinals, the prelates, and the other dignitaries of the church. In the centre will be seats for the Emperor and Empress, the Imperial family, the ladies of honor in attendance, and the ministers. The altar, which will be placed at the entrance of the choir, will be covered with a canopy, and on either side in the choir will be erected tribunes for the ladies of the high public functionaries. Between the altar and the priedieu of their majesties will be placed the baptismal font. The water for the ceremony will be put in the vase of St Louis, (now in the Musee des Soverains,) and which will be placed on a table of white marble. The diplomatic body and the senate will be placed as usual in the southern transept; the northern being occupied by the legislative body and the council of state. On the right and left of the nave will be seats for the public. The orchestra will be placed, as on the occasion of the marriage of their majesties, over the grand entrance near the grand organ. Outside, in front of the central entrance, will be raised a richly-decorated porch with masts ornamented with flags.

THE SCRIPTURE DOCTRINE
FUTURE PUNISHMENT.
By H. H. Dobney,
Baptist Minister, of England.
Fourth Edition.
WITH AN APPENDIX ON
THE STATE OF THE DEAD,
By John Milton,
Author of "Paradise Lost."

1 Vol. 12 Mo., 310 Pages. Price 75 Cents.

This is one of the most impt'nt works or ever issued upon this solemn subject. Clear, forcible, and sometimes eloquent in his language, the author surveys the whole field, and presents his arguments and examines objections with the facility of "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The style is calm and Christian, a rare excellence in a controversial work. The Universalist, the skeptic, and the infidel, will find here that while the truths they hold are admitted in all their force, yet the reasonableness of revelation and the retribution therein revealed cannot be denied. And the believer in the doctrine of the Eternal agony of the multitudes of the Lost, will find that objections to that opinion exist in the word of God, no less serious than those which arise from the calm consideration of the subject in the light of human reason.

Let all obtain and read this work with care, and we shall await with confidence the verdict of the candid and unprejudiced.

The volume is an elegant 12mo., and contains besides the views of the poet Milton, who, with Luther, Tindale, Bishop Law and Archbishop Whately, defends the doctrine of unconsciousness in death.

It will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the price, 75 cents.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits, it will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may perhaps subserve the cause of humanity to [illegible] the advertisement to the public. Messiah's Reign on Earth.

BY W. SHELDON.

The King of glory soon will reign,
On Zion's lovely hill;
The foe of saints he then will chain,
And earth with peace He'll fill.

From sea to sea, from east to west,
His empire will extend;
All nations then supremely blest,
With songs his praise they'll blend.

Celestial angels all unite
To honor earth's new King;
All earth is filled with sweet delight,
While saints with angels sing.

The earth is one vast paradise,—
A theater of praise;
A spring of joy which never dries,—
All bitter grief allays.

Transporting thought! sweet day of rest!
When death shall be destroyed!
O! haste the day when the oppressed
Shall be no more annoyed!

For the Crisis.

The Saint's sweet Anticipations.

Suggested by the death of Sr. L. Bangs, June, 1856.

BY MARIA MATTHEW.

How sweet to know that cherubs bow,
To guard thy peaceful slumbers now,
While we, amid the gloom profound,
Await the trumpet's welcome sound.

How sweet to know there is a home,
Where sin and death no more shall come;
Nor pains pervade the pilgrim's head,
Procumbent on his dying bed.

How sweet to know there is an hour,
When, summoned by Almighty power,
The dead arise,—are borne away—
To shine as gems in endless day.

How sweet to know there is a land,
Where, clad in beauty, millions stand;
Where life is not a with'ring flower,
That blossoms but one transient hour.

How sweet to know there is a day,
When "former things shall pass away;"
Nor naught disturb our sweet repose,
While vengeance falls upon our foes.

O, God! impart an inward ray,—
Prepare us for that blissful day;
Help us, when waves of sorrow swell,
To say, "He doeth all things well."

Daneville, C. E.

Public Worship.

"Who can expect to be by Jesus blest,
If absent, when He comes to meet His guests?
Can those, who once have tasted Jesus' grace,
Choose to be absent when He shows His face?
Shall a few drops of rain, or dirty road,
Prevent their public intercourse with God?

See! Satan's slaves to scenes of riot go,
By day and night through rain, or hail, or snow!
And shall some visitor or worldly care,
Detain believers from the house of prayer?

Forbid it, Lord! revive thy people's zeal;
The lukewarm-plague among thy people heal,
Ye heirs of bliss, whom Jesus often meets,
When e'er his house is opened, fill your seats."

For the Crisis.

"Write the Vision and make it plain upon Tables."

BY W. SHELDON.

As a people, we have been guilty of perverting the text in which the above phrase is found. It has been, and still is being quoted in justification of our former mistaken computation of the prophetic periods of Daniel. This gross blunder has blindfolded scores of honest souls, and has finally become the platform of another failure. We invite attention to the following convincing facts:

1. The prophet Habakuk was commanded "to write the vision" himself; he was not commanded to prophecy that somebody else should write it at a distant future period.

2. He was not commanded to write a vision, but "the vision."

3. He was not commanded to write the visions, (plural,) but "the VISION." What a variety of visions have been written out by those who have erroneously flattered themselves with the impression that they were doing the work which God told the prophet to do.

4. He was not commanded to write Daniel's visions, for they were not given till years afterwards—the vision of the 1290 and 1335 days was given 93 years afterwards—furthermore, only one vision was to be written, and if that was one of Daniel's (which was to be seen in after years,) pray divine to us which one was meant, of the many; and tell us by what authority you write more than one?

5. What was "the vision" which the prophet was commanded to write?

Obviously the vision which Habakkuk had just seen, concerning the punishment of the Jews by the hand of the Chaldeans, [illegible] the dwelling places that are not theirs. They are terrible and dreadful. * * * * O Lord thou hast ordained them for judgment; and, O mighty God, thou hast established them for CORRECTION." Hab. i. 6–12. God made use of the Chaldeans to chastise the Jews for their wickedness. After God had communicated to Habakkuk by the vision, the work which he was about to accomplish, the prophet remarks:

"I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and I will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved. And the Lord answered me, and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, (on parchment,) that he may run that readeth it. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end (of the appointed time,) it shall speak (in its fulfilment,) and not lie; though it (apparrently) tarry, wait for it, (to see its fulfillment,) because it will surely come, it will not tarry." Hab. ii. 2, 3.

6. When Paul said, "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry," (Heb. x. 37,) no allusion was made to Habakkuk's tarrying time; the apostle's statement was original with himself, and was not a quotation. The prophet says, "IT," (the vision concerning the Chaldeans,) whereas the Apostle says, "He," (Christ.)

7. Paul quotes one phrase from Habakkuk, (which has led some to suppose that he also quoted the context,) viz.: "The just shall live by faith." He also quotes it in Romans i. 17, as applicable to the whole gospel dispensation; not confined to its close. It has been true in every dispensation.

For the Crisis

Seventh day Sabbath.

BY W. SHELDON.

No. III.

To make it appear that the keeping of the seventh day Sabbath (Saturday) is enjoined upon christians, many texts are quoted which speak of—

"THE LAW OF GOD."

It is affirmed that this phrase has exclusive reference to the ten commandments engraven upon stone, among which is the seventh day Sabbath. It is stated that there were two distinct laws in the Mosaic age, only one of which expired at the cross. But upon examination we shall find that there was but one law with a moral and ceremonial department—that the phrases "law of Moses" and "law of God" were only interchangeable phrases, applied to the same thing, sometimes to the tables of stone, at other times to the ceremonial department, and frequently to the whole.

Firstly, the law given at Horeb, and engraven on stone, is called "the law of Moses," by the inspired prophet: "Remember ye the LAW OF MOSES my servant, which I commanded him in HOREB." Mal.

What law is here spoken of?

Ans.: The one given in "HOREB."

What law was that?

"The day thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in HOREB * * the Lord spake unto you, * * and he declared unto you his covenant which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone." Deut. 4: 10–13. This is the law which was given in "Horeb" and is directly called "the law of MOSES;" and the same is elsewhere called the "law of God."

If the "law of Moses" expired with the introduction of the gospel economy, which is an admitted fact, then the decalogue, as such, is not an unending code, as it is styled "the law of Moses," which has had its day, though some of its principles are enforced under the new economy; but the Sabbath has never been brought into the new arrangement.

Let no one hereafter deny that the ten commandments form a part of the "law of Moses," which was only to last "till the seed (Christ) should come,"—being now a discharged "SCHOOLMASTER;" having served his time out; however some of the lessons of this master are still taught in the new school, but not a single lesson of seventh day Sabbath keeping!

Again; the ceremonial department of the law is repeatedly called "the law of the Lord." Luke 2: 24. "To offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the law of the Lord, "a pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons." Is there anything said about "turtle doves" or "young pigeons," on the tables of stone? No; but there is in "the law of the Lord," therefore the ceremonial part of the law is likewise styled "the law of the Lord."

The law of God which belonged to the former dispensation, did enjoin the keeping of the seventh day Sabbath; but the law of God which belongs to this age does not enjoin it. This is where some blunder—they seem to overlook the fact that God has laws for each dispensation, which are alike in some items, yet they belong to their respective ages, not being adapted to other ages, and should never be confounded.

Never should we go to the law of a preceding age, to force Sabbath keeping upon the present age. If it is not enjoined in the law of this age, it is not for us.

We need not weary the reader with numerous quotations to prove that "we are not under the law" for all know that the Scriptures thus teach; but it becomes us to guard against that claim of two laws. We have clearly proved that what is called "the law of God" in one instance, is likewise called "the law of Moses," in another instance, and vice versa. The Scriptures do not speak of the laws, but always of "the law," whether reference is made to the ten commandments, or others of more importance. Paul quotes the following commandments from "THE LAW" (not laws,) a part of which are from the tables of stone, and a part from the ceremonial department; yet they are items of "THE law":

"Thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not bear false witness, thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying; namely, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Rom. 13: 9.

The last command is not one of the ten. These items of "the law" which expired at the cross, are now component parts of the gospel system, which is distinct from the preceding one, though containing some of its elements; but destitute of the Sabbath policy.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. Wm. Jackson;

DEAR BRETHREN of like precious faith, looking for that blessed hope, pray for me. I am in a place where there are no believers in the soon coming of Christ, no preaching about Jesus coming, as being nigh at hand; and I did not know so well as I now do, since I came to this town, how to prize the Crisis. It is all the preaching I have that I can relish, or that I consider to be meat in due season.

Now Brethren, it will not do to let the publishing of the paper go down for lack of funds. I recollect in 1854, there was no lack. Is the church poorer than they were then? if so, we are nearer the end than at that time, and perhaps do not need this world's goods much longer.

Brn., think of me here, away from any of like precious faith. Now, Brn., for our sakes that do not have the living preacher to speak to us, do not neglect to pay all that you are able, so that the paper shall not go down. I believe it is the will, and for the glory of God that it should be published. Let us each send one dollar, and no doubt it will relieve the Editor.

As I said before, so say I again; let us Brn. and Srs., come right up to the mark, and pay for the Crisis, and have it continued until our Lord shall come.

Yours in hope,
WM. JACKSON.

For the Crisis.

Letter from S. H. Waldron.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I was very sorry to hear that you was obliged to leave the office, and your very useful, but laborious occupation for want of eye sight, but am glad to hear that you feel somewhat relieved, and hope that He who once opened the eyes of the blind, will soon restore you to your former duties; not that I have any fear of mismanagement of the paper; but if God has otherwise ordered it, be of good cheer, Br., as I trust you will, for in a very short time, if you continue in the faith, you will have better eyes than ever you had; yes, immortal ones, that can feel no aches and pains.

When I last wrote you, I scarcely dared to expect another privilege, but kind Providence, with time and patience, has so far restored my health, as to be able once more to take up my pen to write a line for the Crisis, which I am confident, I esteem as highly as any one.

1st. For the kind spirit manifested by writers for its columns.

2nd. For the Bible truths it advances, and—

3d. For the comfort and consolation my poor heart enjoys, when I hear from the despised little flock, scattered abroad of like precious faith, in hope of the gospel of the kingdom so soon to come.

My dear Brn. and Srs., it surely is a glorious hope that we, if faithful, are so soon to realize, even more than all of our fond anticipations. Notwithstanding our imperfections and unworthiness, I wonder somewhat why more do not write, especially the Srs. Why not? It is a free paper as I understand it, for one and all the household of faith to express their honest views and feelings. Although we may differ on some miner points concerning the coming of the Lord, let us try to feel that we are all of one family, and come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty powers of darkness, and not try to excuse ourselves, because one can write more edifying than another.

Your unworthy Brother expecting the Lord and heaven's kingdom; also the resurrection at the end of the 1335 and 2300 days.

S. H. WALDRON.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. John Brown.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say to Bro. E. Burnham, through the Crisis, that there is a little band of believers in this place, who have stood together through the many trials and disappointments of the past, and are still waiting and looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ. Though the vision tarry, we wait for it, believing that at the end it will speak and not lie.

We have not been favored with preaching but very little the past year, not being able to sustain it. The preaching Brn. have all gone to other fields of labor,—mostly to the far West; and we are left in a lonely condition; but having a great desire to hear the word dispensed, and feeling a deep interest for those around us, who have had some light, that they might have another opportunity to hear, we therefore cordially invite Bro. E. Burnham, or some other faithful minister of the gospel of the kingdom, to come over and help us at South Butler. We need righting up. We need strength, we need meat in due season. If Bro. Burnham could make his arrangements so as to make a tour West, I think that the Brn. at other places would receive him with warm hearts, and that he would be sustained. Will Bro. Burnham give us an answer through the Crisis, and all due arrangements will be made.

We are situated about thirty miles West of Syracuse, and five miles north of Savannah station.

Your Bro. looking for eternal life at the appearing of Christ and his kingdom.

In behalf of the Church,
JOHN BROWN.

For the Crisis

Letter from Bro. J. H. Stevens.

BRO. MERRIAM:—I have been a constant reader of the Crisis for something over two years, although I do not receive it since your last arrangement, from the office of publication; still I get one now and then through the instrumentality of a good brother in the State of Maine, from whence I came to this State one year ago this present month; and it is truly refreshing to my poor soul in this far distant land. It appears to me, that were it not for the spiritual food that I receive from perusing its columns, I should starve; for I have not seen one person of "like precious faith" since I left the State of Me.; and I often long to be in the company of the saints again, and enjoy sweet communion with them, but I do not expect to meet them until we meet in the kingdom of bright glory; for I left them because I felt that God required me to come to this new field of labor, and open the way for some of his ministering servants to come after me and build up his cause. I am not discouraged, although I have passed through many trials, and have felt the hard pinching of poverty, still I am determined to persevere, by the grace of God assisting me. I shall not attempt to give a description of the country, for it has been better given than I could do, by others.

My object in writing this is, that some one who may chance to see it, might be led to find me out in my new home, and visit us in our exile. I think if some servant of God, full of love and the Holy Ghost, should come this way, much might be done in the name of the Holy Child Jesus.

I wish to say to Bro. H. L. Hastings, Dr. A. Decker, or any other Bro. or Sr., that any books or publications that they may see fit to give to the poor, will be thankfully received. And cash with much interest by ourselves and others. Although I am too poor to buy, still I can bless the Lord I have a mind to read and inculcate anything on the subject of my future hope, that may fall into my hands My companion joins with me in sending love to all the household of faith, especially to those of our acquaintance in Me.

My address is Bad Axe, Wis. If any of the pilgrims should think proper to call on us, on their way to the far West, they may find me by inquiring at Victory, on the Mississippi—stating that I live on the Bad Axe Creek, ten miles from its mouth. I will insure them a hearty welcome, and a share of God's bounty, such as I have to give them.

Yours, looking for deliverance,
JOSEPH H. STEVENS.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. J. Gregory

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—As time is rolling on, you and I must not stand still in the cause of Christ, for it is the best of all causes. I believe that time is short, and that the Master will soon come. O let us be active, that when He comes we may not be found "sleeping," for you know "if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come he would have watched." The Saviour says unto us, watch! How many there are, who, since the time when the Savior was expected, have given up watching. O my brethren! it will be death if we should be found asleep when the Lord comes. My heart is pained while I look around me, and see how many there are, who once were serving the Lord, that are not now. Some have said,—"I am going through;" but now where are they? I can cry out like one of old, "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night." My prayer to God is, send the Holy Ghost after them. What we do, we must do quickly, for time is winding up. Oh! what a dreadful scene it will be to those who are not found ready. Do not let us merely dream of Heaven, but let us work that we may ensure a Heavenly portion. O glory be to God! I believe we have got nearly through. Let us try to hold on a few days more, and we shall be discharged. Suppose that the winds do blow high, or low, it will all be over soon.

Brn., do not be discouraged. Some have gone back into the world, but let us, by the help of God stand to our posts. Praise God, O my soul! I never have felt any more like being faithful. I feel firm, fixed in God. I think now is a time to try men's faith. The christian's hope is compared to the anchor, which reaches to that within the veil, so that when troubles, trials, and temptations come, none of these things can move us; and like the willow that is planted near the river, that takes root deep, so that the winds or waves cannot uproot it, is the christian's hope. Glory be to God, Brn. and Srs., I like the go-np doctrine yet, as well as ever, though I cannot often find one that is willing to say much about it in these days, but I love to speak of it, for I do not know of any other doctrine so good; and if I am faithful during the war, I shall live forever. O life! life! eternal life! what can be better. By the help of God I intend to have it.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. J. D. Merriam.

BRO. MERRIAM:—It has been some time since I have written for the Crisis, and the reason is, because I have been so unsettled, in my own mind as to the position we occupy, that I feared to write, lest I might do more hurt than good. I have been trying to look over the good book, calling to mind the former days; and I believe I have consecrated myself and all to the Lord, and purposed in my heart not to trangress his commands, and feel at peace with him. I am now satisfied as to our position in some respects, to say the least. I do think that the Advent movement has been of God, and that we have made progress toward the kingdom. For myself, I am satisfied that we are truly in the waiting time. I believe that it is of the utmost importance that the church put on her beautiful garments, and shine forth, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners. I think the morning is coming, and that soon the shadows will flee away. O I feel that it is no time to be asleep, or even drowsy; for "we are living, we are dwelling in a grand and awful time." Peace and safety is the cry, but sudden destruction cometh! I long for the [illegible] to see Zion arise and shine, her light being come, and the glory of God risen upon her. May God speed the day.

You have my prayers that you may do and suffer the whole will of God, and receive the reward of the faithful.

Yours for the truth,
J. D. MERRIAM.

For the Children.

A Sad Memory.

What would I not give if it were possible to take back one hour—one single hour, of my childhood, over whose memory many bitter tears have flowed, and many vain regrets been wasted.

It was years and years ago, yet the scene is fresh before me. We were out under the fragrant blossoming trees. Hattie, her brother Frank, and I—the happiest trio of playmates to be found anywhere.

We little girls had our dolls of course, and so we played visit back and forth, from one apple-tree to another. And Frank was a dealer in china-ware, principally cups and saucers, under the old oak in the lane, and we bought unheard-of quantities, at the most extravagant prices. But Frank soon tired, as boys always do of such quiet amusement, and presently began to make himself merry with our grave sayings, and mock dignity, and finally dared to pronounce it "all a sham." It was only in the mischievous overflow of his childish glee, and a sportive answer and a merry laugh would have set all right again.

But I was quick-tempered, and a very hot flush came to my face, and an angry retort to my lips. "Now, Frank Hale!" I said, "you've spoiled all our fun, and I'll never speak to you again as long as I live!"

Alas! for that rash word was kept But Frank did not mind it! He only broke the blossoms off a low spray, and began to snow-ball us, as he said.

O how plainly I see him still! The bright slant sun-beams lit up his fair brow and golden hair, and his blue eyes were brimming with frolic. But the little soft, white missiles roused a wicked and revengeful spirit in my heart, and catching up a stone, I threw it full at Frankie! It struck his forehead, and putting up his hand, his lips quivering with pain, he only looked at me reproachfully, and turned slowly homeward.

Oh! what a guilty, guilty heart was mine. How I longed to run after him, and ask him to come back again and forgive me, but I was too proud. And so watched him silently, until he passed out of sight, with his hand still pressed to his forehead, and then I went back again to my play. But the charm was broken. Our sweet, shady play-ground was no longer pleasant, for the happy heart that had enjoyed it so fully, was heavy with shame and sorrow, and the hour seemed long, before Hattie was willing to return home. That night, as I lay down to sleep, I could not rest in that sweet peace I was wont to do. The very stars I loved so well, seemed like grave, reproving eyes, and so I closed mine fast, but I could not sleep for a long, long time. I resolved to go the very next day to Frankie and ask him to forgive me, and never, no never! be so angry again. But the next day it rained in torrents, and the next and the next, and the third day my father said at the tea-table, that Mrs. Hale's little Frank was very ill with scarlet-fever. How I prayed that he might not die, that I might go to him and say, "Forgive me!" and throw off this dreadful weight. No one knew how much I suffered, for I could not bear to tell even my dear mother; but as day after day the news came that Frankie was growing worse, it seemed to me that I could not endure it. And then came the solemn tidings,—Frank was dead! Dead! Those blue sorrowful eyes, that still seemed looking upon me, were sealed forever. The brow I had wounded was cold and pale; those lips were still in death that had not yet spoken forgiveness. And when he was lying in his coffin I saw him, and with an almost breaking heart I saw on that still white forehead a trace yet visible of my passionate deed.

Children, this is a true story. It has cost me a great effort to relate it, for the recollection is very painful still, and yet, if it shall have power to stay one little hand raised like mine in anger, and prevent a like sorrowful memory from embittering another life, I shall not regret that I have written it.

The World's Crisis,

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY BELIEVERS IN THE Immediate Coming of Jesus Christ.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

HENRY V. DAVIS, | MILES GRANT,
JOHN COUCH, | GEO. T. ADAMS.
JOSEPH H. TURNER, PRINTER.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months - - - -	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months - - - - -	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months -	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months -	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

Always let the business portion of your letter stand by itself. If necessary, it can be written on a separate slip of paper and enclosed in the same envelope.

Choice Selections.

The following extract is from an English work lent us by Sr. Campbell, who has recently come to this country. It will be read with interest, as it presents the views of those who are close students of prophecy and careful observers of the signs of the times.—Ed.

"The Snare for Protestantism."

About a year since a great outcry was raised on the subject of Armageddon. A continental war being then a novelty, every passing event was thought to be the greatest that the world had ever seen. The gallant little skirmish at Alma was described by one person as the two greatest battles that were ever fought; and the really great siege of Sebastopol, was pronounced to be the battle of Armaggeddon. The papers teemed with letters from persons who had never thought of prophecy before, and who, of course, were wrong in every word that they wrote. Dr. Cumming took the lead in this popular delusion, and published some dozen letters on the question of Armageddon. At last—losing all patience—we ventured to suggest that these new prophets were wrong; for that Sebastopol could not be Armageddon.

But to come to the point. We have long ago remarked that it has been the object of all our YEAR-DAY interpreters to throw the whole weight of apostasy upon the Church of Rome, and to remove it from Protestantism. They have made the Pope the Antichrist, and have recognized no Antichrist within the Protestant Church. Do you really think that God can be so mocked, or Satan so deluded? Does God, who is infinitely holy, look with such favor upon our corrupt Protestantism, that he regards it as exempt from one entire class of sins—from all the sins which are included in apostasy? Is it enough for a man to cry down the Pope, to make vapid speeches, and to drink Protestant ascendency in sparkling wine, in order to be pronounced free from all the dangers of apostasy? Or is Satan so shallow as to be thus childishly evaded? Be assured of it this is impossible! The Lord permits and the devil provides, an equal snare for all hypocrites and worldlings, whether they call themselves Romanist or Protestant.

We believe that Protestantism is becoming so hateful in the sight of God, that he is about to destroy its whole system, and to join it with Popery in an equal condemnation. Its boasting, its pride, its hypocrisy, and its love of money, have rendered it even worse than Popery; for it has equal sin, with much greater light. Popery corrupts God's truth; but Protestantism takes it pure and bright from the hand of God, and then employs it as an instrument for the vilest purposes. Popery substitutes dross for gold—very bad; but Protestantism takes the pure gold—melts it down into ingots—coins it into the current money of the merchant—and then lays it out in luxury and bloodshed!! One instance is quite enough. Have we not made the propagation of the Gospel a complete justification of our rapacity in India? Armed with the text, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel," we have invaded nations, weaker than ourselves; beaten them down into subjection, and then answer the reproaches of our conscience with the lucky text. We invade them, in order to gratify our rapacity and then justify the crime by pretending to preach the Gospel in obedience to the text.

Again:—In our present fury and thirst for blood, excited by the Russian war, we have the most comfortable texts read for every spasm of conscience—for every reproach of the heart. Did not God command Israel to kill their enemies, and does not this bear us out in doing the same; forgetting altogether the difference of dispensation, and the new principle of the Gospel—"All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." And thus it is we coin the pure gold of God's word into the current money of the merchant, and make it as much an instrument of abomination as the dross of Popery.

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Protestantism is soon to reap the dread harvest of its long-protracted crimes!

The sole aim of Protestantism is to be wrapped in the security of its innocence; and, whenever it meets with a threat of judgment, to apply it all to Popery. Blindness, amounting to infatuation, has fallen upon the Protestant world. Every blessing of the Old Testament it has stolen from the Jews, to whom it belongs, and appropriated to itself. Every curse of the Old Testament it has left to the Jews, and denied the application for itself. A strange delusion, indeed, to seize upon all the blessings, and to leave all the judgments to others! In the same presumptuous manner it deals with the New Testament, leaving the curses to the Church of Rome, and seizing upon all the blessings for itself! Our false prophets have kept up the delusion, by promising peace to the wicked—when there is NO PEACE—and God will call them to account for it, unless they quickly repent. But what is the inevitable result of this tampering with God's word? Hating no evil, except Popery alone, and filled with vain confidence in its own uprightness, the Protestant Church is at this day looking out for nothing BUT THE DOWNFALL OF THE POPE.

The present is peculiarly remarkable as being evidently the commencement of an Antichristian conspiracy on the largest scale; we request, therefore, the attention of the reader. Until now, the French Emperor has been the most dutiful servant and the chief defender of the Popedom. It was Popery which set him upon the imperial throne. But now the scene is beginning to change; a new era has begun in the history of Romanism. Austria has bound herself hand and foot by the celebrated Concordat which she has lately signed with the Court of the Vatican. Austria has now become the champion of Popery, and of Popery in its mediæval form—rank downright Romanism. At the very same time when Austria drew near to the Church of Rome, France began to draw further off. Sardinia quarrelled with Rome, and gave a mortal offence by confiscating the church property. The King of Sardinia has been excommunicated by the Pope, with all the impressive forms of mediæval Romanism; his kingdom is laid under an interdict, like that of King John, or Philip of France, in the beginning of the 13th century. Popery is the true conservator of antiquity.

No sooner had this taken place, than a sudden friendship sprang up between Napoleon the Third and Sardinia. The "eldest son" of the Church joined in an alliance with an excommunicated sovereign! The French troops fought side by side with men who were under the interdict of Rome; these are most significant events! It is evident that a change has taken place in the policy of France. Napoleon is swerving away from Rome and forming an indepedency for himself. He is allied with excommunicated Sardinia, and half Protestant England; here observe the first gleams of the approaching meteor, the first rise of the Eighth Head. He is no longer a mere tool of Popery, or a mere Romanist agent; he is beginning to defy the Pope, and to set up for himself. This is evident from his alliance with Sardinia, formed at the moment when that kingdom was at war with Popery. We see, then, that the French Emperor is slowly and cautiously throwing aside the old skin of Romanism; and, like the serpent, which he resembles, stealing into the light of day in the new and dazzling colors of the Last Apostasy. The old serpent of the book of Revelation is to do the same. (chap. 17.)

This alliance with Sardinia is in every way remarkable; it is not only military, but religious. It proves that the Emperor is no longer Papist—and most certainly he is not Protestant—he is, therefore, now in his STATE OF TRANSITION; he is now passing over from Romanism to the Last Apostasy—he is not at present either one thing or the other. His Popish character is gone, since he makes a friend of Sardinia; and a system of final apostasy is not yet matured, for the time has not yet arrived. We may now consider that we are looking on that critical movement; that isthmus between the two great deeps—the transition from Romanism to Antichristianism—from the Papal Antichrist to the Eigth Head. This period is highly important, as well as interesting, as it seems to be the last warning to Christendom—the LAST DAY OF GRACE that is still left us. When Antichrist is once fully developed it may be too late; now or never let Christendom be on its guard; lest it be ensnared by the wiles of the Man of Sin! But of amendment there is not the least prospect. Christendom is doomed to a just destruction; the Lord will spue the false Church out of his mouth—Protestantism especially—because its corruptions are incurable.

We only address these words to the true people of God, whether Protestant or not Protestant; they, no doubt, will take warning in time, that they may "flee from the wrath to come."

Returning to the immediate subject of this number, we wish particularly to draw attention to the snare which the devil is at this instant preparing for PROTESTANTISM. It is most artfully conceived, and is imposing upon every one. The "Record," the organ of the Evangelical party, has been quite captivated; the "Standard" is, of course, imposed upon, as it always is: Evangelicals and all are equally deceived. Satan's lie has been mistaken for God's truth! The advance from bad to worse has been mistaken for the progress from worse to better. Such is the State of Protestantism; nor is it to be wondered at. Can we expect that the Spirit of God would attend upon those who (like their organ, the "Record") have cast off the very decencies of Christianity, and cry out for blood and destruction, as loudly as the ancient Romans at their feasts of gladiators? Certainly not; for "all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword," or by the results of the "sword."

The French Emperor, having formed an alliance with the excommunicated King of Sardinia, is now looked upon as a "man of progress," as a secret enemy to Popery. His ally, the King of Sardinia, is now looked upon as a "man of progress," as a secret enemy to Popery. His ally, the King of Sardinia, being at open war with Rome, and being placed under the bann of the Roman Church, is of course, regarded as almost Protestant; for the religion of Protestant Europe consists in nothing else but the mere hatred of Popery. Consequently, all Protestant Europe has fixed its eyes upon the two monarchs of France and Sardinia, as the two "Men of the Age," as the future champions of the Protestant movement! There are multitudes of well-meaning persons, who, whenever they see hostility to Popery, mistake that hostility for the love of TRUTH. With the history of the world before them, they still continue to believe in the fable of human progress. The whole history of the world, as well as the word of God, tells us of nothing but progress to destruction; and yet they still believe in a progress of improvement. These worthy people forget that Mahomet himself was a bitter enemy to the false churches of his own day; and yet Mahomet was not much of a Protestant reformer. He was both a false prophet and a man of blood; yet his enmity to false churches made him look at first, like a Protestant reformer. Now, the Emperor Napoleon and the King of Sardinia are exactly in the position of Mahomet. They are men of war—men of ambition—and enemies, more or less, to a false church. But does it follow that they are friends of truth, and on the side of God? No more than the impostor of Mecca! They are only looking to their worldly interests, and not the cause of truth; yet vast is the excitement produced by this gleam of sunshine. We expect first to protestantize Italy through the King of Sardinia; and then to break Russia in pieces, as the usual and apostolic method for teaching her to be as Christian as ourselves. In the latter case we may easily succeed; we may teach the Russians to be as Christian as the French, or even the English, without sending them a single missionary. Reviling and killing them is precisely the best way for teaching them such Christianity. But in Italy, we are doomed to disappointment. The Italian revolution is simply one comp'ete apostasy. It consists in the hatred of all religions and governments alike; it demands equality for all opinions as for all persons; every man is to do what is right in his own eyes; he may be a Protestant or an atheist; he may import Bibles or import blasphemies, just as he prefers; there is to be no distinction between good and evil; the bounds between truth and falsehood are to be swept away; and God and the devil are to be placed upon the same foundation. This is the Italian principle, and the new religion of all revolutionary Europe. Do you call this Protestantism? Is this a progress towards perfection? It is the very master piece of infernal art—the last apostasy of which man is capable. Popery, bad as it is, obliges you to reverence something; the new apostasy reverences nothing. Popery gives some shadow of precedence to the things of God; the new apostasy places all on the same level. The seven hills of Rome, though so different from Mount Zion, are a far higer position than the dreary flat—the stagnant level—the poisonous morass of UNIVERSAL EQUALITY—that new apostasy which equally respects the atheism of France, the hero-worship of Germany, and the gospel of Christ. A dead level is as poisonous in religion as it is in nature.

Yet multitudes of well meaning people are deceived by this profession of liberality. Because you are permitted to introduce the Bible, they think that all is right; and astonishing are the fine promises which we hear at religious meetings. May God enlighten your minds; may some few, at least, escape from this horrible delusion! Do men gather grapes from brambles? The liberalism of Italy and of Europe is nothing more than that abhorred principle, that all things are equal, both in heaven and earth, and under the earth—that God, and man, and Satan, are all on the same level, and that it is a matter of taste which we are to follow. We protest that it would be safer to turn Mahometan, than to turn liberal. It is safer to reverence anything than nothing—to believe in the paradise of Mahomet than in the annihilation" of the new apostasy. If once we form an alliance with this hideous principle, we shall be swept away by the stream—hurried on past all the landmarks of salvation, and lost in the shoreless seas of eternity. And this will be the end of the present age, and of its boasted reformation.

There can be no doubt that an extraordinary change is at hand throughout all Western Christendom. In the first place, this country has been long considered (at least by ourselves) as the bulwark of Protestant truth; yet we are now joined in a firm alliance with Mahometan Turkey, and Popish-infidel France (we speak of France as a nation, not of individuals,) and we have endowed Popish establishments. Protestant Germany has become almost entirely apostate. It has cast off even the first principles of truth, under the influence of NEOLOGY, which denies the miracles, the doctrines, and even the inspiration of Scripture, and makes the atonement itself a mere shadow; so that Protestant Germany is actually more apostate than Popish Germany itself. To deny the atonement of Christ, and the truth of Scripture, is more fatal to the soul than even to worship the Virgin Mary; for those who believe in the Virgin, must necessarily believe in her divine Son; but the Neology of Germany believes in nothing but its own vile heresies, and worships nothing but the fallen spirit of man. Thus everywhere Protestantism has become apostate, and is ripe for destruction. The apostasy of Protestantism has been unveiled by God, and it now stands undisguised before the world. Scarce had it reached this point, when the Snare was set. Our beloved ally, in whom we blindly trust, invited to his court the excommunicated King of Sardinia. With him it is well known, he has concerted a plan for the entire subjugation of Italy. The Sardinian army, now in the Crimæ, is to return to Italy, by-and-by, as the vanguard of an Italian revolutionary army, which is to bring all that superb country under the dominion of the King ot Sardinia and his master, the Emperor Napoleon. This plot will soon be ripe, and Napoleon will become supreme sovereign of Italy, and Emperor of Rome, with his vassal kings governing in his name. The same King of Sardinia has paid a visit to the Queen, and has been most enthusiastically welcomed by all classes of Englishmen. But who is this King of Sardinia? He is the heir of the House of Stuart, in the female line, and Pretender to the Crown of England. What he and the Emperor may have been plotting between them it is not difficult to conjecture. But why has he been so enthusiastically received? Because he pretends to be a liberal, and because he has quarrelled with the Pope. But a man may pretend to be a liberal, and yet be in reality a tyrant—like his ally, Napoleon the Third? A man may quarrel with the Pope, and yet be an infidel, or an apostate, like thousands of men, from Voltaire down to Ronge; yet our English Protestants are perfectly satisfied with the empty profession of mere Anti-Popery. Finding this, they desire no more; headlong they rush into the snare, and cheer and applaud, and follow every impostor who sets up on his own account, under the sign of the "Pope in Purgatory." That alone is enough. Even the infidel Ronge was held up as an angel of light, without the slightest evidence in his favor but his enmity to Popery. The King of Sardinia is no more a Protestant than Ronge! He is only setting up on his own account, in opposition to his former master, the Pope, and bidding high for customers. The Pope requires some faith in divine things, the new apostasy requires none. Popery worships something in heaven, the new apostasy worships only the fallen spirit of man; and, therefore, worships the devil, (the author of its fall.) Do you call this Protestantism? It is the subtlest essence of Satanic wickedness. Will you trust in men who profess such liberalism? Then you cast off all trust in God, who abhors it.

The Family.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

"I'll not live in this way!" exclaimed Mrs. Lyon, passionately. Such disorder, wrangling, and irregularity, rob me of my peace, and make the house a bedlam instead of a quiet home. "Tom!" she spoke sharply to a bright fellow who was pounding away with a wooden hammer, on a chair, and making a most intolerable din, "stop that noise this instant! And you, Em, not a word more from your lips. If you can't live in peace with your sister, I'll separate you. D'ye hear? hush this instant."

"Then make Julia give me my pincushion. She's got it in her pocket."

"It's no such thing, I haven't," retorted Julia.

"You have, I say."

"I tell you I haven't."

"Will you hush?"

The face of Mrs. Lyon was fiery red, she stamped upon the floor, as she spoke.

"I want my pin-cushion. Make Jule give me my pin-cushion."

"Irritated beyond control, Mrs. Lyon caught Jule by the arm, and thrusting her hand into her pocket, drew out a piece of lace and a penknife.

"I told you it wasn't there, couldn't you believe me?"

This impertinence was more than the mother could endure; and acting upon her indignant impulses, she boxed the ears of Julia soundly, conscious at the same time that Emily was chiefly to blame for all of this trouble, by a wrong accusation of her sister; she turned upon her also, administering to her likewise, an equal punishment. Frightened by all this, the younger children, whose incessant noise for the last half hour, had contributed to the overthrow of their mother's temper, became suddenly quiet, and skulked away into the corners; and the baby that was seated on the floor between two pillows, curved her quivering lips, and glancing fearfully up at the distorted face in which she had been used to see the the love-light that made her heaven.

A deep quiet followed this burst of passion like the hush which succeeds the storm. Alas, for the evil traces that were left behind! Alas, for the repulsive image of that mother, daguerreotyped in an instant, on the memory of her children and never to be effaced. How many, many times in after years, will not a sigh heave in their bosoms as that painful reflection looks out upon them from amid the dear remembrances of childhood.

A woman with good impulses, but with scarcely any self control, was Mrs. Lyon. She loved her children and desired their good. That they showed so little forbearance one with another, manifested so little fraternal feeling, grieved her deeply.

"My whole life is made unhappy by it," she would often say, "what is to be done? It is dreadful to think of a family grown up in disorder and disunion. Sister at variance with sister, and brother lifting his hand against brother."

As was usual after the ebullition of passion, Mrs. Lyon deeply depressed in spirits, as well as discouraged, retired from her family to grieve and weep. Lifting the frightened baby from the floor, she drew its head tenderly against her bosom, and leaving the nursery, sought the quiet of her room. There in repentance and humiliation, she recalled the stormy scene through which she had just passed, and blamed herself for yielding blindly to passion, instead of meeting the trouble among her children with a quiet discrimination.

To weeping, calmness succeeded. Still she was perplexed, in mind, as grieved at her own want of control. What was to be done with her children? How were they to be governed aright? Painfully did she feel her own unfitness for the task. By this time the baby was asleep, and the mother felt something of that tranquil peace that every true mother knows, when a young babe is slumbering on her bosom. A book lay on the shelf near where she was sitting, and Mrs. Lyon, scarcely conscious of the act, reached out her hand for the volume. She opened without feeling any interest in its contents, but she had read only a few sentences when this remark arrested her attention:

"All right government of children begins with self-government."

The words seemed written for her, and the truth expressed was elevated instantly into perception. She saw it in the clearest light, and closed the book and bowed her head in sad acknowledgement of her own errors. Thus for some time she [illegible] been sitting, when the murmur of the voice from below grew more and more distinct and she was soon aroused to the painful fact, that, as usual, when left alone, the children were in a wrangle among themselves. Various noises, as of pounding, and throwing chairs and other pieces of furniture, were heard, and at length a loud scream, mingled with angry vociferations, smote upon her ears.

Indignation swelled instantly in the heart of Mrs. Lyon; hurriedly placing the sleeping baby in its crib, she started for the scene of disorder, moved by an impulse to punish severely the young rebels against authority, and was half way down stairs, when her feet were checked by a remembrance of the sentiment, "All right government of children begins with self-government."

"Will anger subdue anger? When storm meets storm, is the tempest stilled?" These were questions asked of herself almost involuntarily. "This is no spirit in which to meet my children. It never has, and never will enforce obedience," she added, as she stood upon the stairs, struggling with herself and striving for victory. From the nursery came louder sounds of disorder. How weak the mother felt! Yet in this very weakness was strength.

"I must not stand idle here," she said, as a sharper cry of anguish smote on her ears, and so she moved on quickly, and opening the nursery door stood revealed to her children. Julia had just raised her hand to strike Emily, who stood confronting her with a fiery face. Both were a little startled at their mother's sudden appearance, and both expecting the storm which usually came at such times, began to assume the defiant, stubborn air with which her intemperate reproofs were always met.

A few moments did Mrs. Lyon stand looking at her children—grief, not anger, upon her pale countenance. How still all became. What a look of wonder came gradually into the children's faces, as they glanced one at the other. Something of shame was next visible. And now the mother was conscious of a new power over the young rebels of her household.

"Emily," said she, speaking mildly, and yet with a touch of sorrow in her voice, she could not subdue, "I wish you would go up into my room and sit with Mary while she sleeps."

Without a sign of opposition or even of reluctance, Emily went quietly from the nursery, in obedience to her mother's desire.

"This room is very much in disorder, Julia."

Many times had Mrs. Lyon said, under similar circumstances, "Why don't you put things to rights?" or "I never saw such girls! If all the room was topsy-turvey, and the floor an inch thick with dirt, you'd never turn over a hand to put things in order," or, "go and get the broom this moment, and sweep up the room." Many, many times, as we have said, had such language been addressed by Mrs. Lyon, under like circumstances to Julia and her sisters, without producing anything but a grumbling, partial execution of her wishes. But now the mild intimation that the room was in disorder, produced the effects desired. Julia went quickly about the restoring of things to the right places, and in a few minutes order was apparent where confusion reigned before. Little Tommy, whose love of hammering was an incessant annoyance to his mother, ceased his din on her sudden appearance, and for a few moments stood in expectation of a boxed ear; for a time he was puzzled to know the new aspect of affairs. Finding that he was not under the ban as usual, he commenced slapping a stick over the top of an old table, producing a most ear-piercing noise. Instantly Julia said in a low voice to him,

"Don't Tommy, don't do that. You know it makes mother's head-ache."

"Does it make your head ache, mother?" asked the child, curiously, and with a pitying tone in his voice as he came creeping up to his mother's side, and looking at her as if in doubt whether he would be repulsed or not.

"Sometimes it does, my son," replied Mrs. Lyon, kindly, "and it is always unpleasant. Wont you try to play without making so much noise?"

"Yes, mother, I'll try," answered the little fellow, cheerfully. "But I'll forget sometimes."

He looked earnestly at his mother, as if something else was in his thoughts.

"Well, dear, what else?" said she, encouragingly.

"When I forget, you will tell me, wont you?

"And then I'll stop. But don't scold me, mother, for then I can't stop."

Mrs. Lyon's heart was touched. She caught her breath and bent her face down to conceal its expression, until it rested on the silken hair of the child.

"Be a good boy, Tommy, and mother will never scold you any more," she murmured gently in his ear.

His arms stole upwards, and they were closely twined about her neck; he pressed his lips tightly against her cheek, thus sealing his part of the contract with a kiss.

How sweet to the mother's taste were those first fruits of self-control. In the effort to govern herself, what a power had she acquired. In stilling the tempest of passion in her own bosom, she had poured the oil of peace over the storm-fretted hearts of her children.

Only first fruits were these. In all her after days did that mother strive with herself, ere she entered into a contest with the inherited evils of her children, and just so far she was able to overcome evil in them. Often, very often, was self-resistance only a slight effort, but the feeble influence for good that flowed from her words or actions whenever this was so, warned her of error, and prompted a more vigorous self-control. Need it be said that she had an abundant reward?

Camp-Meeting.

Bro. Munger writes:—That several are inquiring whether we are not intending to have a camp-meeting in the latter part of Summer or the fore part of Autumn? It is thought much good might be done.

He says Wilbraham has been named as a place that would accommodate the Brn. in New England, as well as any locality. It is wished that the matter may be considered, and a decision made soon.

It seems desirable, to say the least, that we should have a GENERAL gathering somewhere within a few months, if time continue.

We wish our brethren would speak freely, and PROMPTLY.

Bro. Munger suggests that the 18th of August would be a good time to commence.

Would not the 18th be rather early for the farmers?

No doubt our brethren from the villages and cities would prefer that the meeting be no later than the date mentioned.

Bro. Munger has had great experience in camp meetings, and we should feel much confidence in his judgment, as to time and place.

Several of our Brethren have been convinced for some months, and ALL now seem to be agreed in the opinion that we should have a GENERAL CONFERENCE, where the only test of fellowship shall be Christian CHARACTER, rather than belief in some disputed point in theology; and that ALL who love the Lord and his truth, be invited to attend, that we may co-operate together in Christian harmony to aid each other in passing through these last day perils.

It has been remarked that there was no place where such a Conference could be held at present, unless we had it at a camp-meeting.

If there is a place where our Brn. could provide entertainment for a general conconference, it is wished that the information might be given, and the matter presented to those interested.

If there is no church that feels able to bear the responsibility of a Conference, will it not be best to unite our efforts, and have a GENERAL CONFERENCE at the camp-meeting proposed.

We wish our Brn. would forward immediately an expression of their feelings on this subject, so that if it be thought best to have the meeting, as suggested by Bro. Munger and others, all can arrange to be present and share in its blessings.

Note.

The article in our last, headed "What is Truth," should have been credited to J. D. MERRIAM.

Quotations.

We wish to say a word to our correspondents relative to quotations. When you insert a passage of Scripture in your articles, be sure and write it word for word as you find it in the BIBLE.

Never put quotation marks to an extract from any writer, unless his language is given verbatim.

When you omit a portion between two extracts, signify it by three or four periods placed between the different quotations.

Do not fail to observe these points.

Be PARTICULAR. Have it right.

☞ We hope all will read the article on "Popular Infidelity of To-day." We think it a true picture of the popular sentiment.

An Appeal.

We publish the following appeal in compliance with a request from the committee of the Advent Watchman:

TO THE READERS OF THE "CRISIS."

We commend the following communication from Bro. Turner, to the serious and prayerful consideration of every reader of the Crisis. All that have been interested in the Advent cause well know, that no one in the ranks has done more for its advancement, and sacrificed more than Bro. Turner; and was he now able to pay his honest debts, he never would have made this appeal.

Now dear Brn. the question is, shall we make one more effort to render him aid, for he is really poor, and suffering for the want of help; or shall we turn a deaf ear to his appeal, and deline, or neglect to extend the help so much needed. Could he get his honest dues, he could pay his debts and would not be reduced to the necessity of this appeal, and we sincerely hope, and can but believe that it will be responded to at once, and that, too, liberally, by all looking for Him who has taught us through his apostle, that it is "more blessed to give than to receive." Let those that have but little, give little; and those that have much give as the Lord hath prospered them.

We hope the preaching Brn. will feel an interest, and do all they can to render this appeal successful. All money received will be credited in the Crisis.

It may not be generally known that Bro. Turner's health is poor, more so than formerly, and that he is unable to much fatigue. He has worn himself out in the cause, and we confidently hope that the Brn. and Srs. will not let him appeal for help in vain. Let every reader say I will give all that I can and give it now, then his pressing wants will be speedily supplied, as they should be, and none will fail of their reward; for "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of them, ye have done it unto me," saith the Master.

S. S. ROGERS.
D. CRARY.

Hartford, June 20th, 1856.

DEAR BRN. CRARY AND ROGERS:—It has become my duty to report to you the success which has attended your effort the last winter, to achieve the payment of the debt the Watchman Association were owing me, by individual donations made directly to me.

Your appeal to the church reached a few warm hearts, which at once responded liberally to your call, but, only little has as yet been done. In all our effort, we have received only 87 dollars of the 872 dollars due me; hence, there is still due me, a balance of 785 dollars.

You, Brn., as Executive Committee of the Association, know that this debt is really due me, and you know, too, that I have long been, and still am distressed for want of this money, and that I ought to be paid at once.

I therefore make this report to you, that you may know how much is still due me, that if aught can be done to pay me all, or a considerable portion of said debt, it may be done as speedily as possible.

You, Brn., personally know my present poverty, and you know how intensely I have suffered for want of this my honest due; you know that I can never recover from my present embarassment, unless a part of this debt is paid me, and paid me soon; and I trust that you will do all in your power that I may be paid, in part, a least; it cannot be that the church are willing that I should suffer this loss alone, or that I should suffer it any longer.

Yours respectfully, J. TURNER.

If there are any of our readers who are indebted for the Watchman, we hope that this pressing call for what is honestly due Eld. Turner, will prompt them to forward the money at once, to aid in relieving him of his oppressive burden; and we hope, too, that all others, who can, will forward their donations for this object.—ED.

A New and Timely Book.

SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS A SATANIC DELUSION AND A SIGN OF THE TIMES, By WILLIAM RAMSEY, Pastor of the Cedar St. Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, EDITED with a preface, by H. L. HASTINGS, Peacedale, R. I.—Published by H. L. HASTINGS. 1856.

This is undoubtedly the best work extant on this question upon which so much paper and ink has been wasted.

THE FIRST CHAPTER contains—Introduction—Satan—His existence—Agents—varied wiles—Their adaptation to each other—His great experience and wisdom—Prophecy foretells his overthrow.

THE SECOND CHAPTER—The case stated—To the Law and the Testimony—Satan's fall—His access to Heavenly places—His great power—Subjection to divine control—His agents and subordinates can take possession of men in the flesh—Their malice will be more intense just before the coming of the Lord—"Watch ye therefore"—His working.

I. In Eden. 1. Possessed an animal. 2 Controlled it for the time and changed its character. 3. Deceived an innocent person—Caused her to suppose her converse was with an animal when it was with Satan.

II. Job's case. 1. Satan prompts men to rob. 2. Controlls electricity in an unheard of manner. 3. Controls the winds. 4. Produces bodily and mental disease. Satanic manifestations common to Jews and Gentiles—as common now as ever. SATAN. Meaning of the term—His titles—One satan—Many demons—New Testament possessions—The man in the tombs—Author has frequently lodged in them when a missionary in Judea—The demons expelled—Swine drowned— Men loved swine more than Christ. The demoniac in the synagogue—His cure—The Spirit of infirmity—Woman bound by Satan for eighteen years—Mary Magdalene—Modern manifestations—Facts undeniable and various—A scene in India witnessed by the author; A sacrifice to the devil; The priestess possessed by spirits; Opinion of Hindoos; Of Mohammedans; A boy possessed; The "Bhoots" or demons; A converted demoniac; "I believe in Jesus, and they don't hurt me any more;" A demon cast out by Joseph Wolff near Cabul; Witchcraft; Satan controlled the excitement and brought reproach on the gospel: Present forms of satanic manifestation; Rapping; Writing; A medium in Philadelphia; "Who moves the hand?" "The devil." Possessions; Sàrah J.; Prof. Webster; An evil spirit cast out; "In the name of the Lord, I beseech you to leave her; Wonders at Buffalo.

THE THIRD CHAPTER. The theories.

What is the cause?

Witchery? Ventriloquism? Galvanism? Electricity? Odic force?

All these insufficient.

The human will?

No.

The spiritualists' theory.

Spirits of the dead—Spheres; Mediums; Spirit theology; 1st, concerning God. 2nd, Christ, and 3d, the Bible. "Doctrines of demons."

What are the spirits? Are they angels? Meaning of the term; Various uses; Some angels have sinned; Cast to Tartarus, or the "Verge of this material system"; Angels ancient—innumerable; Not the spirits of just men; Angels have power; Can communicate; Can roll stones; Unlock and re-lock doors; cannot evil angels do the same?

THE FOURTH CHAPTER. The truth. What are these manifestations?

1. They are not diseases; diseases don't scare swine "a good way off.

2. They are not good angels; they are all engaged in a very different work.

3. They are not the spirits of the dead.

1. If spirits are in heaven, then they are not here.

2, If they are in an intermediate state, they are not here.

3. If they sleep, they are not here.

Departed men have appeared; Scriptural examples.

I. All these were good.

2. All appeared personally.

3. All appeared bodily.

They do not come now; revelation is filled up for this age; Angels shall be manifest again by-and-by.

What are demons? Opinions of the heathen; A few believed them to be spirits of dead men; (Hesiod, Homer) most thought otherwise; Thales, Plato, Apulius, Plutarch Lucian, Josephus.

Faith of primitive christians. Heathen divided in opinions; Christians agreed; Early christians believed in demoniacal possessions; they believed that demons were fallen angels under the control of satan; Justin Martyr; Irenus; Tatian; Theophilus Antiochenus; Tertullian; Cyprian; Arnobus; Lactantius; Eusebius. Those demons were then subject to Christ's name; Testimonies; Ignatius; Theophilus; Iræneus; Origen; Cyprian; Lactantius.

The demons give evidence of their true character; nine proofs of this fact; Spirits are now subject to Christ's name; Wicked men are not; Spirit's power for evil; They are emissaries of satan; Five proofs of this position; An objection, "They do some good;" The object of this; There is wisdom here; These manifestations specially adapted to our age; Be not ignorant of his devices; Why these things now? The kingdom at hand; Satan would forestall Christ's work; A sign of the near approach of our Lord; Spiritualism not new; Witch of Endor; Not Samuel for eight reasons—probably Satan, the communication was partly false as usual.

Conclusion—Our duty; A warning voice; Duty to spiritualists; Admonitions; "The God of peace shall bruise satan under your feet shortly."

The foregoing is a sketch of the contents of this interesting work. We expect it to have a wide circulation, and trust that it will do much good. The editor and publisher feels that he can most heartily commend it to his Brn., and the public generally.

It is a 12mo. volume, neatly bound in cloth gilt, and will be sent by mail post paid on receipt of the price, fifty cents. Copies in paper covers will be sent by mail, post paid, for 38 cents, or three copies for one dollar. Price bound, $37 per 100, paper, $25.

Immediate orders are solicited with the cash. Direct to H. L. Hastings.

Peacedale, R. I.

 Will Brn. who are owing me for tracts and books. please to remit such funds as they have to spare. I have just issued about 20,000 tracts. The printer, and paper makers must be paid, and I had to get these tracts printed to supply the places of those that I furnished to you.

Come, Brn., pay up if convenient, or else I may have to pray God to give you the grace of punctuality.

For the Crisis.

What is Truth?

BY J. D. MERRIAM.

No II.

Will the wicked live forever in misery? "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "The wages of sin is death." "These shall go away into everlasting punishment." "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power." "For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." "Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea; and all that do wickedly shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them UP, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." "They shall be as though they had not been." "And the fearful and unbelieving—shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." Having no immortality, they must perish. "Whose end is destruction." Their end, how dreadful! Let us avoid it.

Will there be a millennium before the Lord comes, in which the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea? "In the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word shall be established."

Daniel the prophet saw four kingdoms rise up, one after another, and he saw the fourth divided into ten parts, and another rose up in the midst of them called a little horn, which had eyes, and a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies. He says—"I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints and prevailed against them until the ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Should there be a millennium before the Ancient of days comes, there must must be a little horn in it, making war and prevailing against the saints. Such is the testimony of Daniel, and he is a good witness.

We will call another. Says Christ—"Let both (the tares and the wheat) grow together till the harvest. The tares are the children of the wicked one—the good seed are the children of the kingdom, the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels. As the tares are gathered and burned, so shall it be in the end of this world. The son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." If there is to be a millennium before the end of the world, then, according to the testimony of Jesus, there must be in it, the children of the devil; and all would not know the Lord. The Savior gives no countenance to such an idea.

Paul, another witness, says to the Thessalonians, that the day of Christ will not come, "except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." "And then shall that wicked be revealed; whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."

Again he says,—"Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." Again,—"all they that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution."

What a millennium that would be, with the man of sin in it, opposing God! And who would there be to persecute; if all lived godly in Christ Jesus. Peter, another witness, says,—that in the last days there shall come "scoffers, saying, where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." He speaks of the deluge of water that overwhelmed and destroyed the old world, and of the present heavens and earth being kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men.

Other witnesses might be called to testify on this point, but we have enough to establish the fact, that the tradition, that a time of peace and prosperity for the church and world. is not sanctioned by inspired witnesses. Can any testimony be received as valid, which sets aside such witnesses as we have produced? one of them being the son of God! "Thy word is truth." "Heaven and earth shall pass away," says the Savior, "but my words shall not pass away."

One charge brought against Israel, was—they have changed the ordinance.

Have any of the ordinances of the Lord's house been changed?

Baptism was one of the ordinances instituted by the Savior, to be administered to the believer. But we find that many practice the sprinkling of infants, and also of adults, and call it baptism. How different from the example given us in the Scriptures of the manner in which the ordinance was performed. The Savior when he was baptised to fulfill all righteousness, went down into the water, and came up out of the water; as also did the eunuch, when Philip baptised him. These examples and others lead us to the conclusion, that baptism is performed by the immersion of the believer in water; "buried with him by baptism," instead of having a few drops sprinkled upon the forehead.

"In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines, the commandments of men." There is then, a vain worship, consisting in yielding obedience to the requirements of men instead of the command of God. The prophet Isaiah says—"that their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men."

For the Crisis.

Popular Infidelity of To-Day.

Bro. Grant:—I send you the following from the pen of J. C. Ryle, hoping that it may be the means of stimulating and strengthening the mind of the brethren in this dark and perilous hour, to hold fast the word of God, which is, if obeyed, "able to save our souls." Like Bro. E. Burnham I can say, that sooner than countenance the solemn, fashionable mockery, called religion at the present day; I would "dwell alone in the desert and sleep in the woods!"

If there is or ever was a people on the face of the earth that ought to feel thankful to Almighty God, they are, in my humble opinion, those who have heard "the joyful sound"—"Behold the bridegroom cometh," and have come out from among these proud and wicked professors, who scoff at and ridicule the doctrine of the immediate and personal coming of our blessed Jesus; and the many other glorious truths which have cheered our hearts for a number of years past: it is those who have thus far, by the grace of God, been enabled to endure, and are still with longing hearts anxiously waiting for the coming of Him, who to them is the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely. My prayer to God is, that we may more fully appreciate his goodness in bringing us safely thus far amid the storms which have so often threatened our destruction, and who has brought us to the glorious position which we now occupy.

May the good Lord deliver me from attributing this work to the arm of flesh, and thus questioning the wisdom of the Almighty.

W. C. Peck.

Buffalo, May 20, '56.

"It is not atheism I fear so much in the present times, as pantheism. It is not the system which says nothing is true, so much as the system which says every thing is true. It is not the system which says there is no Savior, so much as the system which says there are many Saviors, and many ways to peace. It is the system which is so liberal that it dares not say anything is false. It is the system which is so charitable that it will allow everything to be true. It is the system which seems ready to honor other religions as well as that of our Lord Jesus Christ; to class them all together, and hope well of all who profess them. It is the system which will smile complacently on all creeds and systems of religion—the Bible and the Koran, the Hindoo Vedas and the Persian Zendavesta, the old wives fables of Rabbinical writers, and the rubbish of patristic traditions, the Racovian catechism and the Thirty-nine Articles, the Revelations of Emanuel Swedenborg, and the Book of Mormon, by Joseph Smith; all are listened to; none are denounced as lies. It is the system which is so scrupulous about the feelings of others, that we are never to say they are wrong. It is the system which is so liberal that it calls a man a bigot if he dares to say, "I know my views are right." This is the system which I desire emphatically to testify against and denounce. What is it but a sacrifice of truth upon the altar of a carricature of charity? Beware of it you who believe the Bible! Has the Lord God spoken to us in the Bible, or has he not? Has he declared to us the dangerous state of all out of that way, or has he not? Gird up the loins of your minds and look these questions fairly in the face, and give them an honest answer. Tell us there is some inspired book besides the Bible, and then we shall know what you mean. Tell us that the whole Bible is not inspired and then we shall know where to meet you. But grant for a moment that the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible is God's truth, and then I know not in what way you can escape the conclusion that sincerity alone will not save your soul. From the liberality which says everybody is right—from the charity which forbids you to say anybody is wrong—from the peace which is bought at the expense of truth—may the good Lord deliver you!"

A man who puts aside his religion because he is going into society, resembles a person taking off his shoes because he is to walk upon thorns.

He who has truth for his possession can afford to be contemned.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. J. W. Nute.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Having prayed for the assistance of God, who is the giver of every good and perfect gift, I now commence writing for the first time for the Crisis.

I have noticed of late, that in your published letters, many have closed by saying,—"Come, Lord Jesus," and come quickly. "And will not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily." I believe that deliverance is soon coming to those who endure unto the end, and are willing to be made perfect through suffering. I believe that God is with His people yet, though they have experienced severe trials within a year past. I believe that God, as in ancient time, (Deut. 8: 2.) uses means to humble us, and prove us, to know whether we will keep his commandments or no.

"Our trials here, though great they be,
Will not prevent our victory;
If we but watch, and strive, and pray,
Like soldiers in the good old way."

While darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people, the children of God have light in their dwellings even in these days; praise the Lord.

Now dear Brn. and Srs., let us be faithful, having an eye single to the glory of God; that your whole bodies may be full of light; and that there be no occasion of stumbling in us. Live like pilgrims and strangers here; for here we have no continuing city or abiding place; but we seek one to come. If we are faithful, we shall soon enter that beautiful city, the New Jerusalem. O what great rewards and blessings there will be given to those who, having kept his commandments, will have right to the tree of life, and to enter in through the gates into the city.

"We will suffer now but triumph then."

Your Bro., in the hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ.

J. W. Nute.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. J. Wilson.

Bro. Grant:—Will you have the goodness to state through the Crisis, that I am unwell for the first time in forty-nine years. I was taken sick at Greenwich R. I., and was confined to the house for forty days, during which time I lost more than thirty pounds of flesh. I then gained strength to come to Peacedale, where I have been staying for two weeks. My health continues very feeble and when I shall be able to travel again I do not know.

I am in my eightieth year, and during forty-nine years of my ministry, I have never been prevented by sickness from preaching, for a month, till the present time.

My expenses in my sickness had consumed what means I had on hand, and left me destitute, until by the kindness of friends I was enabled to reach Peacedale. I am, therefore, dependent on the mercy of God and the goodness of the people.

Till further notice, my address will be Peacedale, R. I.

My faith is still strong, and I am working for the blessed hope.

Yours in love, Jonathan Wilson.
Peacedale, R. I., June 16th, 1856.

For the Children.

The Thorn in the Pillow.

A little girl went to visit her grandmother, some distance from her mother's and father's home; she seemed very happy all day, and she had everything around her to make her happy; but when her kind grandmother went to look at her after she was asleep, she observed a tear-drop on the little girl's cheeks. "Ah," said the old lady, the next morning, you were a little homesick last night, dear."

"O, no, grandmother," Mabel replied, "I could never be home-sick here."

It was just so the next night, and the next; at length the grandmother thought as the little girl seemed troubled, she would sit in the next chamber until the child went to sleep. Presently, although Mabel was tucked up, she began to rustle up her quilt and shake her pillow, and the grandmother thought she heard a little sob; so she went to the little girl's bed, and said,

"Mabel, my child, you have got a thorn in your pillow—what is it?"

Then the little girl hid her face and began to cry aloud. The grandmother was much troubled. At length the girl said—

"O, grandmother, when I am alone here I cannot help thinking how I said, 'I wont, mother," and I cannot unsay it; and mother is so good, and loves me so, and I—I was so naughty."

Domestic Summary.

Kansas Affairs.—St. Louis, Monday, June 23. A letter from Westport, June 17, to the Republican says:

"Col. Sumner has put the California and Sante Fe routes, and all the principal roads leading through Kansas, under blockade. He has driven Buford, Jones, Shelby, and all the leading emigrants desirous of becoming peaceable settlers, out of the Territory."

Another letter from Kansas City, 16th inst. says:

"Col. Sumner intends to arrest every person under indictment in Kansas, and has declared that neither Lane nor anybody else shall come with an armed force into the Territory through Iowa, Nebraska, or other route, except over his dead body."

"On the night of the 18th inst. an attempt was made to murder the new Sheriff of Douglas County, who lives at Franklin. Three men came to his house and fired into the window at his bed; then broke open the door, when the Sheriff shot one dead and the rest fled."

The same letter states that Col Sumner had received dispatches from Fort Kearney giving him information that a band of Cheyenne Indians had joined a party of Sioux and again proclaimed war. One white had been killed. Col. Sumner immediately dispatched a company to Fort Kearney from the camp near Westport.

St. Louis, June 26. Advices from Kansas state that Gay, the agent to the Shawnees and the Wyandotte Indians, was murdered by a party of Indians on Saturday last. Mr. Gay was accompanied by his own son, who escaped severely wounded. On Monday the murderers were still undiscovered.

It is reported that Gov. Shannon has resigned the governorship, to take effect on the 1st of July. The Republican intimates that if Willard P. Hale, of Missouri, be appointed in his place, peace will be restored in the territory within thirty days.

It is reported that Mr. Brown, the editor of the Herald of Freedom, has been killed. The report comes from Westport.

It is also reported that Col. Sumner had a fight on the 19th inst. with a party of Missourians. He lost two men; several were killed and some wounded on the other side. The result was that Col. Sumner drove the party back to Missouri, and stationed troops to prevent their return.

It is further reported that Col. Sumner had refused to let a party of forty southerners come from Westport to settle on their claims at Hickory Point, where they had laid out a town.

It is also reported here, that a company of about 80 men, who recently left Chicago for Kansas, had their Sharpe's rifles and revolvers taken from them at Lexington. It is said they were very insolent on board the boat, threatening what they would do under certain contingences. No violence was offered them.

A letter to the Democrat from Lawrence, 19th, says that Deputy Sheriff Layman, at the head of 30 dragoons arrested on that day Mayor Hoyt and James Legate, and marched them to Lecompton. Layman had no papers, and on their arrival at Lecompton, Gov. Shannon refused to recognize his authority to arrest the parties, but Sheriff Jones, who stood by, seeing the dilemma of his subordinate, immediately prepared papers for the legal arrest of Hoyt and Legate, and they were imprisoned.

From Kan a Fe.—The Santa Fe mail has arrived bringing dates to May 31st.

The Navajo Indians continued their depredations, and it is thought the difficulties cannot be settled without resort to a strong military force, as an opinion seems to prevail among the Indians that their power is superior to that of the United States.

New Orleans, June 25.—The Granada brings dates from San Francisco to the 5th inst.

Casey and Cora were hung on the 22d of May, the same day on which Mr. King was buried.

The vigilance committee had arrested several other desperate characters, including the notorious Yankee Sullivan. The latter committed suicide on the 1st of June, in his cell, at the committee rooms, leaving a confession touching the elections in San Francisco.

The opponents of the vigilance committee attempted to hold a meeting on the 2d, to denounce the committee, but it proved a total failure.

Several murders in the interior are recorded.

Rumors were circulated that Gov Johnson would make a requisition to suppress the revolution, but nothing had been done as yet. These rumors, however, created much excitement throughout the State, and word was sent from the interior that a thousand men were ready to march to the assistance of the committee. Sacramento alone offered to furnish 1000.

Excitement was on the increase.

Martial law had been declared at San Francisco.

The committee were determined on carrying out their measures, and continued to make arrests.

The opposition, however, were organizing with 700 stand of arms. It was rumored they intended to attack the committee rooms, which were strongly guarded, with cannon before the door loaded with grape shot.

All the journals except the Herald side with the committee.

Kansas.—Ex-Mayor Smith writes the Gazette an interesting letter from Fort Leavenworth on the 21st inst. In regard to the troubles he says:

"As I propose leaving this territory immediately, where every one must proceed with the utmost caution to escape difficulties, that might cost him the loss of everything, even his watch and purse if not his life, a few statements may be transmitted to distant friends by way of illustrating the political circumstances and social condition of the pioneer settlers in Kansas. A voluntary guard is maintained by the inhabitants of Lawrence every night by turns. Alarms are constantly arriving from one point and another of depredations and murders. Couriers are forthwith sent off to ascertain the facts, and on their return measures are adopted according to the necessity of the case.

A man was shot dead on the first night of my arrival in town.

Inquiries were made at appropriate sources to ascertain how the money was expended which the papers say has been so liberally raised in Boston, New York, Chicago and other places, for Kansas, and the answer has uniformly been that no one knows. One gentleman in Lawrence informed me that a person who visited the East for assistance, assured him that he sent seven thousand dollars on,—but it certainly never reached Kansas. Many justly suspect the integrity of certain managers who are reputed to have fingered specific contributions. This subject should be forthwith sifted to the very bottom. I have heard severer things said than I deem it prudent to write in regard to this matter."

Mount Vesuvius, at the last dates, gave the premonitory signs of a violent eruption. The esplanade upon the summit, usually reached without danger, is now inaccessible on account of the sulphurious suffocating air. The noise is also alarming.

Great distress for want of food prevails at many of the outposts of Newfoundland. Large numbers of the people were in a state of actual starvation. Extensive provision was made by the Legislature, during its session, for the destitute class; but it is reported that the sufferers at the outposts have not received their fair share of this provision.

An English lady left a daughter at Rome, and on the tomb—which was in the English Protestant cemetery—she wished to have the verse from St Matthew, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," inscribed; but it appears that some officer connected with the censorship entered the workshop of the statuary who was working at the tomb, and forbade him inscribing more than the first half of the verse, as he said it was neither right nor just that heretics should see the Lord.

The Journal of Commerce comments upon the cost of the war, to the allies, $400,000,000 to England, and as much more to France, to say nothing of Turkey and Sardinia. Including the Russian expenditure, the cost is supposed to be two thousand million dollars.

New Orleans, June 16.—The following six steamers were destroyed by fire last night, at Algiers:—Frank Lyon, Louisa Whitman, New Latona, D. S. Stacy, Delia and Piota. Loss about $250,000.

Curious Facts relative to the Bible.—There are in the Bible 66 books, 1189 chapters, 31,173 verses, 773,692 words, and 3,567,180 letters. The middle and shortest chapter in the Bible is the 117th Psalm. The middle verse is the 8th of the 118th Psalm. The longest book is the Psalms, and the longest chapter is the 119th Psalm. The alphabet may be traced in Ezra 7: 21. The 19th chapter of 2 Kings and the 37th chapter of Isaiah are alike. The 14th and 53d Psalms are alike, save the 5th verse. The shortest verse of the Old Testament is 1 Chron. 1: 25; the shortest of the New Testament is John 11: 35.

The Bible was not divided until modern times into chapters and verses; the chapters have been attributed to Lanfranc, Archbishop of Canterbury, A. D. 1070; and also Stephen Langton, Archbishop of the same. See A. D. 1206; but the real author of this division, in the opinion of most, was Cardinal Hugo de Sancto Caro, A. D. 1236.

The facility of reference thus afforded was increased by the introduction of verses; this was done for the Old Testament in the original Hebrew by a Jewish Rabbi, Mordecai Nathan, A. D. 1445; and for the New Testament A. D. 1545, by Robert Stephens, a French printer, and, it is said, was done by him as a matter of recreation while on horseback.

The Hebrews.—Congress has lately passed an act granting to the Hebrew congregation in Washington, all the rights and privileges enjoyed by the Christian churches in the same city. The disability thus removed has been thoughtlessly permitted to exist since the foundation of the government, until brought to the attention of th eUnited States, a few weeks ago by General Cass.

In Great Britain, the House of Commons have agreed to an alteration of the Parliamentary oath, so that Jews may not be obstructed in their qualification as members of that body. If the House of Lords assents, it is said that the consequences will be quite important.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Asia.

WARLIKE PREPARATIONS IN ENGLAND.

There is much excitement in England respecting American affairs.

The London Times and the Morning Post, both government organs, demand, in offensive terms, the dismissal of Mr. Dallas, but it is not supposed he will be dismissed.

Meantime, Liverpool and Manchester have issued a Peace Circular addressed to the citizens of America, and the feelings of the people seem more active and more general in favor of peace.

The government, however, talks in a hostile tone. Both Palmerston and Clarendon stated in Parliament, on Friday evening, that they had not then made up their minds whether Mr. Dallas should be dismissed or not.

Lord John Russell has given special notice that on Monday he would move an inquiry as to what is the intention of the British government on this question, as much as the almost universal feeling of the British people is in favor of peace.

Palmer was hung on Saturday morning. He died without a struggle. He made no confession.

The steamer Fulton, with the news of Mr. Crampton's dismissal, arrived at Southampton on Saturday morning, 14.

The articles in the London Times and Post on Mr. Crampton's dismissal, are studiously offensive, and demand the dismissal of Dallas, and the application of force to the United States. The commercial and manufacturing classes, however, are filled with anxiety at the terrible consequences of a war with the United States, and are moving actively to avert the calamity.

The Manchester Peace Address to the citizens of the United States, received 8000 signatures in a few hours.

Meantime, several ships of war have been telegraphed to prepare with all possible despatch for foreign service—destination supposed to be the coast of America

All the commanders of the gunboats at Portsmouth have also been called to the Port Admirals, as was rumored, to receive instructions for active service, at telegraphic notice.

TURKEY.

The protest of Russia against Mouklis Pasha as one of the Turkish Commissioners on the new Bessarabian frontier may lead to great difficulties. Mouklis Pasha the Moldavian Prince Stourdza, is a general of division in the Turkish service, and a Christian. The Turkish Ministry have declared the Russian protest inadmissible, and are said to be supported by the Western Powers in so doing.

It is estimated that the inundation in France rendered 40,000 people houseless, and 100,000 thrown out of employment. Notwithstanding the flood, it was hoped the corn crop would not be much below the average. It was reported in Berlin that Prussia and Sardinia both demanded to be admitted into the commission for the organization of the Danubian Principalities, and that the demand had been acceeded to.

It is stated that the Austrian government had resolved to erect the Longbards Venitian Provinces into the kingdom of Upper Italy.

Arabia is still in a state of insurrection, refusing to longer recognize the rule of the Sultan.

More Turkish outrages against Christians are reported.

Crimean letters to May 31, mention the report that 70,000 masons are to rebuild Sebastopol after the departure of the Allies.

THE SCRIPTURE DOCTRINE
FUTURE PUNISHMENT.
By H. H. Dobney,
Baptist Minister, of England.
Fourth Edition.
WITH AN APPENDIX ON
THE STATE OF THE DEAD,
By John Milton,
Author of "Paradise Lost."

1 Vol. 12 Mo., 310 Pages. Price 75 Cents.

This is one of the most impt works ever issued upon this solemn subject. Clear, forcible, and sometimes eloquent in his language, the author surveys the whole field, and presents his arguments and examines objections with the facility of "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The style is calm and Christian, a rare excellence in a controversial work. The Universalist, the skeptic, and the infidel, will find here that while the truths they hold are admitted in al their force, yet the reasonableness of revelation and the retribution therein revealed can not be denied. And the believer in the doctrine of the Eternal agony of the multitudes of the Lost, will find that objections to that opinion exist in the word of God, no less serious than those which arise from the calm consideration of the subject in the light of human reason.

Let all obtain and read this work with care, and we shall await with confidence the verdict of the candid and unprejudiced.

The volume is an elegant 12mo., and contains besides the views of the poet Milton, who, with Luther, Tindale, Bishop Law and Archbishop Whately, defends the doctrine of unconsciousness in death.

It will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the price, 75 cents.

For sale at the Crisis office, Boston; P. Richardson, 177 8th Avenue, New York; George T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis, but Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and we have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, [illegible] advertisement to the public.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

The Better World.

BY W. SHELDON.

A world of rest and sweet delight,
Where joy and peace shall bloom;
Doth now the weary saint invite,
And bids him journey on.

Here nothing blooms but will decay,
Bright gems their lustre lose;
The fairest flowers soon fade away—
Such scenes we will not choose?

Here, eyes that glow with feeble light,
In quest of earthly joys,
Must soon grow lusterless as night,
For here death soon destroys.

The beating pulse and heaving breast
Must soon be motionless;
Inactive, cold and silent rest,
In the embrace of death.

But in that happy world to come,
The saints will die no more;
There immortality is won.
And suffering scenes are o'er.

The Christian's Hope.

Selected for the Crisis—BY A. M. STARK.

What supports the pilgrim's feet,
As wearied on he goes?
'Tis the recollection sweet,
His journey soon shall close.

Does the seaman's heart elate
When tempests round him roar?
'Tis the thought of those that wait
To welcome him on shore.

Thus when strength the saint forsakes,
To him this staff is given,
That every weary step he takes,
Approaches nearer heaven.

Above the roar of trouble's sea,
He listening, seems to hear
The sounds of angel minstrelsy
That tell him—Heaven is near.

Reason and Religion.

"Dim as the borrowed beams of moon and stars
To lonely, weary, wandering travellers,
Is reason to the soul; and as on high,
Those rolling fires discover but the sky,
(Not light us here,) so reason's glimmering ray
Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide as upward to a better day.
And as those nightly tapers disappear
When day's bright lord ascends our hemisphere,
So pale grows reason at religion's sight;
So dies and so dissolves in supernatural light."

Doing Right.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

DEAR BRN.:—I have something serious, and very important to say to you. Will you listen to me and not get offended? Come, now do. It will be of no use to get offended, and it may do much harm. I am going to write something which, I think, is my absolute duty to write. I do not like to write such things, but the Master commands. Now let us reason together. I am much distressed in mind when I think about the condition of some of you, in this world, and solemnly fear you will not, cannot, as you now are enter the kingdom of God. It is evident that some of you have got too much of, and others think too much of this world.

Now do not start. You know the Bible reads that "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God;" that a "rich man shall hardly enter the kingdom of God;" that "if a man love the world the love of the Father is NOT IN HIM!"

Did you ever think of this seriously? But I suppose you will say this means, particularly, that we must not love fine clothes, fine houses, fine furniture, fine horses and carriages, and titles, honors, and all such.

Yes, it means that, and it means more. Where is your proof that it means part of the world? It means fine lands, fine gold, fine silver, fine bank bills, and property of any kind just as much as the other fine things; for God has made no distinction. Do not deceive yourself, dear man or woman, and damn your soul by so doing, I beseech of you.

But you say, "I am not rich."

Well, perhaps not—let us see. How much property have you got? Perhaps ten thousand dollars, perhaps four or five thousand, perhaps twenty thousand. How much of this do you spend yearly for God's cause? Perhaps four dollars out of the four thousand, five out of the five thousand, ten out of the ten thousand, or twenty out of the twenty thousand—and you call this sacrificing for God, do you?

You are looking every year for Christ, and this is all you spend to try to get your [illegible] ready to [illegible] eternal perdition! You are a poor mistaken creature as it regards your true spiritual condition. What are you getting and keeping your property for? Your children—what, and continually looking for the Lord? Do not mock God in such way, I beg of you. But some of you have no children, even, that need caring for; what then? You read that Jesus "was rich, and for our sakes became poor, that we might be rich;" but you consent, for his sake, only to part with that which you can part with without inconvenience to yourself. What cruel wickedness!

But you ask, "do you wish me to give away all my property, and turn myself and family out of doors?"

No, no. Do not speak thus unreasonably. I command you nothing; but God commands you to "sacrifice unto him with thanksgiving"—to "give alms of such things as ye have"—to "love not the world"—to "give to the poor"—to "bear one another's burdens"—to be "given to hospitality"—to be "ready to distribute"—to be "liberal"—to be "rich in good works"—in short, to consecrate your all unto him. Is giving twenty, thirty, or fifty dollars a year, for the advancement of the cause of truth, liberal, provided you possess twenty thousand dollars? Call that liberal! Why a Mohammedan would blush at it. God required the Jews, under the old dispensation, to give one-tenth—one dollar of ten—ten of a hundred—a hundred of a thousand, and on in the same ratio; will He require less under a still more benevolent dispensation? The thing is impossible.

Do you ask me if I think it is your duty to do this?

I reply, I do not cherish the most distant thought that you can ever enter the kingdom of God entertaining a disposition to do less than this. Why, it is surprising that any one should read the Bible and ever think otherwise.

Do you think I am begging for myself?

It is not so. I made a covenant with God four years ago to travel and preach, trusting in Him alone. I have said unto God, I will travel and preach as long as thou wilt give me the means, and when they fail I will consider it my duty to stop; and hence I give myself no anxiety about the matter. He has ever done His part as yet, and ever will. No, this is a matter of your own, affecting your eternal salvation. You must make up your mind to wait on the Lord, and look in every direction to see when he opens the door for you to do good, or, at length, you will be "weighed in the balance and found wanting." God has made you his steward, and woe is you if you hide your Master's goods, and let his cause be wanting. God does not require you to do with your property hap-hazard, but that you should use your judgment, prayerfully disciplined, in the matter.

Is it any worse for you to sacrifice than the rest of us? I spend all I get in the cause—I calculate to lay up nothing—I do not get property for years to come—this is the case with many of us; and is God partial? If you have a house, keep it: a farm, keep it if it is needed, keep al that is needed; but beware of keeping more than needful, for years to come. God will not be trifled with.

The Mission and Piety of John the Baptist.

BY W. C. STONE.

The mission that John was sent to fulfill has been to me a subject of deep interest, inasmuch as there are many incidents so much like those of our day, that, perhaps if we pass over briefly his history, we shall find some things that may profit in their perusal.

John's father, Zacharias, was a righteous priest of God. Luke 1: 6. He had a promise from God by Gabriel, that his wife should have a son, and his name was to be called John; that he should have joy and gladness and many should rejoice at his birth;—that he should be great in the sight of the Lord, should drink neither wine nor strong drink, and should "be filled with the Holy Ghost even from his mother's womb." Many of the children of Israel should he turn to the Lord their God, and should go before him in the spirit and power of Elias to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. Elizabeth being fully acquainted with these promises, they were not forgotten by her in after years.

At the time of the decree of Herod that all the young children in Judea should be slain, Elizabeth was forced to go down into the desert to save her son from the hands of Herod's slayers. At that time John's father was officiating priest at the altar. Upon being questioned as to where his son was, he refused to disclose his whereabouts, and was slain between the "porch and the altar." Elizabeth remained in seclusion for aught we know for many years, while she was rearing her son to manhood, with the promise of God still in view, that he should go before the Lord to prepare his way. Knowing the corruptions of the Jewish religion, she had bidden her son to be faithful to God, and he, by the instructions of his mother and his own observations, saw, that obedience was what God required; that it was not simply because a man was a natural descendant of Abraham, with a mere form of profession, it would avail anything in the day of judgment; that such a people were not prepared to receive the advent of one mightier than he, the Son of God, the representative of the Father. John felt it forcibly in his own soul, therefore, knowing from his mother his mission to the house of Israel, in due time he left his seclusion and commenced preaching the word as God gave it to him in the wilderness;—saying, "repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The fan of him who is mightier than I is at hand, "and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." "I am not worthy to carry his shoes or even untie them." You trees that bring forth no fruit, repent! the axe is laid at your roots, the work will be done quickly, the axe-man has not only brought the axe, but laid it down at your roots, therefore repent and be baptized for the remission of your sins. Ye generation of vipers, whose influence is as fatal as the venomous reptile whose sting will poison the victim upon which it fastens,—"who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" Bring forth therefore works that will show that your repentance need not be repented of.

Thus he addressed those who came out from all Judea and Jerusalem, who, confessing their sins, were baptized in Jordan. There stood before him the proud professor, a Pharisee, who was clothed in dress far different from the rough garment of hair from the camel, with a belt of leather to keep it to the waist, (not very desirable with those who dress but to be seen of men,) which was worn by him who came crying in the wilderness. The pride of the one and the humility of the other were plainly to be seen. The one by prayer and fasting, by meekness and lowliness had access to God, who was with him in power in his preaching. The other, proud with affectation of uncommon sanctity, abounding in rites of purification, slaves of lust and avarice, broad dresses covered with titles of distinction, loving to be called doctor, or "Rabbi," and barren of vital godliness. The one precious in the sight of God, the other abhorred of God and all loving christians.

John's preaching to them was pointed and plain;—in other words he hewed them to the ground. They looked "beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones." They justified themselves before men, making long prayers, tithing of mint and rue, and all manner of herbs, and passed over judgment and the love of God, which to the child of hope is of the most vital importance. Without it the gates of the Kingdom will never be opened to receive immortality with the redeemed of earth. It is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, and is in answer to prayer. "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find."

The common people asked John what they should do?

Fulfil the royal law,— love thy neighbor as thyself, prove the sincerity of your love by obeying him that is to come after me, who is mightier than I He will show you acts of generosity, and benevolence, such as the world has never seen; he will make himself poor, supplying all your wants. "He that hath two coats let him impart to him that hath none, and he that hath meat, let him do likewise;" bring forth this fruit or be hewn down and cast into the fire." This fruit will prove your repentance, it will crucify your selfishness, it will prepare a state of mind in you, so that when the Mightier comes, you will be ready to receive him and his instructions; "by meekness" you will "receive the engrafted word." Thus did John in his exhortations put the matter home to the hearts of the people.

In the preaching of the past sixteen years, have not many had to crucify the old man with his deeds, showing repentance? Did they not become childlike and meek? Have they not enjoyed the sunshine of God's countenance? Have they not been dearly bleoved? Our hearts entwine around them with an everlasting love. Some have suffered the loss of all things, for joy in the Kingdom. Some, even of those who have been through the wilderness heralding the coming kingdom and King, perhaps have lived, or cared to live no more sumptuously than did John, "whose meat was locusts and wild honey." His mission was to rouse the people to the first advent of the King of Israel. Has not the mission of the servants of God the past few years been to wake up the people to the second advent of the Glorious King? Have they not been endowed with power from on high? Has not the spirit of Elias been manifest? Have they not been mighty in prayer? Has not God been with them? Have not multitudes repented and been baptized in many Jordans? Can we not almost hear the mighty cry of the past,—"the judgment," the "day of God?" "Oh! get ready." This cannot be eradicated from the mind.

While God has been doing this strange work, the masses have been moved. From all sects have come out a people who have caught the sound of a trumpet blast, and have assembled themselves together to wait for the coming King. God has been their light by day and night. Have not the high priests of our day risen up with indignation, and done all they could to suppress this cry for a King and Kingdom? Have they not threatened and requested them to speak no more henceforth in this name? And have there not been Peters, and Johns who have answered and said unto them,—"Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye," for we cannot but speak the things which are written, and which have made our hearts glad.

O let us be ready to meet the King of Kings.

The Two-horned Beast.

BY P. ALLING.

As much has been said and written of late, relative to the power symbolized by the two-horned beast of Rev. 13: 11–18: and feeling a deep interest in the subject, I have ventured to suggest a few thoughts in addition to those already before the minds of the Brn., partly by way of exceptions to one prominent theory.

Before proceeding, I will say I am pleased to perceive the interest manifested on the part of many of our good Brn. to learn the truth, and hope it will not abate till the subject is fully made manifest. When we look at the awful judgments denounced by the God of heaven against the worshippers of the beast, his images, &c., and then at the exaltation promised to the overcomers thereof, the importance of the subject cannot be magnified. That there is danger of the church being beguiled into a worship of these desolating powers, is apparent, both from Revelation and a knowledge of the dominant ecclesiastical and civil powers that be; therefore the warning voice should go forth, as upon the wings of the wind, to the scattered flock, to take heed and be not snared.

1st. It is admitted by nearly all that the seven-headed and two-horned monsters of chaps. 12, 13 and 17, of this wonderful book symbolize the same power as the fourth beast of the 7th ch. of Daniel; viz.—the Roman Kingdom.

2d. It is also generally admitted that the symbols in those chaps. denote the last three forms of government of that monarchy: and it is manifest that the seven heads of those monsters, respectively, represent so many different forms of supreme government.

3d. That the subject may be made as clear as possible, I will state that the term BEAST as used by the prophet Daniel, and also sometimes by the Revelator, comprehends "the many nations, people, and tongues," of the Roman world, which constitute the body of the beast; whilst the term heads denotes the varied dynasties or forms of government, that at different times bore rule over, and controlled the body thereof.

4th. The testimony of the Revelator, ch. 17; 10, settles the fact that when this Revelation was given, five of those heads had fallen, and that the one then existing was the sixth; and as a decree went forth at the first advent of Christ, from Cæsar Augustus that all the world should be taxed, it follows that imperial Rome was the sixth one, which form is set forth in ch. 12th under the symbol of a great red dragon.

5th. As the sixth headship controlled the entire body of the beast at that time, and had the dominion of the prophetic world, we are authorized, in our researches after the seventh and eighth heads, to seek for them only in such forms of government as in like manner have exercised a similar control.

6th. The appropriate place to look for the seventh head is in that form of government that next succeeded the imperial or dragon form.

7th. In ch. 13: 1–10, we have a symbol in the ten-horned beast, that exactly answers to, and fills up the place assigned the seventh head as being the successor of the imperial form. Mark the evidence:

He "receives his power, throne, and great authority" from the dragon.

"Power was given him over all kindred, tongues, and nations."

He was to "continue forty-two months."

The dwellers upon the earth "worship the dragon which gave power to the beast."

History informs us, that imperial Rome did confirm papal Rome in the possession of her throne in the seven-hilled city; and also did give her her power and great authority, by formal decrees in her favor, delivering the saints into her hands, &c.

The subsequent history of that power proved that she did possess that throne, and exercise that authority the specified time; viz-, 1260 years. Hence the proof is positive, that the ten-horned beast is a symbol of the seventh head or form of universal government over the entire body of the Roman kingdom for that period.

8th. An objection may arise in the minds of some, to the extension of the seventh head over so long a period of time, by reason of the expression in ch. 17: 10, where this form is evidently brought to view in the following language:

"And when he cometh, he must continue a short space." I admit, that had we not divine authority, we should not be justified in such an extension. But thanks be to God, such authority is not wanting. In ch. 12th, we learn that after the dragon was cast out of heaven he came down to earth "having great wrath because he knoweth he hath but a short time, or space; (the same identical language in the original,) after that he persecutes the woman who flees "into the wilderness into her place, where she is nourished for a time and times and a half a time from the face of the serpent;" which period covers precisely the same forty-two months as that of the ten-horned beast. Therefore, the argument is abundantly sustained by proof, that the ten-horned beast is the seventh head; not a link is wanting, and cavil upon this point should end.

9th. As the 1260 years of papal rule expired at or near the close of the last century, and as the two-horned beast is to exercise "all the power of the first wild beast in sight" of the one that last preceded him, it follows that the only appropriate place in the great stream of time to look for the development of this power, is since the commencement of the present century.

In order to ascertain the truth, it will be necessary to inquire:

1st, Has the beast had a head since that time?

2d, If we find that there has been in fact a ruling power over the fragments of the old Roman empire, then to compare it with the divine record, and if we find a perfect fulfilment in all its parts, we may rest assured that we have found the truth.

10. During this period two dynasties have arisen that claim our attention; viz., 1st, the Napoleon, and 2d, the allied powers of Europe; the first of which will only claim our attention at present.

The advocates of this theory claim, that the dynasty of Napoleon the 1st constituted the seventh head. In order to arrive at that conclusion, they extend the sixth head, or the imperial form, through the eastern and the German empire down to his day. That at his overthrow in 1814 by the allies, and onward to about 1850–3, the beast was not; that when Napoleon the 3d sprang into being, the seventh head received, and again was, which last dynasty constitutes the eighth head; or, in other words, Napoleon the 1st, was, Napoleon 2d was not, and Napoleon the 3d yet is.

In thus doing, violence in done to testimony both sacred and historic in several particulars.

1st. The power that was given to, and exercised by papal Rome, as the successor of the dragon, which continues 1290 years, is entirely disregarded, and applied to a single individual, who failed in the establishment of a dynasty or a form of government over the body of the Roman world.

2d. Again. This theory makes three imperial or dragonic forms of government, whereas Revelation recognizes but one.

3d. The two-horned beast is to "exercise all the power of the first wild beast in his sight. According to the record, that first wild beast was not Napoleon the 1st, but contrawise the ten-horned beast, which had the dominion of the earth for the period of 1260 years.

4th. Again. The two-horned beast is to cause the dwellers upon earth to make an image to the beast which had a wound by a sword and did live; and then is "to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed." If Napoleon the 1st was the beast, that had the wound by the sword, &c., it then follows that the present dynasty of Napolen the 3d, is yet to cause the dwellers upon earth to make on image (or a likeness) to the dynasty of Napoleon the 1st, and then give it life, and power to cause all who will not worship it to be killed. That France is yet to attain such a supremacy under the present emperor, is altogeth- unreasonable to expect.

5th. This theory allows no headship or form of government to have existed since A. D. 1814, and the rise of the present dynasty, which is contrary to facts.

If the foregoing exceptions are taken and sustained by evidence, which I verily think to be the case, it is manifest, that the Napoleonic dynasties do not answer the divine record; therefore, that theory is too defective to warrant us in fixing upon them as the seventh and eighth heads.

At some future time, Providence favoring, I will examine the other theory, viz. the allies of Europe.

Letter from Sr. Whitaker.

BRO. MERRIAM:—It is seldom I write for the public eye, and though feeling, as I do at present, incompetent to impart to others such soul-cheering instruction as I receive from them, yet I would wish to cast in my mite with theirs. I would say that your hope is, and has been my hope for twelve years, nor do I wish to give it up as some have, and as I have been advised to do. How can I give up the glorious appearing of Jesus, when on that hangs all our hope of salvation. If he does not come, then those that have fallen asleep in him have perished, and we are yet in our sins, and under the penalty of the law, which is death; but we are not without hope, for we believe that Jesus died and rose again,—so whether we sleep or wake, we shall be glorified with him; for the apostle says—"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trumpet of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

This is a blessed hope to me, and all God's waiting ones, that have expected ere this to have been translated from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son, and be made like the angels, to die no more, being the children of the resurrection. Then we can sing the triumphant song—"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

Brn. and Srs., are we ready to be changed? Are our garments pure and unspotted from the world? If they are, we shall be admitted to the marriage supper of the Lamb, and be made kings and priests to our God, and reign with Christ a thousand years. What a blessed thought to reign with Christ, to be with Him forever, and be taught by that great Teacher that spake as never man spake. O how I long to sit at his feet and hear His glorious word! How ready would be my willing feet to obey all His commands! O that would be joyful to meet at Jesus feet and never part again.

I hope you will be sustained in your labors of love to the household of faith, by giving them meat in due season.

Your Sr. in Christ,—

What is Truth?

BY J. D. MERRIAM.

III.

The fourth command of God has been trampled under foot, and still is, unless it has been changed or abrogated by the great Lawgiver, or those to whom he has given power to do so.

The practice of the professed Christian church at the present day, is to observe the first day of the week, and call it the Sabbath.

This is right, or it is wrong. Right, if the Sabbath law has been changed by him who made it, so that the first day of the week is sanctified and hallowed, instead of the seventh, as originally given.

Wrong, if God has given no one authority to alter, change, or abolish the law as he gave it; and the change has been brought about by yielding to the authority of tradition, or to the precept of men, instead of the command of God. A power has arisen, which has thought to change times and laws—and that power has professed to be the true Church of Christ. In opposing God, is it unreasonable to suppose that it is God's laws that he thinks to change? In the Catholic Catechism, the ten commandments are so changed, that the second is entirely omitted, and the tenth is divided to make the number complete. Why leave out the second commandment? Because it condemns their practice of idolatry. They loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. The Catholic Church admits that there is no express Bible authority for the change of the Sabbath, from the seventh to the first day of the week; but they say that the tradition of the Church is of equal authority with that of the Bible, and as they can prove by that, that the first day of the week was observed very early to some extent as a festival, they make it a mortal sin not to keep the first day. Protestants claim that the Bible is the rule of faith and practice, and the only rule. If then it can be clearly proved from the Bible, that the Sabbath commandment remains just as it was given, then are not men who keep the first day of the week, following a tradition of men, instead of the word of God? and is not that vain worship which regards the first day of the week for the Sabbath? To the Scriptures let us come for the TRUTH. and to them let us bow, though it may lead us to take a position contrary to our education and our practice.

In the beginning God created the heaven and earth in six days, and rested on the seventh. And God blessed the seventh day and hallowed it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which he had created and made. Which day of the week did he bless and sanctify? The seventh day. Our Lord Jesus said the Sabbath was made for MAN, not made for the Jews in particular, but for the whole race of mankind. He saw that man needed a Sabbath of rest, and in his goodness he made provision for that necessity. He made the Sabbath for man. He incorporated the Sabbath law among the other rules for the regulation of man's life, and it is together called the law which is holy, just and good. By the law is the knowledge of sin; for where there is no law, there is no transgression.

He has not left us in doubt as to which day is the Sabbath. Read the command, Ex. 20: 10,—"The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Can anything be plainer? It does not read the sixth nor the first day, but the seventh day. But as no one doubts but the Sabbath was originally observed on the seventh day, we inquire, did the Savior or his apostles change the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week? or did he abolish the Sabbath entirely? He says He came not "to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy but to fulfil. For . . . . till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." In fulfilling the Sabbath law, did he alter or abolish it? He says he "kept his Father's commandments and abode in his love." He "came down from heaven, not to do his will, but the will of the Father who sent him? "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." "I do always those things that please him?" When about to suffer the just for the unjust, he says—" not my will but thine be done." He meekly submits to his Father's will, bows his head and dies. Some say that Christ broke the Sabbath, but it cannot be; for if he had, he would have broken his Father's law, and would have been a sinner; and hence would not have been able to make an atonement for the sins of the world. "He was made under the law," was made "sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

That there was no change or abolition of the Sabbath during the life of the Savior is plain; for we find that when Christ was put in the tomb, the disciples prepared spices and ointments for his burial, and "rested the seventh day according to the commandment" which they would not have been likely to do, had a change been made.

Because the Savior healed on the Sabbath, and the disciples supplied the wants of nature, the Jews found fault with them, and accused them of breaking the Sabbath; but the Savior repelled the charge, and said it was "lawful to do well on the Sabbath day." Any thing that is lawful, is in harmony with law; hence the works of the Savior and his disciples on the Sabbath day were in harmony with the fourth command. The Savior strips off the traditions of the Jews from the Sabbath law, and leaves it as God placed it.

We find by reading the Acts of the Apostles, which were written about thirty-four years after the resurrection of Christ, that it was the custom of the Apostles and early Christians, to observe the Sabbath as though no change had been made. It was Paul's manner to go into the synagogues on the Sabbath and preach the gospel. The disciples met on the Sabbath at the river's side, where prayer was wont to be made.

On one Sabbath day Paul preached to the Jews, and there were Gentiles in, who requested that these words might be spoken to them the next Sabbath.

Now if Paul was in the custom of observing the first day of the week, would there not have been a good opportunity to have shown them that they need not wait till the next Sabbath; but come the next day, the first day of the week? But no; they wait till the next Sabbath. That the Sabbath then spoken of, was not the first day of the week, is evident; for that day is called in this book, as in all of the books, in the New Testament, the first day. The Jews never accused Paul of breaking the Sabbath, which I am sure they would have done, had he introduced the change of the Sabbath for the first day.

He declares that he had done nothing contrary to the customs of our fathers, which he would have done, if he had taught the observance of the first day of the week, for the Sabbath; or had he taught that it was abolished. Because on one occasion the brethren met together on the first day of the week, and Paul preached to them till midnight; and because he wrote to one church to have their contribution ready for the poor saints when he came, and tells them to lay by them on the first day of the week as God had prospered them, that there should be no gatherings when he came,—altogether unlike the contributions of the present day,—people have thought that the Apostles sanctioned the observance of the first day of the week as a Sabbath. That day is nowhere called the Sabbath in the Scriptures. Some infer, because John said he was in the spirit on the Lord's day, that that day must have been the first day of the week, but such is an unfair inference, unless it can be found somewhere else in the Scriptures, that the first day IS the Lord's day. We do find "that the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." In the Old Testament scriptures, we find that God often speaks of HIS Sabbaths. "Hallow MY Sabbaths." "MY Sabbaths shall be a sign," &c. The Savior calls himself the "Lord of the Sabbath." I should think a much fairer inference could be drawn from that text in Rev., that it was on the Sabbath that John was in the Spirit.

Some infer, because Christ is Lord of the Sabbath, that he had power to alter or abolish it. If the Father, the Law-giver, gave him the power to do so, then he HAD the power to do it. He says, that of himself he could do nothing. Though he said he had power to lay down his life, and to take it again, yet this commandment he received from his Father.

It has been thought by some that Paul taught the entire abrogation of the Sabbath law, from a consideration of Rom. 14; 2 Cor. 3; Gal. 3; and Col. 2: 14—16. That some part of the law given to the Jews, was abolished at the crucifixion of Christ, no one denies. These ceremonies, embraced in the "handwriting of ordinances, which was against us and contrary to us;" those "meats and drinks, and divers washings and carnal ordinances, which were imposed on them till the time of reformation," were most surely "nailed to the cross." We do well to bear in mind that the Jews had SABBATHS beside the Sabbath of the Lord; and hence, Paul could be consistent with himself, and still teach the abolition of those Sabbaths contained among, or in the ceremonial law, while he observed the Sabbath of the Lord.

He said that he delighted "in the law of God after the inward man;" so he must have with the prophet called "the Sabbath a delight," as that is a part of the perfect law.

Inferences, such as we have referred to, to prove change or abolition of a part of God's holy, just and good law, can hardly satisfy the mind of that individual who is trying to do the whole will of God, from the heart. What God requires of his creatures is plain, and need not be mistaken.

If people wish to cavil and find fault, there has always been and will always be enough on which they may stumble. "Behold I lay in Zion, a stumbling-stone and rock of offence; but he that believeth in him, shall not be confounded."

Unbelief will always find something on which to found an excuse for a neglect of known duty. "The law of the Lord," says the Psalmist, "is perfect, converting the soul." It brings the knowledge of sin, without which, none would see themselves sinners. "When the commandment came, sin revived, and I died." Had the Savior taken anything away, or changed any part of the law; would he not have rendered it imperfect? He came to "magnify the law and make it honorable."

Paul says,—"Do we make void the law through faith? God forbid! Yea, we establish the law." Let us not add nor diminish anything from his word. If we have been trampling on the Sabbath of the Lord, let us turn away our foot from it, from doing our pleasure on his holy day; and let us call the Sabbath a delight; the holy of the Lord, honorable; and honor him, not doing our own ways, nor finding our own pleasure, nor speaking our own words. If we do thus, we have the promise of being fed with the heritage of Jacob our father; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

Let us be obedient to all his commandments; then can we say with David,—"I shall not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all thy commandments." "Great peace have all they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." "Blessed are they that do his commandments; that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city." Now let us apply the subject to ourselves. Are we following the commandments of God, or men? Are we giving heed to the truth, or to fables? Let us "buy the truth and sell it not," for it is of great price.

Some think it is of no great matter what we believe, if we are only sincere in our faith. Is not this a mistaken idea? Are we not chosen to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit, and the belief of the truth? The righteous nation that keepeth the truth, is to enter into the city of God.

It will make some difference with us whether our works are preserved or burned. If we build on the foundation with wood, hay, or stubble, the day shall declare it, for it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is. If our work be burned, we shall suffer loss; and if saved, it will be so as by fire. Should not all the believers in the coming kingdom of Christ strive to be found "walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless."

Why are we brought out here into the wilderness of the people, unless it be to be tried, to see whether we will walk with the Lord fully, or no? Has it been all in vain that we have heard the solemn warning,—"the hour of his judgment is come?" Can it be all for naught, that the Midnight Cry in mercy has sounded? Are we not now near, VERY NEAR the closing scenes of earth, and the introductory scenes of the kingdom of God? Can we then desire any thing but to have our loins well girded with TRUTH, our lamps well trimmed and burning, and we like men that wait for their Lord, that when he comes, we may open to him immediately?

Tradition will do us no good. It will not profit us to follow the commandments of men; but it will do us good to be sanctified through the truth. "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God, your whole spirit, soul and body may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord.

Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it. Let us so live, that when the Master comes, he will say unto us,—"Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter into the joy of thy Lord." Let us leave all the commandments and traditions of men, and follow the Word of God, with all the heart; "live by every WORD that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

"Let thine eyes look right on; and let thine eyelids look strait before thee. Ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established. Turn not to the right hand nor to the left; remove thy foot from evil," "Make strait paths for your feet; lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed. Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."

Let us so strive by implicit obedience to all the commandments of God, and to all the testimony of Jesus Christ, that we may have an "abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Let us hear the "conclusion of the whole matter; "Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man." Amen.

For the Crisis.

The Joys of the Kingdom.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Bright, celestial visions of eternal joys to come! How they ravish my panting hoping, longing soul! When will the splendor of that brilliant morning of final pleasure to the elect, light up earth's gloomy hills, and chase the lingering clouds of moral darkness all away?

O for one sight of that dear, holy, blessed, beloved, absent One! That glorious One whose head is like the most fine gold, his locks white as wool and snow, his eyes like flames of fire, his hands as gold rings set in beryl; who is clothed with a garment of living light, and girded about as with the fine gold of Uphas; whose feet stand upon sockets of silver, sparkling as fine brass glowing in the furnace; and whose voice, though loud as the seven thunders of the Almighty, is musical as the melodious dulcimer; and whose glory lightens the eternal city of our God; who died, who lives, and who shall ever live to be loved and praised.

O for the mighty movement awful, when God himself shall change the location of the SHEKINAH, and everlastingly dwell with men on earth! O for rapturous greetings of angelic harpers, when we shall reflect their loveliness and mingle our sympathy and affection unrestrained with theirs. What immeasurable joys will roll over our ransomed souls, when the scattered millions of the Lord shall come flowing into the New Jerusalem, clothed with immortal beauty, to sit down at the marriage supper of the Lamb! Now we shall lift the harp, and sing in strains harmonious with the burning seraphs, and still in higher notes, sublime, the triumph of death's hidden captives, and the final liberty of the prisoners of the grave. Ye heaving, boisterous, swelling seas of human sorrow, we have passed you safely over now—no more your driving storms and fearful tempests lie drearily on our sinking, fragile bark! Ye mountains of frightful danger, we now, unharmed, have ascended your forbidding, frowning heights, delightedly to walk the high places of Jehovah's land! No more the eye shall weep—the tongue shall no more falter in the song—the shades of disappointment, again, shall never lower on the brow—the limbs, in unchanging elasticity, shall ever respond to the varied desires of the mind of purity, and peace—the wail of anguish, prolonged with piteous sound, shall not again break on the silence of the contemplative hour—the orphan cry for bread is hushed in the fullness of endless plenty—the thirsty traveler drinks the satisfying waters of the springing fountain, and the pellucid river—the deaf hear with rapture the grateful music of the chanting hosts—the perverted reason of the wandering intellect sits again smiling on its throne—deformity no more intrudes to tantalize the symmetry of the human form divine—all is perfect, all is satisfying, all is immortal. How can we be indifferent, how can we cease to long with such a prospect so clearly spread before us? O for burning desires unquenchable to fill our waiting souls for the hour of final redemption to come!

Haste Mighty One! Eternal Bridegroom come! Make hasty steps to show thy royal state! O rend the curtains of the heavens and present thy welcome face! Break up the lingering winter, and pour in upon us the sunny glory of celestial spring, and bid the voice of pleasure fill Immanuel's land.

For the Crisis.

Self Examination.

BY O. IVES.

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city."

I know you will wish to have a right to that tree and enter into that city, for if you do not, you will weep and wail and gnash your teeth when you see the glories that will be revealed, of which you cannot share. O what a heart-rending scene to see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob and all the prophets there and you yourselves cast out. The question now is, do I keep his commandments? O I would have you realize the importance of the question and of getting a correct answer. If such eternal realities are involved in it, say, is it not important? O how trifling all others in comparison with it. Let us examine what they are.

Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. Who is he? He is the propitiation, or satisfaction for our sins. He hath borne "our sins in his own body on the tree." The Lord hath laid on him the iniquities of us all, so that if we confess and forsake our sins we shall find mercy. Now we can be liberated from the punishment due our sins, if we are heartily sorry for them, and have a fixed determination to renounce them wholly and forever, and consecrate ourselves to the Lord in the bonds of an everlasting covenant. If the blessed Jesus had not died, the justice of our God would have consigned us to everlasting destruction. O the worthiness of that Name by which we are called. Let everything that hath breath praise Him. Was it our sins that caused the sufferings of the lovely Redeemer, who was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners?

Yes, verily it was. Consider, O my soul, that He, who being in the form of God thought it not robbery to be equal with God, for our sakes made himself of no reputation and took upon him the form of a servant, and became obedient unto death, even the accursed death of the cross. Though he was rich and dwelt in glory with the Father before the world was, yet he became poor, so that he even said of himself,—"The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, bnt the Son of man hath not where to lay his head."

This amazing condescension, humiliation and suffering, he endured that we through his poverty might be rich; and he thus prayed for them that believe in him, deny themselves and take up the cross and follow him.—"Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me, for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world."

Can we be introduced to such glory? O the amazing, infinite goodness of that lovely being who made this intercession to his Father, who always heard him. And now we are sure that when He appears in glory, we (if we are his) shall appear in glory with Him; yes, we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is. O, who would not long for this glorified state. Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Amen.

There shall be no more curse but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in the midst of paradise, and his servants shall serve him, and they shall see his face. He will dwell with them. Surely then we shall not see evil any more. Do you believe in Jesus? Do you believe that what he has said is true? If you do, you believe that unless sinners repent and turn from all their transgression, iniquity will be their ruin; and they, who do not follow peace and holiness with all men, shall not see the Lord; and that those who live after the flesh shall die, and that if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his, and that those only have passed from death unto life who love the brethren.

Have you repented, turned from sin? Are you following peace and holiness with all men? Do you love the brethren? Are you willing to share with them, and let your abundance be a supply for their wants? Are you ready to distribute, and willing to communicate when they have need? If thou lend money to thy brother that is poor, thou shalt not take any interest or increase. Lev. 25: 36.

Do you do so? If any man that "hath this world's good, and seeth his brother hath need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love o' God in him?" ·

Do you walk in love as Christ also hath loved us? "He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk even as he walked." The whole object of his life was to do good and glorify God. He went about doing good, teaching and preaching the gospel of the Kingdom. Let us follow his holy example. It we see our Bro. have need, let us not refrain from administering to his necessity, if we have the ability to do so.

Let us speak of the glory of God's kingdomd, talk ot his po, anwer to make known to the sons of men his mighty acts (that are past and that are to come,) and the glorious majesty of his reign. O what a glorious event is about to transpire. The Lord himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the t ump of God;" etc., 1 Thess. 4: 16, "wherefore, comfort one another with these words." "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching;" "Wherefore comfort yourselves together and edify one another (can I say) even as ye also do?"

We know, that through weakness and error of judgment, every one is liable to do wrong without being aware of it; see Ps. 19: 12. But there must be purity of intention. The apostle Paul says,—"Herein I exercise myself to have always a conscience void of offence;" and again, "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection; lest by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

It is said of Enoch—"He had this testimony that he pleased God." He had an approving conscience. He believed that God was the rewarder of those that diligently sought Him. But they that are in the flesh cannot please God; but ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the spirit of God dwell in you. . . . If ye live after the flesh ye shall die;" that is, if ye allow yourselves to indulge in the works of the flesh as enumerated in Gal. 5: 19–21, and 1 Cor. 6: 9, 10, ye are not in an accepted state; and except ye repent ye shall certainly perish; "but if ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live."

Have you the spirit, or are you sowing to the flesh? Are you indulging in the gratification of your own carnal propensities and becoming vain in your imagination, and allowing your foolish heart to be darkened? When you have known God have you glorified him as God, and were you thankful? or, have you turned again to the weak and beggarly elements whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? He says "My people would not hearken to my voice, . . . so I gave them up unto their own heart's lust; and they walked in their own counsel." And again, "even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge," or to acknowledge him; "He gave them over to a reprobate mind," or a mind void of judgment; and because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved, God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth but had pleasure in righteousness. O be not proud, for thenu Lord hath spoken. Give glory to the Lord before he cause darkness, and ye stumble upon the dark mountains; and while ye look for light (see Matt. 25: 10) he turn it into the shadow of death. But if ye will not hear, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride. Are you of that class of whom the apostle Jude says, "These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the spirit?" and of whom John says, "they went out from us, for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us; but they went out that they might be made manifest, that they were not all of us?" Are you ashamed to confess the truth? Are you unwilling to endure persecution? O fear it not. If Jesus is your friend, nothing can harm you. All things shall work together for your good. Amen.

Prayer.

"There is no way," says Dr. Alexander, "in which we can more surely increase mutual love than by prying for one another. If you would retain warmth o affection for an absent friend, pray for him. If you would live in the regards of another, beseech him to pray for you. If you would conquer enmity in your own soul owards one who has wronged you, pray for him. Dissension or coldness cannot abide between those who bear each other to God's throne in supplication. It is what we meet to do in family worship Often has the tenderness of a half-dying attachment been renewed and made young again, when the parties have found themselves kneeling before the mercy-seat. Every thing connected with such utterance of mutual good will in the domestic worship tends to foster it, and thus the daily prayers are as the dews of heaven."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 9, 1856.

The New Translation of the Bible.

We have just received from the AMERICAN BIBLE UNION, their translation of Thessalonians, which has been read with interest.

The price of the work bound in cloth, is 60 cts; in paper covers, 40 cts.

For these prices it will be sent free of postage by mail, to any part of the United States.

Address Wm. H. Wyckoff, 350 Broome Street, New York.

We are satisfied from information gathered concerning the manner of proceeding in translating, that when the work is completed, it will be decidedly the BEST in the English language. We are much pleased with the impartial nature of the work so far as examined. There is clear evidence that the new translation is not a sectarian work, as some have feared. The scholars employed by the American Bible Union in preparing the new translation, are connected with the following denominations:

CHURCH OF ENGLAND,
OLD SCHOOL PRESBYTERIANS,
DISCIPLES, OR REFORMERS,
METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,
ASSOCIATE REFORMED PRESBYTERIANS,
SEVENTH DAY BAPTISTS,
AMERICAN PROTESTANT EPISCOPALIANS,
BAPTISTS, AND GERMAN REFORMED CHURCHES.

They are resolved to give a faithful expression of the Greek and Hebrew text without regard to sectarian views.

We are glad to notice that the word Ghost is rejected, and Spirit substituted in all places where King James' version reads Holy Ghost; and where Ghost is employed to express death, it is rendered expires or expired.

The new translation of Job 14: 15, reads—"But man dies, and wastes away; yea, man expires, and where is he!"

We give a few of the changes.

2 Pet. 2: 1. "But there were false prophets among the people, as also among you there shall be false teachers, who privily shall bring in destructive sects."

The word rendered born in the Epistles of John, is changed, as it should be, to begotten, in the following passages. The italics are ours.

1 John 2: 29. "If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness hath been begotten o him."

4: 7. "Beloved, let us love another; for love is of God, and every one that loveth hath been begotten of God and knoweth God."

5: 1. "Every one that believeth that Jesus is the Christ, hath been begotten of God."

5: 4. "For all that have been begotten of God, overcometh the world."

5: 18. "We know that every one that been begotten of God sinneth not; but he that hath been begotten of God keepeth himself, and the wicked one toucheth him not."

Verses 7 and 8 of chap. 5 read;—"For there are three that testify, the spirit, and the word, and the blood; and the three agree in one."

Rev. 1: 5, reads;—"And from Jesus Christ, the faithful Witness, the First-born from the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth."

"The "four beasts" of Rev. 4th. 5th, and 6th chaps. are rendered "four living creatures."

10: 7. "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he should be about to sound."

10: 11. "Thou must again prophesy of many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings."

17: 10. "And they are seven kings."

17: 16. "And the ten horns which thou sawest, and the beast, these shall hate the harlot."

Matt. 23: 24. "Strain out a gnat," instead of strain at, as in the authorized version. Wickliffe, Tyndale, Coverdale, Matthew, the Genevan, and the Latin Vulgate, render it "strain out."

Acts 19: 2. The common version reads, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." The new translators inform us, that the meaning is, "we have not so much as heard whether the Holy Spirit is yet given."

They had heard of the promise, but did not know that it was fulfilled.

Gen. 2: 2. Instead of reading as in the authorized version, the new version reads,—"On the seventh day God had ended his work."

The following extract will give some idea of the faithfulness ot those now employed in preparing the new translation:—

"The manner of proceeding with the revision is very careful and particular. There are now engaged in the Revision, in the special employment ot the Union, over forty scholars, each of whom has his part of the Scriptures to revise. When one gets his part done, copies are then made and transmitted to all the other revisers, and at the same time to most of the learned throughout Christendom, for their criticisms and suggestions; when these are made, each party returns his criticism to the original reviser, who is again to go over the whole work, with the aid of these suggestions and criticisms, and re-revise, with this assistance; it is then reprinted, and submitted to a council of the learned for adoption."

With such care, and fairness, we can see no reason for complaint on the part of any; but we do see strong evidence to believe that if the work is completed, it will be emphatically the best version of the Scriptures ever presented to the world.

They have now published the letters of John, 2nd Peter, Jude, Revelation, Job and Thessalonians.

We are anxious to see the work complete, and regret that we must wait so long before it will be finished.

Long Preaching.

We hope the remarks of Bro. Munger, on long praying and preaching will not pass unheeded. We wish to say Amen to what he has written.

I have noticed that time seems about twice as long to the hearer, as to the speaker. There are but few who can listen an hour with profit, for when the mind is tired in its efforts to comprehend and remember a discourse, the preacher is weakening all he has said if he continues.

I have often heard it remarked, "if he had commenced about the middle of his sermon, I should have enjoyed it very much, but I was so tired before he got through, that I lost all interest."

I have frequently known a dislike formed towards some of the ablest and most interesting preachers, because their discourses were "so long."

Brethren, a reform is needed. How often it is the case that the whole effect of a good sermon is lost by being too long."

There is no danger of being too short. Leave the people hungry for more, and they will love to come again. Long prayers, hymns, exhortations and sermons soon produce a dullness in meetings.

Be short and earnest. We are satisfied as a general rule, sermons should fall within three quarters of an hour, rather than go beyond. I am informed that Wesley thought half an hour sufficient time to allot to the preaching.

People in these days wish everything condensed into as small a space as possible.

"A word to the wise is sufficient."

Independent Camp-Meeting and Conference at Wilbraham.

We have in conformity with the wishes of many brethren, decided to hold a Camp-meeting and General Conference at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence on Monday the 18th of August next. We call this an Independent Camp-meeting and Conference, because we intend that it shall be independent of all sectarianism and partyism. We invite all to attend it who are interested in, and love the immediate appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. We expect at this meeting a general gathering of the "waiting ones." It seems to us that it cannot be otherwise, as this will be the only camp-meeting of importance that we contemplate holding this season, and this will be centrally located for the friends of the cause.

Come Brethren, and Sisters, in the Lord's name, help! Make all the preparation you consistently can to attend, we beseech you, for, "is there not a cause?" We feel lonely and pilgrim-like, and it will be well to meet, and greet, and cheer each other once more on the journey. Will you come, from the East, and West, and North, and South, and sit down once more in the anticipation of the kingdom?

The objects of this meeting are three-fold.

1. To comfort and strengthen one another.

2. To endeavor to benefit, with the truth, all who will attend the meeting, who are not yet ready for the kingdom.

3. To consult, in conference, as to what is duty in relation to the various branches of public work, as the people, and especially the ministers, of God.

Let all preaching brethren, who can possibly, be present. We shall expect each Brother and Sister, at this meeting, to speak and act as he, or she may think God requires, with a view to the best good of all concerned. We desire no public debates or controversy, but let each speak independently of others, and in the spirit of Christ. It is the general desire of the friends that Bro. Munger be Superintendent of this meeting, inasmuch as his acquaintance with that part of the country and long experience in these matters render him the fittest person that can be selected. We can all confide in his integrity and faithfulness. We trust he will comply. We would say in conclusion that it will be well for our friends in all parts, where they can, to associate and prepare tents and bedding, &c., for themselves, so as not generally to be dependent, as many individual cases must necessarily be. The cloth which is used for tents can be taken by the several families which purchase it, after the meeting and be used for domestic purposes. In some cases, tents may be more cheaply hired. We will try to get the fare on the railroad from Boston to Wilbraham reduced, if possible, and thus help our Eastern friends; and should we succeed, will give notice in season. Perhaps other brethren will do the same on other railroads. Get tickets for North Wilbraham—the Camp-ground is near the North Wilbraham depot.

And now Brethren and Sisters, we submit this matter to you in the Lord. Act right. EDWIN BURNHAM,
For many Brethren.

For the Crisis.

The Mission of Angels.

BY MARY A. GRANT.

The term angels, as used in both the Old and New Testament Scriptures, signifies an agent or messenger; and in many instances, any instrument employed by God in the execution and development of his purposes and plans relative to man, in his holy economy, may rightly be denominated, "angel of God."

But this term is more exclusively significant of those celestial existences, whose life and being emanate from and centre in the Deity whom they worship, whose mandate they delight to execute, and whose sovereign will they are ever ready to fulfil; dwelling in the immediate presence of Jehovah, a spiritual family—forming in their multifarious ranks from angel to archangel the governmental hosts of heaven; and He who sitteth upon the circle of the earth makes them his messengers thereto, and ever bids their myriads fly.

That these beings are real and not imaginative is evidenced in the following quotations: Gen. 19: 1–4; Judg. 13: 1–27; Matt. 28: 2–4, and many kindred ones which might be mentioned; and to the believers in the resurrection from the dead, the promise of being made "as the angels of God," is a matter of faith and joy.

When was their beginning, is a qnestion yet unanswered;—that they have their origin in God, we infer from the following Scripture:

"Thou, even thou, art Lord alone; thou hast made heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their host; the earth and all things that are therein; the seas and all that is therein; and thou preservest them all; and the host of heaven worshippeth thee"

Their ministry shall engage our attention at present; a subject fraught with interest to every lover of God, and believer in his word and providence.

ANGELS are messengers of love and mercy to man. It is interesting to observe that one of these heavenly visitants is first introduced to us in sacred history, as appearing to the afflicted bond-woman in the wilderness of Shur; to whose dreariness Hagar had fled as a refuge from the face of Sarai, Abraham's wife. The angel lingers by the fountains, with a message of hope, and soothes her chafed spirit with abundant promises of future good, "for the Lord had heard her affliction." It was the cry of anguish which first attracted to earth one of the dwellers above, and from that time to the present where is the record of their final withdrawal or exit from scenes involving the diciplino of man? We may trace their footprints through the mutations of ages long since past, and even in our well-remembered years, we have fondly believed in their especial regard of events and providences connected with us. Angels condescended to tarry a night with Lot, the aged patriarch of old, warning him of his unsuspected danger, and the destruction of his city; bidding him flee with his family ere they should be consumed, and accompanying them from beyond the plain upon which was being poured the vengeance of eternal fire. It may be Lot was not aware at first of the divine nature of his guests; but as he gazed from Zoar, with his motherless daughters by his side, far over the blackened plain, how must the truth have rushed upon his heart, and even in his desolateness found occasion for praise and adoration.

It was an angel who caused the troubling of Bethesda's pool, whose waters ministered health and soundness to the diseased and impotent folk who thronged its banks.

It was an angel who opened the prison-doors, closed upon the apostles, and while suffering perils upon sea and land stood by them saying; —"Fear not!" "Be of good cheer!" And when the Redeemer of men passed through those weary days and nights, tempted of Satan, experiencing in all points the infirmities to which human nature is subject, and thereby becoming our sympathizer and friend; and in the agony beneath Gethsemane's shade, sweating "as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground,"—we read "the angels came and ministered unto him." O privileged ones! Truly your prerogatives are love and mercy.

Angels are executors of God's purposes. The Psalmist in one of his rapturous songs thus addresses the angelic throng:—"Bless ye the Lord, ye his angels that excel in strength, that do his commandments hearkening unto the voice of his word. Bless ye the Lord all ye his hosts, ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure. That they are the ministers of his pleasure, may be seen by referring to the history of the past. For instance, the case of Balaam, where man's will was thwarted,—God's word spoken, and his name honored. The angel of the Lord appeared in the way of the Prophet, and stayed his madness by making the dumb ass to speak with man's voice.

It was an angel, who, passing through the Assyrian camp at night, slew of their number an hundred and eighty-five thousand; the morning light revealing their blighted corpses; thus executing the zeal of the God of Hosts in the defence of his people Israel.

In the case of Herod, because he gave not God the glory, he was smitten by the angel, and perished, literally eaten of worms. And when the end shall have fully come, and the harvest of the earth shall have fully ripened, then shall the reapers go forth—the angels, commissioned by the Son of Man, and gather out of his kingdom every offending thing,—and the tares in bundles to be burned; when "the righteous shall shine forth as the sun," and God's eternal purposes in his his children, made complete.

ANGELS are ministering spirits.

"The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels." "Are they not all ministering spirits sent to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Which passages prove conclusively that spiritual intelligences, or an innumerable company of angels, concern themselves earnestly with the welfare of those who participate in the joys and sorrows of a life devoted to Christ. Thereby ensuring with Him the strengthening from above while in temptation in this desert state; and a reunion which will be eternal before the throne, when saints shall be made equal with the angels and shall die no more.

Art thou cast down, O my soul? Do thine enemies encompass thee as a trench? fear not,—"the angel of God's presence shall save thee!" Is thy way a thicket of temptations? be not dismayed, thy God shall send his angels before thee, and cause the weary maze to become a shining way. Art thou in the way of the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and surronnded by the destruction that wasteth at noonday? "There shall no evil befall thee, for he shall give his angels charge concerning thee to keep thee, and they shall bear thee up in their hands." Think not, O, despiser of the grace of God, that thy scoffings and contumely shall avail thee alway, or pass unrebuked; the God of Daniel and all the prophets, for whom the shining ones hasted to minister, and oft delivered, —ere long shall cause your ruin to be accomplished, when no merciful intervention of the shining throng shall be undertaken in your behalf; and the vials of God's wrath are poured out without mixture, and his judgment established.

ANGELS are revealers of God's will to man.

It was Gabriel, a mighty one from before the throne, who was commissioned to unfold to Daniel the mysterious future; to explain to him in familiar converse the vision of the ram and he-goat; and communicate to him the prophecy of the "seventy weeks." We notice him again as the hero of the annunciation, both of the conception and birth of John the Baptist, and Jesus our Messiah.

By the instructions of the angel, Philip sought out the eunuch, opened unto him the Scriptures of truth, preached the gospel of Jesus Christ. The eunuch believed —was baptized straightway—and went on his way rejoicing. Thus, by obedience to this heavenly agent, God's name was honored, and a soul saved. Angels announced the resurrection of Christ,—his ascension from the brow of Olivet,—and his glorious re-appearing in the clouds of heaven with all the brilliant retinue of the celestial host and redeemed saints; to judge in righteousness, and rule as "Prince of Peace." To them was commissioned the last revelation of God through Christ, left to the church after Jesus had risen; and signified to the devoted John, while suffering exile in a lonely isle of the Ægean Sea. "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand."

Sinner! the angels' ministry extends to you. For you they feel an earnest sympathy; for you they haste from heaven to earth to catch the broken accents of your repentant prayers, and bear them to the mercy-seat; and remember, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God "over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance."

Christian! canst thou not claim their especial ministrations in straightened paths, when envious men and haters of thy life and peace, beset thee continually, making thy way a terror, and thy word a scornful thing? Say, canst thou not pray, as Jesus did? and as the holy church once prayed for the imprisoned Peter? Are thy bands stronger than the walls of stone which encircled him? Are thy foes more vigilant than his? Had Jesus but breathed out one petition to his Father in Heaven, when he stood in the dark night, betrayed, and friendless,—immediately an angelic legion would have sped o'er the starry plain, and rescued him. Trust in God, ever, Christian; the armies of the Lord of Hosts are encamped about thee, and He who rules their shining ranks is called Jehovah-jireh!

As long as christians live—sinners repent—and earth falls short of heaven,—angels will not have fulfilled their mission. At last it will end in triumph. Their innumerable myriads shall grace with angelic splendor the triumphal return of the Prince Emmanuel; when seated upon the throne of his glory, before him shall be gathered all nations, and every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess Him Lord of All,—

Then shall the sons of God their shouts of joy
Anew begin;—as when the earth first rolled
A gem of purest water from the mine
Of heaven—and morning stars in virgin light
Sang through their swinging spheres.
The harmony
Of heaven and earth, with golden minstrelsy.
The ceaseless anthem of the blest, shall prove
The unity of angels, man, and God.

For the Crisis.

Tobacco.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Brother, sister, do you use tobacco?

"Yes."

Well, how much money do you spend in one week for it?

"Six cents."

Well, that is 24 cents a month, and twelve times 24 cents are $2,88 a year!

Why, that is 88 cts. more than the Crisis costs; and yet you cannot pay for that! O no. It seems to be more important that you should gratify that unnatural appetite, rather than do something to instruct and help your mind. Would you like to have the Lord come to change you just when you are putting a bit of tobacco in your mouth? Will he do it?

The Bible enjoins cleanness. Is your mouth clean, your clothes, your room? And the chapel where you go to worship? why, it seems like a great spit-box!

Do you think Jesus did so? Your neighbors drink spirit—you use tobacco—now which is cleanest? Which is most evil in God's sight?

Said a poor miserable drunkard to his mother, when she exhorted him to reform, —"well, mother, you smoke,—I'll drink!"

Is using tobacco shunning the appearance of evil? Is using tobacco laying aside "all filthiness of FLESH and spirit?" Is using tobacco abstaining from "all superfluity of naughtiness?" Is it not spending money foolishly? Is it not wasting the Master's goods?

Awake to righteousness, and sin not.

An Appeal.

We publish the following appeal in compliance with a request from the committee of the Advent Watchman:

TO THE READERS OF THE "CRISIS."

We commend the following communication from Bro. Turner, to the serious and prayerful consideration of every reader of the Crisis. All that have been interested in the Advent cause well know, that no one in the ranks has done more for its advancement, and sacrificed more than Bro. Turner; and was he now able to pay his honest debts, he never would have made this appeal.

Now dear Brn. the question is, shall we make one more effort to render him aid, for he is really poor, and suffering for the want of help; or shall we turn a deaf ear to his appeal, and decline, or neglect to extend the help so much needed. Could he get his honest dues, he could pay his debts and would not be reduced to the necessity of this appeal, and we sincerely hope, and can but believe that it will be responded to at once, and that, too, liberally, by all looking for Him who has taught us through his apostle, that it is "more blessed to give than to receive." Let those that have but little, give little; and those, that have much give as the Lord hath prospered them.

We hope the preaching Brn. will feel an interest, and do all they can to render this appeal successful. All money received will be credited in the Crisis

It may not be generally known that Bro. Turner's health is poor, more so than formerly, and that he is unable to be at much fatigue. He has worn himself out in the cause, and we confidently hope that he Brn. and Srs. will not let him appeal for help in vain. Let every reader say I will give all that I can and give it now, then his pressing wants will be speedily supplied, as they should be, and none will fail of their reward; for "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of them, ye have done it unto me," saith the Master.

S. S. ROGERS.
D. CRARY.

Hartford, June 20th, 1856.

DEAR BRN. CRARY AND ROGERS:—It has become my duty to report to you the success which has attended your effort the last winter, to achieve the payment of the debt the Watchman Association were owing me, by individual donations made directly to me.

Your appeal to the church reached a few warm hearts, which at once responded liberally to your call, but, only little has as yet been done. In all our effort, we have received only 87 dollars of the 872 dollars due me; hence, there is still due me, a balance of 785 dollars.

You, Brn., as Executive Committee of the Association, know that this debt is really due me, and you know, too, that I have long been, and still am distressed for want of this money, and that I ought to be paid at once.

I therefore make this report to you, that you may know how much is still due me, that if aught can be done to pay me all, or a considerable portion of said debt, it may be done as speedily as possible.

You, Brn., personally know my present poverty, and you know how intensely I have suffered for want of this my honest due; you know that I can never recover from my present embarassment, unless a part of this debt is paid me, and paid me soon; and I trust that you will do all in your power that I may be paid, in part, at least; it cannot be that the church are willing that I should suffer this loss alone, or that I should suffer it any longer.

Yours respectfully, J. TURNER.

If there are any of our readers who are indebted for the Watchman, we hope that this pressing call for what is honestly due Eld. Turner, will prompt them to forward the money at once, to aid in relieving him of his oppressive burden; and we hope, too, that all others, who can, will forward their donations for this object.—Ed.

Long Preaching and Long Praying.

BY HIRAM MUNGER.

How many sermons are nearly lost by tiring out the congregations. People generally can contain only about so much at a time. Experience teaches us that, in times of revivals, short discourses are the most acceptable, and effectual. The object of preaching is, first to stir the church to act, or get out of the way of sinners, giving them room to come along, showing them the distance between them and the christian, which always did and will produce more or less conviction on the mind of the sinner.

Good sermons are short.

Poor ones ought to be.

I have heard at least three thousand sermons; more than one thousand at camp-meetings, and have taken notice of these facts; when a sermon is short and full of zeal, the church is more ready to take hold and back it up; there is a stimulant to action in such cases.

1st. The elements of religion are stirred in them.

2nd. The time is not all used up by the preacher.

3. The congregation is not tired out and part gone.

I have heard some preachers complain as follows:

"I am tired out and my throat is sore." Another,—"the congregation kept nestling and running out," &c. &c. I told a Bro. a short time since, he was not more tired than I was hearing him, and his throat was not sorer than my ears and head, for he had preached one and a half hours, saying at the commencement, he intended to preach short, and wanted the brethren to take hold. I thought if this is his short sermon, the Lord deliver me from his long ones, for he had overrun the time half an hour, and then asked the brethren to fill up the time. How many such inconsiderate and inconsistent moves as this, I have seen. No wonder such men as these cease to be interesting, and die with a sore throat.

I like the course the old Baptist Dea. took with one of our Advent preachers a few weeks since. After a sermon of one and a half hours, he commenced the 2nd chapter of Daniel, and wanted the people to be patient for he had entered a subject that would be interesting. The old Deacon rose up and said,—"hold on, my friend, until we can go and get something to eat, and rest a while; your subject will be more likely to interest us." To this the preacher replied, he did not know as he could have the house only that time, and was going to give them their money's worth. The Dea. promised the house in the evening, and the preacher consented to divide his discourse, which had a much better effect upon the people, than the whole at one time.

I hope our long sermonizers hereafter, will cut their sermons into two parts or more, and not have them more than twice as long as our Savior used to preach.

Long praying is a characteristic of backsliders. It seems as if some people asked for everything, expecting and getting nothing. The Lord never dictated long prayers, nor set the example. Peter would have sunk 150 fathoms before some people would have got fairly at it. I hope my brethren will preach and try to bring about a reform in these things, that more good may be done, strength saved and patience preserved.

For the Crisis

Letter from Br. Merriam.

BRO. GRANT:—Presuming that the household of faith would like to hear from me, I dictate a line for the Crisis, being still unable to write myself. Since leaving the office, I have suffered severely at times from an affection of the optic nerve, and have had fears of being again plunged into the same scene of suffering and affliction through which I formerly passed. That fiery ordeal, which excluded me from the light of day, and in a great measure from the society of endeared friends, and kept the nervous system in a state of distress and agitation, and consequently depression, I cannot recall without painful emotions. But while I felt myself failing, I have clung with tenacity to the arm of the Lord, and have been comforted and strengthened by the prayer of faith. I have thought myself convalescent in some measure, but find the excessive heat debilitating. If the Lord has any further work for me to accomplish, I trust he will restore the diseased organ in his own good time. I write this partly to request the prayers of the church in my behalf. I would be glad to write a long communication, did circumstances permit.

Yours in the blessed hope,
J. MERRIAM.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. Bush.

BRO. GRANT:—Believing that it is always gratifying to you to hear from any of the members of the household of faith, I thought I would drop you a few lines expressive of my confidence in the conductors of the Crisis. I have prized the paper from the commencement, admiring its high tone of spirituality, its love of the truth, and its freedom in discussing the same; and my prayer is, that it may be kept clear from all sectarian influences, and kept about its appropriate work, ever keeping the evidences, all the evidences of the Lord's coming near at hand, before us. Such a paper the Church needs; such a paper should be spread broadcast over the world, without stopping to see who should have the pre-eminence, but all laboring to promote the truth, while each, esteeming other better than himself, is striving for that unity in the faith which shall make us invincible before the world. May God bless you, and sustain you in your arduous labors, is the prayer of your Brother, waiting for immortality. PARLEY BUSH.

Otterville, Sank Co., Wis., June, 16, '56.

Obituary.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to say through the paper to the friends of Bro. Thomas Wilson, formerly of Portland, Maine; that he is no more. He died at the residence of his daughter-in-law on Bonus Prairie, McHenry Co., Ill., the 2nd day of June. Bro. Wilson was an exemplary Christian, and sleeps in hope of the better resurrection. His last words were—"I am going to the kingdom." When it comes, I believe Bro. Wilson will be one of its occupants. May God command his blessing upon his afflicted and lonely companion and daughters, saving them with him where death can never come; where its ravages will never be known. JOHN HOWELL.

Domestic Summary.

WATERBURY, Ct. July 7th, 1856.

BRO. GRANT:—I rejoice that in connection with the Prophetic Periods we have the fulfilment of the last part of Rev. 17th before our eyes. Who cannot see that we are almost ready to go home.

I send you this article which I cut from the New York Daily times, of last week, entitled the "Beginning of the End in Italy." Let us all watch." Yours,

G. W. DENNEY.

THE BEGINNING OF THE END IN ITALY. From the Alps to Cape Passaro, it is evident that a fermentation is progressing in the political world, which must lead to a speedy outbreak or else to violent external repression. The news from Italy, by the last arrival from Europe, is partially obscured by the paramount question ot our relations with Great Britain; but we incline to the belief that the most prominent issues for Europe will become, within a few weeks, how the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies is to be disposed of; what steps are to be taken to solve the Austro-Sardinian problem; and what is to be done with and in the Pontifical States.

The arbitrary administration of penal justice in Naples has reached such a point, in spite of the remonstrances of other Governments, that England and France have addressed a quasiultimatum to the Neapolitan Government, clearly implying that, if a change does not soon become manifest, the Western Powers will be compelled to recall their Ministers, and replace them by Charges d' Affaires. Austria has joined in the remonstrance of England and France—a fact most significant at the present time, when Austria is said to be preparing to give up her Austrian and Lombard dominions in favor of the Duke of Tuscany.

Friendly relations between Sardinia and the Court of Vienna are not only disturbed, but of the most precarious tenure. A note from Count Cavour to Count Buol, the details of which are as yet unknown, is said to have determined the Emperor of Austria to a rupture of diplomatic intercourse—an event which can scarcely fail at the present moment to lead to hostilities. Piedmont is honeycombed with Mazzini—republicanism, and the far-sighted, bnt cautious ex-triumvir of Rome, has again obtained so great an indirect influence upon the affairs of northern Italy, that the Sardinian Ministry is compelled to give way to the popular anti-Austrian feeling which has been created.

Rome—bankrupted and miserable—is threatened with the withdrawal of the French support of Pius IX., and it is morally certain that the period for the egress of the troops of Louis Napoleon will be marked by a popular tumult, which is the more to be feared because it has been so long suppressed. How far Cardinal Antonelli is deserving of the harsh censure which he receives it is unnecessary to judge. He is a firm, uncompromising, far-sighted statesman, whose qualities would have raised him to eminence in any other country in the world but the Pontifical States. Placed, however, between two fires of friendly foreign invasion and a disaffected people, his unpopularity is a matter of course, and may end in his sacrifice when the barrier between the people and power shall have been swept away.

Rome, Parma, Naples, Sardinia are all burning with subterranean fires. Poor Italy!

FROM KANZAS.—By a gentleman who left Leavenworth City on Friday afternoon, we are in possession of further intelligence from Kanzas.

It appears the Missouri River is in complete possession of the pirates, and all boats passing are boarded by armed men, and searched for "abolitionists," and their weapons, if any are found, are taken away, while the Southern companies are landing constantly.

There were about 300 pirates at Leavenworth, and the different landings on the shore bristled with cannon.

Col. Sumner was powerless, he having been required to send the last company of troops, under his command, to Fort Pierce.

The Massachusetts Co. were disarmed at Waverly, but sent on up the river. It was said they were to be either hung, or tarred and feathered. Mr Grover was arrested at Leavenworth, and taken to Kanzas city, and it was feared he would be hung. The Chicago Company were at Alton, and would proceed to Rock Island to-night, thence through Iowa to Kanzas.—Chicago Journal, July 1.

FORT KEARNEY SURROUNDED BY 800 CHEYENNE INDIANS.—We have just received information from Fort Kearney of more Indian depredations, and a determination on the part of the red men to kill all their white friends. Capt Steinne, Second dragoons, is waiting the arrival of two companies, ordered to march to his assistance. On their arrival the Cheyenne braves will have to give way or bite the dust. —Leavenworth Jonrnal June 25.

KANSAS NEWS.--CHICAGO, July 2.—Passengers from Lexington bring intelligence of the capture of a company of emigrants from Ottawa, on board the steamer Arabia, on Friday night They were robbed of everything and detained close prisoners. It was resolved by the mob to take the Massachusetts men in the company up the river and hang their leader, Decatur, immediately. All the arms, provisions, baggage and money of the prisoners were confiscated for the use of the mob.

Foreign News.

QUEBEC, June 30.

The Canadian screw steamship North American, from Liverpool, on the 18th of June, passed the River de Loup at 10 o'clock this morning, and arrived at this port this evening.

Consols closed at 94 1-4 a 94 5-8.

The state of trade in Manchester, and the manufacturing districts, was improving.

ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The American difficulty is likely to be settled amicably, and Mr. Dallas will not be dismissed.

The funds rose slightly in consequence.

In the house of Lords on Monday evening, the 16th, the Earl of Clarendon stated, in reply to the Earl of Derby, that it was not the intention of the government to advise Her Majesty to suspend diplomatic relations with the United States. This announcement was received with loud cheers.

The Earl of Derby expressed his satisfaction with the statement, but he regarded the course taken by the government as humiliating, and as acknowledging that they had been in error.

Lord Clarendon appealed to the House of Lords not to join the Earl of Derby in pressing the question, and the subject was then dropped.

Arrival of the Canada.

HALIFAX, July 1.

The steamer Canada, Capt. Stone, from Liverpool, June 21, 11 1-2 A. M., arrived at this port at 9 o'clock this P. M.

The Canada sailed from Halifax for Boston at 11 o'clock.

FRANCE.

Napoleon is taking steps to have the Empress appointed Regent for her son. A project of law on the subject has been sent to the Senate and debated with closed doors. The project proposes that on the Emperor's demise, the Empress should reign, assisted by a Council of Regency, whose names the Emperer will leave under sealed envelopes. Meanwhile the government papers are writing up the project.

Letters from Paris, 21st, states that the Moniteur contains a decree ordering the creation of a general system of Inspection of the Army and Commissariat, by a special staff established for that purpose.

The Moniteur also gives the project of the Senate's Committee on the Regency. It states that the Emperor is to attain his majority at 18 years of age; the Empress mother to be the Regent and guardian of her son during his minority, but not to contract second marriage while it continues. In case of the Empress's death, the Regency to pass to the senior prince of France, then to other Princes in order of hereditary succession, and failing then, all to the Council of Regency appointed by the Senate.

Two and a-half million francs have been collected for the sufferers by the inundation.

RUSSIA.

The Russian government is turning its attention to American territory.

An Imperial decree has notified that, to assist in the development of the Russian naval power in the Pacific Ocean, the administration of the fleets and harbors thereon be placed under the independent control of the Governor of Eastern Siberia.

An expedition is fitting out at Hamburg by a Russian American company, to sail next month for Russo-American territory. The expedition is of the nature of a new colony, numbering 500 persons, including artificers of all kinds. The Russian ships Czarowitch and Constantine, and a Hamburg steamer, will convey the expedition.

The papers state that it now appears settled that no grain to speak of will be exported this year from Russia, and hundreds of vessels in the Black Sea which had gone there in anticipation of meeting cargoes, may have to return empty.

Prince Menschikoff has been summoned from retirement, by the emperor, to consult respecting a rumored military expedition in Asia. The latest advices from St. Petersburg state that in consequence of dearness of provisions in the Crimea, and sickness prevailing there, a decree has been issued prohibiting all persons not inhabitants from landing there.

APPOINTMENTS.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

WORCESTER, July 7th, 1856.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please give the following notice a place in the Crisis. As we understand by Bro. Hemenway that Bro. Decker has changed his appointment to the 20th of this month, it makes an alteration with some others, and they will please act accordingly:

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may perhaps subserve the cause of humanity to present the advertisement to the public.

"Jesus wept."

AIR—"Lilly Dale."

BY MARIA.

O'er Judah's plain a mournful strain
Came from the heights above,
As our Lord did go, in pitying woe,
To view that city of love.

CHORUS.

O, Judah! 'tis Jesus who weeps o'er thee,
As an infant He'd bare
With parental care—
A King to thy nation would be.

While extending his hands o'er thy beautiful lands,
Pure love pervaded his breast;
There He called Judah's flock, to Zion's "tried rock"
To that land where saints shall rest.
O, Judah, &c.

We have heard of late that thy fallen state,
Must be changed to Eden's bloom;
With the saints on earth of immortal birth,
Shout victory o'er thy tomb.
O, Judah, &c.

Soon He will arise,—from yonder skies,
Descend, on earth to reign;
The saints from the tomb in their new-earth home,
Shall see their Lord again.
O, Judah, &c.

Christ's Entry into Jerusalem.

BY A. M. STARK.

Erom Olivet's sequestered seats
What sounds of transport rise!
A voice of melody and praise,
Ascending to the skies.
Behold him there amid the crowd,
The Savior of mankind!
Triumphal shouts before him rise,
And shouts reply behind;
And "strike!" they cry, "your loudest string,
He comes! Hosanna to our King!"

Nor these alone their King adored,
For long ere this a train
Of prophets, bards, and patriarch seers
Commenced the glorious strain;
The light of Heaven in every breast,
Its fire on every tongue,
In tuneful chorus on they pressed,
And this the song they sung;
"All hail, the Prince of David's line!
Hosanna to the Man Divine!"

He came to earth, through life he passed
A man of grief and woes;
At length by wicked hands was slain
As Scripture plainly shows.
A noble army followed on,
A train of martyrs brave,
And whilst they kissed affliction's rod,
This song of tribute gave;
"We'll tread the path our Master trod,
Hosanna to the Lamb of God!"

A little train can now be seen
Which doth bring up the rear,
They're waiting for their bridegroom Lord,
Each moment to appear.
The wedding garment they put on
And watch the way along,
And now they cheer their waiting hearts
By joining in the song;
"Behold He now doth surely come,
Hosanna to the Holy One!"

But notes more loud and sweet shall rise
Ere long on Zion's hill,
When all the hosts are gathered home,
The anthem there to swell;
Then, like he water's mighty roar—
The rushing of the sea—
Their voices shall be ever heard
In notes of melody;
And sweet the song forever rings
"Hosanna to the King of Kings!"

The Covenant with Abraham and his Faith.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

There seems to be a rooted prejudice in the minds of some people against Abraham's heirship "of the world;" and a strong propensity to contend that the promises made to Abraham were all fulfilled when his posterity, the Israelites, were led over Jordan by Joshua, the nations destroyed, their inheritance divided by lot, and they were established in the land of Canaan. There was a covenant made with Abraham when he had no child; which may be found in Gen. 12: 7. "And the Lord appeared unto Abraham, and said,—unto thy seed will I give this land." Again, Gen. 15: 18–21. "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abraham, saying,—Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates." Again, this covenant was affirmed to Isaac in Gen. 26: 3–5. "Sojourn in this land and I will be with thee, and bless thee; for unto thee and unto thy seed will I give all these countries, and I will perform the oath that I sware unto Abraham thy father. And I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven; * *, and in thy seed shall all the nations be blessed; because that Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes and my laws." Again it was renewed to Jacob, when he fled from Esau, his brother; "I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac; the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed." Gen. 28: 13. Thus the covenant made with Abraham was renewed to Isaac, and confirmed to Jacob, saying, "unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance." Here is a covenant made, confirmed and established, with the oath of God, that their literal seed should literally possess the land of Canaan; and the bounds of their deed were fixed, and recorded, at "the river of Egypt, and the great river Euphrates."

Though this covenant contains some blessings which are everlasting, I do not conceive that this covenant is everlasting in the common acceptation of the word; for had it been so, they would never have been removed therefrom, but would have remained there to this day; which we know is not the case; and it is no proof, because these promises were fulfilled literally to the seed of Abraham, that other promises made him personally, were also fulfilled to them only. I cannot conceive how a positive promise made to one individual of an inheritance to him personally, can be enjoyed by another, in any way to fulfil that promise; and whatever promises were made to Abraham personally, will as surely be fulfilled to him personally, as there is ability in the promises to perform them. And when God said to him, "Arise, walk through the land, in the length of it and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee," Gen. 13: 17, He meant what He said, and said what he meant. By this, and other promises made sure to Abraham by the oath of Jehovah, he was made "heir of the world;" but it was not to him or "his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." This promise had no allusion to any law, but was made voluntarily and unconditionally, and did not depend on any act of obedience that can be rendered by man in the flesh; it was all of "grace to the end, the promise might be sure to ALL the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all." Rom. 4: 13, 16. Not that we are exempt from obedience, for by it alone we prove our faith. James 2: 18. "And the scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, in thee shall all nations be blessed." "So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham."

"That no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, is evident; for, the just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith, but the man that doeth them shall live in them." "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, the covenant which was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise." Gal. 3: 6–18. "Now we, brethren as Isaac was, are the children of promise;" and consequently belong to that "everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure;" "For when God made promise to Abraham, because He could swear by no greater, He sware by himself; saying, Surely, blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee." "For men verily swear by the greater; and an oath for confirmation is to shew an end of all strife, wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His counsel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge, to lay hold on the hope set before us; which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an High Priest forever after the order of Melchizedec." Heb. 6: 13–20.

This covenant, though given before the Sinai covenant, I believe to be in effect the "new covenant;" for its basis is the pure grace of God; His law was written in Abraham's heart, and he exemplified the righteousness of God by an act of overcoming faith, when he offered Isaac on the altar. And though made (and ratified by the oath of God,) with Abraham, he was constituted the father of all them that believe; yet that covenant was not dedicated till the blood of Christ was shed; called "the blood of the everlasting covenant;" He says "this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for you,"—hence it is called the new covenant, and it is alluded to all through the Scriptures. 2 Kings, 13: 23; Jer. 31: 31. It is called a "covenant of peace," an "everlasting covenant." Ezek. 37: 26, 27. It may be said all this is true; we believe that Abraham was the father of all them that believe, and that the everlasting covenant which was dedicated with the blood of Christ, was first given to him; and this covenant gives him eternal life, and if so, how can he be the "heir of the world?" In answer, I would say,—Abraham did not receive the possession of that land which God ordered him to walk through, "in the length of it and in the breadth of it, which he promised to give to HIM; nor any part of it, for Stephen said,—Acts. 7: 5, "and he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet He promised that He would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child." And how can that promise be fulfilled to Abraham but by the possession of it, in the new earth." Says the objector, "I do not believe there is anything to be fulfilled there; he entered into glory when he died, and he will receive all that God promised in heaven; all the promises that had been given him he of course received here, only what he is now enjoying in glory." But "the Scriptures cannot be broken;" and we must not make them a confused jumble of inconsistencies and contradictions. Paul tells us, Heb. 11: 9, 13, "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise. For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" "Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea-shore innumerable. These all died in faith, NOT having received the promises; but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." They embraced the word of promise, but they were not brought to the enjoyment of the reality; and as "one jot, or one tittle" cannot pass without a perfect fulfillment, we look for Abraham and all his seed who are of his faith, to rise up in the first resurrection, and enter on the enjoyment of that very territory which was first promised him,—not as a reward, but a pure act of bounty; for Abraham believed God and it was counted to him for righteousness." It may be asked,—"but does not Paul say, Heb. 6: 15"—"And so after he had patiently endured, he received the promise?" Yes, and he did receive a son, Isaac, when he was "an hundred years old;" and he lived till he was 175, and left a numerous posterity when he died, but this is not the inheritance. What is an inheritance? It is the patrimony of an heir to an hereditary estate, generally speaking; sometimes it is a free gift or grant, by will, deed, bond, or otherwise, of certain real estate made sure to the promisee, by the promiser, which is the case here; God in Christ willed to Abraham a certain territorial location, which was pointed out, and described by the four cardinal points of the compass. Gen. 13: 16. But he could not enter on the possession of it, because a will or "testament" is "of no force at all" till after the death of the testator; and this unfolds the mystery why Abraham did not inherit it while he lived. There is another reason greatly convincing; the present earth is both under the curse of God and under the dominion of Satan; and must be redeemed from that curse and become a "purchased possession," before the heirs can obtain their legacies. That will, or testament, is now sealed by the blood of the testator, and he is his own executor, and as soon as the "purchased possession" is redeemed, they will enter upon it. In the mean time, the heirs are being "sealed by that Holy Spirit of promise," which is an earnest of the same inheritance. And as every heir desires a "better country" than this, even "an heavenly" one; therefore "God is not ashamed to be called their God; for He hath prepared for them a city."

Here appears the difference between the covenant to the literal seed, and that to those of promise; the former received their inheritance by deed, bounded by the great rivers, and entered at once on the promises, and took possession; the latter received theirs by will, and consequently must wait till that will is set up and executed. Thus all that multitude,—"which the apostle tells us "the time would fail" him to enumerate,—"having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better things for us, that they, without us should not be made perfect."

Hope and Duty of the Church.

BY MATTHEW HENRY.

Matthew Henry was born in Flintshire, England, in 1663. He was a pious dissenter, and deservedly eminent as a commentator of the Scriptures, Wm. Romaine declaring, "There is no comment upon the Bible either ancient or modern, in all respects equal to Mr. Henry's" We give copious extracts.

On Luke 12: 45, 46; "Our looking at Christ's second coming as a thing at a distance, is the cause of all those irregularities which render the thought of it terrible to us."

On watching: "To watch impliss not only to believe that our Lord will come, but to desire that he would come, to be often thinking of his coming, and always looking for it as sure and near, and the time of it uncertain. To watch for Christ's coming is to maintain that gracious temper and disposition of mind which we would be willing that our Lord when he comes, should find us in. To watch is to be aware of the first notices of his approach, that we may immediately attend his motions and address ourselves to the duty of meeting him."

On 2d Pet. 3d chap., of the final fire he says: "It is yet to come, and will surely come, though we know not when nor upon what particular age or generation of men; and therefore we are not, we cannot be, sure that it may not happen in our own times."

On John 18: 19; "It is meet that disciples should be warned of the haste and end of time, and apprised as much as may be of the prophetic periods of time."

On Rom. 8th chap., Henry makes "the creature" to mean "the whole frame of nature, especially that of this lower world; the whole creation, the compages of inanimate and sensible creatures;" the vanity and bondage and corruption is the curse to which the whole creation is subject, now "hastening to a total dissolution by fire." He says: "the creature that is now thus burdened, shall, at the time of the restitution of all things, be delivered from this bondage into the glorious liberty of the children of God. They shall no more be subject to vanity and corruption, and the other fruits of the curse; but, on the contrary, this lower world will be renewed, when there will be new heavens and a new earth, 2d Pet. 3: 13; Rev. 21: 1; and there shall be a glory conferred upon all the creatures which shall be (in the proportion of their natures,) as suitable and as great an advancement as the glory of the children of God shall be to them. The fire at the last day shall be a refining, not a destroying, annihilating fire. Compare with this Ps. 96: 10–13; Ps. 98: 7–9, "Let the heavens rejoice, &c."

On verse 19, "At the second coming of Christ there will be a manifestation of the children of God. Now, the saints are God's hidden ones, the wheat seems lost in a heap of chaff; but then they shall be manifested. * * And this redemption of the creature is reserved till then; for as it was with man and for man that they fell under the curse, so with man and for man shall they be delivered. All the curse and filth that now adheres to the creature shall be done away then, when those that have suffered with Christ upon earth shall reign with him upon earth. This the whole creation looks and longs for.

Verse 23. We groan within or among ourselves. It is the unanimous vote, the joint desire of the whole church; all agree in this. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. The groaning notes a very earnest and importunate desire, the soul pained with the delay, * * groans not as the pangs of our dying, but as the throes of a woman in travail, groans that are symptoms of life, not of death."

2 Pet. 3. "That time which men think to be the most improper and unlikely, and therefore are most secure, will be the time of the Lord's coming. Let us then beware how we in our thoughts and imaginings put that day far away from us; let us rather suppose it to be so much nearer in reality, by how much further off it is in the opinion of the ungodly world."

"The first coming of our Lord Jesus Christ was what the people of God earnestly waited and looked for; that coming was for the consolation of Israel. How much more should they wait with expectation and earnestness for his second coming, which will be the day of their complete redemption, and of his most glorious manifestation?"

"They (the wicked,) will still attack us till the end of time; till our Lord is come, they will not themselves believe that he will come; nay, they will laugh at the very mention of his second coming, and do what in them lies to put all out of countenance who seriously believe and wait for it."

On Luke 18: 8, "Now when he comes will he find faith in the earth? The question implies a strong negative; no, he shall not, he himself foresees it. * * In general he will find but few good people, few that are really and truly good; many that have the form and fashion of godliness, but few that have faith. Even to the end of time there will be occasion for the same complaint; the world will grow no better, no, not when drawing towards its period. Bad it is, and bad it will be, and worst of all just before Christ's coming; the last times will be the most perilous. In particular he will find few that have faith concerning his coming. It intimates that he will delay his coming so long that wicked people will begin to defy it, and to say, 'Where is the promise of his coming?' They will challenge him to come. Isa. 5: 18, 19, and Amos 5: 18, 19, and his delay will harden them in their wickedness. Even his own people will begin to despair of it, and to conclude he will never come, because he has passed their reckoning."

On Matt. 25, "As christians, we profess not only to believe and look for, but love and long for the appearing of Christ and to act in our whole conversation with regard to it. The second coming of Christ is the centre in which all the lines of our religion meet, and to which the whole of the divine life hath a constant reference and tendency."

On Dan. 12: 10, Henry, though lookign for an extensive proclamation of the gospel, looked not for its universal reception, but says:

"As long as the world stands there will still be in it such a mixture as we now see there is of good and bad. We long to see all wheat and no tares in God's field; all corn and no chaff in God's floor; but it will not be till the time of ingathering, till the winnowing-day comes; both must grow together until the harvest. There is no remedy but that wicked people will do wickedly; and such people there are and will be in the world till the end of time."

On Rev. 22: 20, "This is Chris'ts farewell to his church, and the Church's hearty echo to Christ's promise. Come, Lord Jesus! thus beats the pulse of the church, thus breathes that gracious spirit which actuates and informs the mystical body of Christ, and we should never be satisfied till we find such a spirit breathing in us, and causing us to look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ. What comes from Heaven in a promise, should be sent back to Heaven in a prayer. Come, Lord Jesus, put an end to this state of sin, and sorrow, and temptation, and gather thy people out of this evil world!"

So writes the pious Henry in a commentary, the superior excellencies of which, says Dr. A. Alexander, are admitted by "thousands of judicious theologians," and of which Dr. Adam Clarke affirms," "It is always orthodox." Henry died in 1714.

⁂ Persons wishing to investigate this subject fully, are referred to "The Voice of the Church," and other publications issued by H. L. Hastings, Peace Dale R. I.

The Secret of good Writing

"The secret of good writing seems to lie in this simple maxim: Be sure you have an idea before you attempt to express it. If you clearly comprehend is in your own mind what you wish to communicate, nature and reason, together with a little practice will most certainly teach you how to say it, and how to say it in an appropriate manner.

A single idea is fully sufficient for one mind to manage at one time. And it may be added, that if the idea is one of much importance, it would be most dignified by being honored with a private carriage.

'Divide and conquer,' is as valuable a rule in literary as in military tactics. The more extensive the theme which the writer proposes to himself to discuss, the less, usually, he has to say upon it. Such subjects can be mastered with ease only by descending from generals to particulars, and treating of subjects in their individual parts.

There is nothing more popular, especially with young writers, than brilliancy of style. This manner of writing is certainly excellent in its proper place, but there are many topics which do not require this quality and many indeed are much injured by it. The language of every dissertation should be that which is best calculated to express the thought in the happiest manner.

As the rays of the sun will not enkindle a blaze unless brought to a focus, so the thoughts of a writer will not set the hearts of his readers on fire, unless all are made to converge to a single point. Some writers seem unable ever to express themselves in a cool, calm, rational manner, on any subject. With them every virtue is godlike, every fault a felony, every breeze a tempest, every mole-hill a mountain. They appear to think their manner of writing is sublimlty; but their judicious readers (if they have any such) call it turpidity and absurdity.

The design of language is to give expression to thought; that style of writing, therefore, must necessarily be the best, which most rapidly, most clearly and perfectly conveys to the reader's mind what the writer intended he should understand."
—GOETHE.

Frankness.

"Frankness is supposed to be a common virtue. It is most uncommon. It is indeed an extrordinary thing. It requires truth, simplicity, love and genuine goodness. Many men speak plainly when they do speak, but they are not open and free. Many speak truth very plainly, when angry; many speak pleasant truth frankly. But few there are whose souls are so balanced in an atmosphere of love that they speak whatever needs to be said, to each and all, plainly, gently fully. The dearest friends live together for years without daring to speak things which they know, and which each party knows that the other knows. Parents live with a reserve years long toward their children. Children carry untouched, unsyllabled, thoughts and feelings that take hold of their very being. Friends meet and part day by day, friends so true, that they would almost die for each other, or what is harder than this, who are willing to live for each other, and never speak of things that each knows is passing in the other's mind. It is very strange to see people come up in conversation to topics, that, by a tacit free-masonry, are sared, and without word or look, one glides past on one side and the other upon the other side, and meet beyond, going down the common channel again. Was there ever a thoughtful, sensitive person, that dared to be open, transparent and frank?

But, however this may be, there can be no doubt that christian people are not frank enough for each other's good. It men knew how to speak the truth in love, how rich one might become. A man might stand then in the focus of the wisdom of all his friends. But, refusing to let their light shine, men now groupe in the partial light of their own wisdom, distempered by self-love."—Henry Ward Beecher.

SELF GOVERNMENT IN CHILDREN.—A modern writer says:

"I know nothing more touching than the efforts of self-government of which little children are capable, when the best parts of their nature are grown vigorously under the light and warmth of parental love. How beautiful is the self-control of the little creature who stifles his sobs of pain because his mother's pitying eye is upon him in tender sorrow! or that of the babe who abstains from play and sits quietly on the floor, because somebody is ill. I have known a very young child slip over to the cold side of the bed on a winter's night, that a grown up sister might find a warm one. I have known a little girl submit spontaneously to hours of irksome restraint and disagreeable employment, merely because it was right. Such wills as these—so strong and yet so humble, so patient, and so dignified—were never impaired by fear, but flourished thus under the influence of love, with its sweet excitements and holy supports."

A man who puts aside his religion because he is going into society, resembles a person taking off his shoes because he is to walk upon thorns.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

Always let the business portion of your letter stand by itself. If necessary, it can be written on a separate slip of paper and enclosed in the same envelope.

Wickedness of the World.

BY B. M. MATHEWSON.

"And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Gen. 6 : 5.

This is the Lord's plain, brief statement of man's condition just prior to the flood.

The Savior informed his disciples in answer to their inquiry,—"What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?"—that it should be "as it was in the days of Noah!"

What state of morals then should those look for who have seen all the physical signs of the Master's return?

Ans. They should expect wickedness to prevail to such an alarming extent, it may truthfully be declared—"The earth is filled with violence!"

That is; the inhabitants are unnaturally vehement—outraging even nature itself. It implies an actual rushing into wickedness! The number of the righteous according to this analogy must be very small! The lowest estimate of the antediluvian inhabitants, calculated by the progress of population, amounted to eighty million!! Only one family saved out of eighty million!! that is, ONE, to ten million!!!

And shall we look for a higher ratio of righteousness now extant?

Christ in his comparison shows that the state of morals and real godliness at the time of His second advent, would be analogous to that before the deluge. And shall we, my fellow pilgrims, be disheartened, and hang our heads in despondency because no more receive the blessed hope in the love of it?

Nay! the Master has kindly apprised us what to expect, therefore we will conclude to "think it not strange * * * as though some strange thing had happened," but receive it as a sure precursor of the Master's approach.

What observer of the present aspect of morals and religion cannot at a glance discern a remarkable coincidence with the times of Noah?

But where is the cause and what the commencement of this flood of wickedness with which the earth is filled? Can we mistake the origin of the multitudinous crimes that now sweep this mundane system?

Nay. I think all must concede that however heinous the outward act, it was first concocted in the thoughts. Thus, God knowing the first commencement of evil to be in the imagination, strictly commands us to abstain from any evil imaginations against our neighbor or brother. Zech, 7 : 10, and 8 ; 17. "Let the unrighteous man forsake his thoughts." "Meditate in the law of God day and night," and the outward acts will be wholesome, courteous, reverential, and God-like. The thoughts are the fountain, the outward acts the streams that issue therefrom. Purify the fountain—as a matter of course the streams will be pure. It is true the color of the soil, over which those streams pass, may, at first glance, impart a difference of shade; but dip the water from the gray, green, or brown soil and it looks and tastes just like the fountain; so the society in which the pure pilgrim is obliged to stop, may, to the superficial observer, impart a slight tinge of gray, or brown; but transplant him on pellucid soil—then with a single eye see if you can discern a mote, even.

Nothing excites more exultant joy in the heart of our adversary, than to see one of God's children turn traitor! Nothing casts greater gloom over the church, and causes each member's heart to bleed at every pore more than to see one of their number selling their eternal birthright for a mess of pottage!! Counting "the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing."

The present object, therefore, is to induce all, especially the young, to beware of the first step in the backslider's path, which is the indulgence of vain thoughts. Our adversary is shrewd, and will not be likely to introduce first to the child of God thoughts that are plainly and positively evil, but a train apparently harmless, yet if encouraged or suffered to remain unmolested will lead their captive into forbidden regions. Beware, then, of those extravagant imaginations and chimerical plans of what you would wish to obtain, or choose to be if you could frame the course of things according to your own desire; because such a train of thought is not productive of any good, but of more or less evil. It is a waste of time and intellect that were given us for more profitable and noble purposes.

During such indulgences, real loss must be sustained by inattention to those realities Providence has made binding upon us.

It also nourishes a frivolous turn of thought, not unlike that of novel reading.

It disqualifies for a close and holy communion with God. Let the child of God indulge one half hour in building "castles in the air," then essay to commune with his Heavenly Father, and he will find a chasm has opened so wide between them, that it will be extremely difficult to be heard.

It is true, vain thoughts may intrude themselves like unbidden guests, but instead of kindly entertaining or welcoming them, let us immediately turn them out of door, using the weapon of earnest prayer, and they will soon seek a more congenial asylum. But we must be resolute, for these impudent intruders are not ejected or kept out by a faint wish! But let PERSEVERANCE be inscribed in golden capitals on the tablet of your mind, and blessed be God, if the optic nerve does not discern personal angels ministering to you, your mental vision will realize the comforting influence imparted by these heavenly visitors!! Matt. 4 : 11.

Were our dearest earthly friend to apprise us of a most malignant enemy that was seeking admission to our premises, in order to secure our destruction—that he was constantly on the alert; and that friend should then solemnly bid us beware of loose gates, and unlocked doors, should we remain careless and fold our arms in case and only shut them when convenient?

The Word of God plainly informs us respecting this virulent enemy, and shows us he is not only shrewd, but active. He never lies dormant, but goeth about seeking whom he may devour! For this cause God commands us to "be vigilant," and steadfast.

This enemy is acquainted with our most vulnerable point, and understands what thoughts will soonest take with the different organizations, and is sure to take advantage of the weak points. E. g.; To the sluggish and inactive temperament, he will instance the uselessness and folly even of exerting ourselves so much when the Lord is so able to take care of His own cause. Then thoughts of ease and self indulgence are introduced, and if not repelled, will produce palsy and death.

He will be likely to inspire the active with thoughts of emulation, therefore the door of the mind should be carefully guarded against the first thought not productive of good. We may easily discern the train of thought actually beneficial. The influence of our thoughts will either prove pernicious or salutary.

Let us realize the advantage accruing to the child of God by a proper government of the thoughts. Much knowledge may be attained and retained; also a high state of spirituality may be achieved, and God has promised to keep that one in "perfect peace whose thoughts are stayed" on Himself. From the same high authority we are assured that the crowning christian grace, which is the bond of perfectness, "thinketh no evil."

Again; there can be no valid excuse for indulging vain thoughts, seeing "Our Father" has armed us with adequate weapons to vanquish these foes so destructive to spiritual attainments. Says the apostle 2 Cor. 10 : 4, 5,—

"For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds.

Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

Who desires to be more god-like?—possessing more of his blessed spirit? Let such an one THINK more of God,—of his glorious plan of salvation, and of the "recompense of reward."

For the Crisis.

Religion.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Religion, at present, with a vast many who profess it, seems to have become quite a nominal matter. Multitudes appear to think it consists in "going to church," paying the minister,—a scanty pattern that sometimes—saying prayers, looking solemn at communion and baptismal seasons, looking devout—and occasionally taking a nap when the minister preaches, and saying over some good words once in a while—not too often. Well, some of these things are good, to be sure, but put all the good of them together, and, in themselves, they scarce amount to the smallest vowel of religion. When shall we learn to estimate religion at New Testament sterling value? What is it? The definition inspiration has given of it is the following:

1. To visit the widow in her affliction."

2. To "visit the fatherless in their affliction."

3. To "keep one's-self unspotted from the world."

Indeed, such a definition of religion, now-a-days, really seems quite antiquated. Just hear the exclamations, "What, religion consist in looking after the welfare of poor widows? Dear me! What! a man or woman of our standing be looking after the wants of ragged, dirty children? Mercy! Why, I never dreamed of such a thing!"

No, friend, it is seriously to be feared you never did; for your actions seem perfectly to accord with your declaration. It is to be feared you never read, with a prayerful heart, the two following passages of scripture; Jesus "went about doing good;" and, "as he was, so are we." How many hours of your life have you spent in seeking the good of others? And yet, the Savior spent all his life on earth, for the good of mankind. You say you are his disciple, but how unlike him do you act! Our Lord informs us, in the 25th chapter of Matthew, that, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats—and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, 'Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; For—" What? You went regularly to church? No. And yet that is right. You paid your minister well? No. You came to communion and baptism? No. You had a good report in the church? No. You preached excellent sermons? No. You said many good things? No. And yet all these things are right.

But in the comparison of other things, which he names, the Judge seems to regard these things lightly. Hear him.

"I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

But let us turn over the leaf.

"Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them I never knew you; depart from me ye that work iniquity." Matt. 7 : 21–23.

A person will act out the spirit he possesses whenever circumstances prepare the way for him to do so. One that possesses the spirit of holy benevolence, will make it manifest, and will be blessed, not simply because he does certain things, but because he seeks the grace which creates the disposition to do them; and hence all the praise redounds to the Redeemer's grace and power; and hence, when we have done all our duty, we are unprofitable servants; for the Savior himself has done the work through us, and he himself reflects all the glory.

But let us illustrate the matter. A poor friendless, half-clad female comes to your door, and solicits hospitality—you repulse her; some one else in the same vicinity relieves her. She subsequently attends the same place of worship with yourself—what good think you your prayers and other religious expressions will do her? On the other hand, attend to her wants, and make her heart glad with the comforts of life; and when in her presence you bow down, and lift up your prayer to God, you bear her spirit along with your own, as a witness of your sincerity before the throne. Her tears of gratitude fall like raindrops, and thankfulness compels her to love your God, and her God!

See that outcast fatherless child in the street—no one properly cares for him—the earthly guard of his tender years sleeps in the dark grave, and poverty has almost driven her that was a loving mother, to desperation; so that her natural affection seems indifferent; go, speak kindly to him, bring him home, provide clothing, food, employment for him—educate him, and thus make a widow's heart, and a mother's heart to sing for joy, and raise up one to say, in after time, "I will worship the God of my christian friend." A woman in the city of New York, who loves the Savior, goes out into the streets to work for her Master. She reaches that part of the city where misery dwells in the habitations of cruelty, and looks down into one of those dens of wretchedness, as if assaying to enter. Will she have courage to venture? Doubtful. Yes, God bless and protect her, she has entered. What a sight is before her! A husband and a father, in unconscious drunken slumber, lies stretched upon the filthy floor—a wife and a mother, sick, pale, thin, and haggard, reclines on a rotten mat of straw, with an infant at the breast, fruitlessly endeavoring to draw nourishment therefrom—several other small children, crying with hunger, and nearly or quite naked, are scattered in different parts of the gloomy apartment. What will this disciple of Jesus do? Pray? Not vocally, it is not the time for that. Read the Bible? No, that is not the work now. Talk about religion? No. Act religion! She raises up the suffering woman, and feeds her as if she were her own sister, washes and clothes her, and her little ones, supplies food and needed furniture, makes them comfortable, and then meekly offers up her prayer to God and retires. The drunkard at length awakes from his liquor, and looks around bewildered, exclaiming,

"What is it, wife? are we in heaven?" The wife with tears of gratitude, replies, "I believe one of God's angels has been here."

Look in again, a few weeks after—that disciple is there again. She reads the book of God—they listen—how can they help it? She bows down to pray—not a knee refuses to follow the example—love and benevolence have conquered.

Look again, a few months after, and see father, mother, and children, all sitting happily and smilingly in one slip, in the house of God. What has done it? Religion.

Look once more, and see widow, orphan, father, mother, children, and the feeble instrument of their salvation grouped with angels in glory! What has done it? Religion.

Dost thou think, friend, that thou canst carry thy pride, thy love of pleasure, thy desire for vanity, thy greediness for honor, thy covetousness, thy selfishness, thy sin, and thy Savior, too? Nay, verily, thou must be prepared fully to say, "I am crucified with Christ." I yield my all to him. "Come ye out, and be ye separate" from self and the world, and live only for thy God.

The Advance to India.

No. II.

[The following extract is from an English work of deep interest, to which we have before referred.—ED.]

THE EAGLE was the legionary standard of the Old ROMAN EMPIRE—a silver Eagle, with outspread wings, and carrying a thunderbolt in his talons. For five hundred years this mighty Eagle hovered over the earth, and cast its shadow on the battlefield, and on half the human race. It was overwhelmed, at length, by the swarms that floated down from the dreary northern wilds, and fled away amidst the clouds of war. After fourteen hundred years it rose again under the auspices of NAPOLEON, and soared above the bloody plains of the New Roman Empire. True to its first instincts, it was always Roman; Roman at the first, it disdained to conquer again, until it conquered as the symbol of a Roman conqueror. Again it was overwhelmed by innumerable adversaries, and fled away again amid the smoke of Waterloo. The Eagle having fled, all the kites and vultures of Europe seized upon the carcase of the empire, tore it up, and divided it among themselves. They assumed the title of the "Holy Alliance," and exulted in the thought that the Roman Eagle had disappeared for ever. Forty years rolled by—another war broke out—and, amid the smoke of war, the Roman Eagle soared again, with wings as firm and youthful as before. Again it hovered above the astonished earth, and then stooped in triumph upon the grim Crimean hills. The Roman Eagle is once more the monarch of the air!

How vain are the schemes of man—how God has taken the wise in the snare of their own wisdom! We gloried for forty years in the destruction of Napoleon—we boasted that England had struck him down forever, and now he is alive again. We spent five hundred million sterling, we ruined ourselves with national debt, in order to break down the empire of the first Napoleon, and now we are spending millions more in order to establish the empire of the Third. We spent our strength to secure ourselves from the invasion of one Napoleon, and now, having regained our strength, we are exhausting it again, in order to expose ourselves to the hostility of another. O fools, that we are, to cherish and revive the wild beast that had nearly torn us to pieces; and then, to place our right hand (our best troops) in his very jaws, and say—"He is too amiable to hurt us." He plays with our hand, because our friendship is serviceable; but let us once contradict him, and he will close his jaws upon it, and tear it to atoms.

The Roman Eagle is aloft again, and now let us see the direction of his flight—let us descend to plain matter-of-fact. The Eagle standards were first concentrated in Paris, around one dark, silent, and impenetrable man—the representative of the First Napoleon. This man has invariably announced himself as the Man of Destiny—under the influence of some fatal star—predestined to avenge his predecessor, and to revive his empire. With far greater wisdom than the former Napoleon, he proceeds, step by step, and regulates the flight of his eagles by some magic influence. ROME, as the capital of the Roman world, was fixed upon as the first object of his ambition. With profound sagacity, he discerned that Rome is the only starting point of universal dominion. It is, indeed, most marvellous to observe, that for 2500 years, under all the changes and revolutions of the world, the centre of influence and empire has been connected with Rome. He saw this well; and the first flight of his eagles was directed upon Rome. Before he had been six months President of France, he was master of the Seven Hills—he had secured the seat of empire before he seized the title of "Emperor." His eagles rested for awhile on the summit of the Seven Hills, and looked around for another prey. The second capital of the Roman empire was the most appropriate subject for his next adventure. He got up an artificial excitement, and an artificial war, and led England to join him in his aggression. The British Bull awoke from his emerald meadows, and with the most comical evolutions, gambolled after the Eagle. A race between an Eagle and a Bull was a novelty in the order of things, and all Europe looked on as much amused as alarmed. The issue of the race was just what might have been expected. While the Bull was floundering in the mire of Balaclava the fiery Eagle soared up on his boldest wing, and stooped at once upon the Russian fortress. He has got it, and he will keep it—for it was the Eagle alone who gained THAT day. The Franco-Roman Eagle sits alone on the towers of Sebastopol, and looks down upon sea and land as subject to himself alone. But in his midway flight from Paris to the Crimæ, the Eagle paused awhile at Athens and Constantinople, and fixed his talons deeply in both; and before he proceeded in his northward flight, he had so maimed and over-awed the Greek and Turkish capitals, as to be secure of each whenever he may require it for his prey. The Bull stands knee-deep in the mire, and bellows out his approbation! And, however Europe may be alarmed at the fiery vehemence of the Eagle, and the lumbering of the Bull, it cannot but laugh at the inequality of the match, and the certain failure of the four-footed competitor.

To speak in less figurative terms, we have chosen the title of the "Eagle Standard," in order in the first place to express the rapidity and decision of the Imperial progress; and in the next place, to point out the extraordinary circumstance, that the New Napoleonic empire is assuming all the attributes of the ancient Roman one! It had, long ago, assumed the Roman standard. It is now taking the exact outline of the empire of the CÆSARS. Beginning on the shores of the Western Ocean, and within the limits of ancient Gaul, it is so far most strictly a part of the old empire of Rome. But when the third Napoleon ascended the throne, his empire, being nearly confined to France was no more than a province of the ancient Roman world He at once secured Rome itself, and from that moment he became the representative of the ancient Cæsars. But still he knew well that he was only a shadowy representative—the mere ghost of the Cæsars. It was necessary that the shadowy outline should be filled up with flesh and blood. He had already got Algeria, the ancient Roman Numidia, the classic territory of Marius and of Sallust. He must proceed, step by step, to complete and fill up the whole body of the empire. Having advanced from Paris to Rome, his next most appropriate advance was from Rome to Athens—from the renowned capital of ancient arms, to the equally renowned capital of ancient arts. Athens he has seized; and he next advanced to Constantinople—the gateway of the East, and the capital of all the empires of Islamism!—the representative of the whole Mahometan world. He is thus, this moment, the master of all the sources of influence and power which sway the human mind. The spiritual despotism of Rome—the historic fame of Athens—the superstitious veneration which binds the Eastern world to Constantinople—the elegance, genius, and splendor which attach the Western world to Paris—all these, at once, are placed at his command, and used as weapons in his conquests; while his alliance with England, and our complete dependence upon his smallest caprice, have made him master of the last and only obstacle which could have retarded his designs—the naval and commercial power of Great Britain.

But he has advanced, and is now advancing much further than this. In the last number it was remarked that he had made a treaty with PERSIA. This has since been confirmed; the treaty has been signed and sealed, and his influence extended directly across the two continents, from Paris to Ispahan. Nor is this all. For the King of Birmah is about to send an ambassador to the court of the Tuilleries, the first embassy that he has ever sent to any European court. Observe! the Burmese have not sent an ambassador to England, although we are their nearest neighbors in the East. They send their ambassador to the French Emperor, not to us, as if they had discovered (with their well-known sagacity) that the destinies of the East are as much dependant upon France, as the destinies of the West. This is a very significant event in itself; but it may be far more important in its consequences. The Birman Empire closes in upon the Eastern frontier of BRITISH INDIA. Persia approaches the British territory on the Northwest. The Affghans, who lie between India and Persia, most justly hate us, because, without the slightest offence or provocation, we most basely invaded their country, and killed without provocation, 20,000 men! This awful crime which can never be forgotten before God, is well remembered among men, and the Affghans hate us as we hate the Russians, only that they have some reason for their hatred. Now let us look to the results. Constantinople, Persia, the Birman empire, all in league with France, the Affghans ready to join the league at the slightest invitation. Look at your map and you will see that British India is threatened in front and flank by this ominous league! North, North-west, and South-east, the allies of France close in upon British India, and offer both an auxiliary contingent, and far worse, a military road to a force advancing from the Dardanells! And the Dardanells are in possession of France. Truly, we are a sagacious people. For want of a better excuse for killing 200,000 of our fellow creatures, we pretend that we went to war for the preservation of India, lest Russia should make her way to Hindostan across the Turkish and Persian territories. And now we have so bungled the war, that we have handed over Turkey, Persia, and even the Birman empire to the French Emperor, to a man whose very name of "Napoleon" is the exponent and war-cry of Oriental conquest; with whom to conquer the East, and to avenge the defeat of Acre, is an hereditary principle, a religion more sacred than the Cross. Do you think he does not see his opportunity? Or do you doubt that while you are shedding torrents of blood, to save India from Russia, you are not by that very bloodshed, giving India to France? The case is too evident to require proof. Scripture tells us of a woman who betrayed her husband's secret, in order to save herself from being burnt, and the immediate consequence of this treachery was, that the Philistines came up and burnt her and her family with fire. Judges 14 and 15. We have shed the blood of myriads in order to save our Indian possessions, and by the very act of shedding that blood, we are giving them over to France. Nothing but infatuation sent by God, for our enormous Indian crimes, can account for the idiocy of our conduct. In every case we are doing, by means of war and bloodshed, the very thing which we have gone to war in order to prevent.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 16, 1856.

Gleanings.

The following fragments of testimony from learned and good men, may be read with interest by some. They show that our views in relation to the nature of man are not new, but held by those whom the church delights to honor.

In an able English work, published in London in 1772, entitled "A Historical View of the Intermediate State," on page 348, we read that Luther taught, "That they (souls) lay in a profound sleep, in which opinion he followed MANY Fathers of the ancient church."

In the same work we read again: "The doctrine (of the sleep of the dead) was held by the first reformers."

"Luther died in the faith."

Again said Luther:—"ALL souls lie and sleep till doom's day."

In his defence in 1530, Prop. 27th, he says:—"I permit the pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful, such as, that he is emperor of the world, king of heaven and God upon earth—that the soul is immortal, with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals."

William Tyndale, who first translated the Bible into the English language, for which he suffered martyrdom, says:—"And ye in putting them, (departed souls) in heaven, hell and purgatory, destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection. . . . . The heathen philosophers did put that the souls did even live."

Richard Watson, although he believed in the immortality of the soul, admits the truth in his "Institutes," vol. II., p. 250, when he says:—"That the soul is naturally immortal is contradicted by Scripture, which makes our immortality a gift dependent on the will of the giver."

This is in harmony with Paul in Rom. 2: 6–7. "Who will render to every man according to his deeds. To them who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." We see from the Scripture, that man is not naturally immortal, but is to get immortality "by patient continuance in well-doing."

Dr. Watts says:—"We should not say that the wicked will live as long as God exists.—Watts' Discourse, p. 162.

Says Pres. Edwards, the younger:—"Everlasting annihilation would be everlasting punishment."—Watts' Discourse p. 191.

The following distinguished men were disbelievers in the doctrine of eternal misery:

John Locke, John Foster, Bishop Whately, Bishop Tillotson, Dr. Samuel Clark, Sir Isaac Newton, Tho. Dick, Dr. Henry More, Dr. Wm. Paley, Bishop Warburton, Bishop Hurd, Jas. Brown, D. D., F. Leicester, R. Clark, J. Tyler, Bishop Law, and many others.

John Milton, author of "Paradise Lost," says:—"It is evident that the saints and believers of old, the patriarchs, prophets, and apostles, without EXCEPTION hold this doctrine;" i. e., that the whole man dies, both soul and body, and that his future existence depends on a literal resurrection of the material organism.

Herodotus, the oldest historian whose writings are extant, who wrote more than four hundred years B. C., says;—"The Egyptians were the FIRST who asserted the doctrine that the soul is immortal. . . . Some of the Greeks have adopted this opinion, some earlier, some later, as if it were their own; but although I know their names, I do not mention them."—Herodotus, p. 144.

Information.

Some have recently inquired about our financial affairs. In answer, we would say that thus far we have paid all our bills. We are conscious that the good Lord has helped us.

We feel grateful to our brethren and sisters who have so generously aided in spoiling the "old debt," and trust they will war against it till it is completely annihilated.

We would say that we have not enough on hand to pay for this number, but expect that some will be stirred to send in the "material aid," so that we shall not have to borrow.

If we can get through this Vol. without running in debt, we shall feel very easy about the next, should time continue so that it will be needed.

Brethren and Sisters, we think it will be necessary to make a special effort to send in as much money as you can spare for the Crisis, during the five coming weeks, at the end of which, we commence a new volume, when we trust that hundreds of our friends will renew their acquaintance.

Brn. and Srs., do not let us run in debt now if we can possibly avoid it. Please give a lift at this time.—ED.,

In behalf of the Committee.

Camp-Meeting and Conference.

Providence permitting, there will be a general Camp-meeting Conference at North Wilbraham, at the old ground on the hill, commencing Monday, Aug. 18, to continue one week.

All Christians, without regard to sect or party, are invited to attend; and all who wish to become the followers of Christ.

We expect one of the best meetings we have ever enjoyed. It is on the Western Railroad, 10 miles East of Springfield, 44 West of Worcester, and 88 from Boston.

For particulars, see Crisis, No. 46.

For the Crisis.

Tracts—A Response.

"I wish to say to Bro. H. L. Hastings, that any books or publications that he may see fit to give to the poor will be thankfully received, and read with much interest by ourselves and others"—J. H. STEPHENS, in Crisis June 25.

Yes, yes, Bro. Stephens, I'll send you a hundred or so to "Bad Axe Post Office," and I hope they will cut like a good axe, and do a great deal of good. I have just been sending off a lot to others in other directions—hope they'll do good to.

Now my hand is in, I think I'll say a few words to the Brn. about Tracts—don't be afraid, I shan't whip a bit—don't feel like it at all. But look here, I get letters for tracts every little while. They come from all quarters—from poor pilgrims—from inquirers, from theological students, from academy scholars, &c. &c., and they want same tracts. Don't you think I'm glad to send them? Yes, and prepay the postage too, when I can, for that makes them go cheaper than otherwise by mail.

Sometimes I send them to poor preachers and tell them to sell it they can, and give away the rest. But they can often give away better than they can sell.

Some who may read this have sent me money to pay for tracts sent to the poor, or into new fields, for this I thank God. But hold,—let's see how the account stands.

I havn't kept account of near all that I have sent off, but I have on account since Oct. 19, '55. $54.98

Besides others sent to preachers that will not be paid for, say,	25.00
	$79.98
Donations received for Tracts for the poor,	$34.50
Balance out of the treasury,	$45.48

Well, for all this the meal doesn't seem to fail, nor the oil waste.

Having been quite busy, I haven't had time to send Bro. Stephen's Tracts yet, and so, just as I had been praying about matters a little, here comes a letter:

"Bro. Hastings:—I send you one dollar of the Lord's money for some poor saint, poor in this world, but rich in faith. . . . If I know anything about the teaching of the spirit, the Lord directs me, and he will let you know just who it belongs to, as your acquaintances are not limited.

L. D. C.

Well, now I'll go right off, and send Bro. Stephens his tracts, and I think I'll keep sending more and more, because I have got some pretty heavy bills to pay a few months a-head, and I want some bread cast on the waters, so that it may be found after many days.

So if any of the poor want tracts, send on, and if any body wants to help pay for them, they can do so, and if not, I shall send them without. H. L. HASTINGS.

Peace Dale, R. I.

For the Crisis.

Important.

BRO. M. GRANT:—I have just read in the last Crisis the "Appeal" of Brn. Crary and Rogers, in behalf of Bro. Turner, who is suffering for want of just dues. I have not, as yet, been able to see the jusice of the want of apparent activity of the Publishing Committee of the Watchman, to take the responsibility of securing the money in some way or other now due Bro. Turner, and paying the same immediately, and not leave it to Bro. Turner himself, in this case, to earn the money the second time, by begging.

Be this as it may, with all other burdens of life, such as loss by fire, of bad debts, of sickness, and a family, and only one pair of hands to labor with, I now propose to all of the Brn. and Srs. in Christ, who love His appearing, to be one of one hundred to raise in the months July and August $800.

Let this call be responded to immediately, by sending the needful to Bro, Turner, for which he will give credit in the Crisis.

I hope all who love in deed, as well as in word, will assist now,—will remember that this debt was accumulated for the good of the church.

My eight dollars shall be paid in this week; consequently, you may expect to see my mite acknowledged in the next Crisis. JAMES CRAWFORD.

Roxbury, July 12th, 1856.

Apology.

My eastern friends will please excuse my delay in writing them, or in filling orders for the "KEY OF TRUTH," as my time has been recently much consumed in getting settled, except on the Sabbath. Also my Western friends who have written me, soliciting my labors, are informed that I shall soon heed as many Macedonian calls as my circumstances will admit of. I shall be obliged to neglect many, owing to distance, and a want of time and means.

My P. O. address is now changed to Vermillion, Dakota Co., Minnesota. All letters should be directed accordingly.

W. SHELDON.

P. S. My publications can still be obtained by addressing me as above.

For the Crisis.

Trial of our Faith.

BY RELIANCE E. WOOD.

"Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive a crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." James 1: 12.

How blest when tried, shall that man be who has cried to God in trouble, who has fought the fight of faith—has sought for immortality.

His name, the Lord will not despise, but he shall reign in his kingdom, and wear a crown of glory, which will shine most brilliantly. He has been cast out, in this world a lone stranger, and all for nought, only that he loved the word of God and humbled himself under chastisement. Though poor, yet rich in faith, an heir of God, he'll share an everlasting home. When trials have been most severe, with broken heart he bowed to God; and on God's altar left his all,—a living sacrifice.

When oppressed with care and sickness, distressed by sorrow and want, in his bitter grief he looked to Jesus and found a soothing cordial.

When death severed from him his bosom friend, with sighs, groans, and tears—he looked to God to have pity,—to hear. When death cut down his children and laid them low in the cold, dark grave, for strength and aid he prayed to God; and received. Yet many lonesome months and days are his; he thinks of the day of bright glory, the land of heavenly bliss; where he will meet his dear lost ones, where life's fair tree will wave its beauteous branches, and bestow its healthful influence on all around.

Though by sharp affliction tried, yet the more he loved the Lord and longed for Jesus to come, to give that blessed home to his saints. How blest will be that man when tried, who suffered thus; who sighed for life; walked by faith; took sweet delight in God's word. O what a bright crown he'll wear, when standing with that mighty host, who have washed their robes and made them white in Jesus' blood. O may we to the end endure; that we may gain that promise when our faith is tried, as gold that is purified; and receive the crown of life. Dearest Lord increase our courage—help us upon thy word to feed—prepare us for thy coming, that we may share in that rest that remains for thy people. RELIANCE E. WOOD.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. G. L. Teeple.

TO THE SCATTERED FLOCK OF GOD I SEND GREETING:—May grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

I wish by the help of God to give in my last testimony (probably) to you before Jesus shall come to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all them that believe in that day.

You are aware, dear pilgrims, that many of you have read my feeble testimony in the past, and some of you, at least, have listened to my exhortation and prayers. What benefit you have received by the blessing of God from my writings, or my poor preaching and praying, the Lord only knows; but here let me say to those of you in the East with whom I have taken such sweet counsel in the past, and rejoiced with while communing with our Heavenly Father,—continue faithful to the end; for I expect that very soon Jesus will come and take his weary, waiting children home. The time has come when the "Peace and safety" cry is heard all over the land, and God declares that sudden destruction shall follow.

I have firmly believed in the past that every one that loved Jesus Christ would love His return, and I think so still, and I have made this a test of christian character, and for doing so I am not sorry. But in my zeal for God and his truth, I may here hurt the feelings of some while I was preaching the '54 cry, and since,—if so, I am sorry. But dear pilgrims, let me assure you I love the flock of God which Christ has purchased with his own blood, and I would sooner suffer myself, than grieve one of the little ones. But I know we are differently constituted and must overlook one another's difference, and although in this mortal strife we are unlide the one from the other and can say,—

"Here I grieve the friends I love,
And they in turn grieve me;"

let us be careful ourselves, and amid all this, let us further say in the language of the poet,—

"But O my Father grant me grace
That I may not grieve thee."

Although I am here in the far West, and some might think out of the line of duty, I can tell you truly, I have been led to cry the more earnestly for Jesus to come. I love the coming kingdom, and it is with delight that I think of the glory to be revealed, and with joyful anticipations I wait for the time to arrive when I shall leave this vale of sin and gloom, and dwell with Christ at home.

Lift up thy head, poor pilgrim, for thy redemption draweth nigh; and then thy trials will be o'er, and thou shalt bask in the sunbeams of God's eternal glory. Some of you are poor in this world's goods. and are troubled to get along, but—

"Face the storm, it won't be long,— You'll anchor bye-and-bye."

Then from every land and every clime they will "come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; and they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." O, how welcome to the poor pilgrim who has long been toiling on towards the haven of rest. I do not wonder at all, that the good old man, (Dr. Watts,) sung,—

"Fly swifter round ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

And John, on the Isle of Patmos, after having a vision of the Holy City and the new creation, cried out: "even so, Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Amen.

Even so, my heart replies, and—

Now I shall wait still with longings to go,
And leave this dark valley of pain, sin and woe;
To join with the ransomed, immortal and fair,
And ever remain with the holy ones there,
Where no parting scenes shall ever take place,
But Jesus our Savior, we'll see face to face;
And range o'er the fields of our fair Eden home,
Where nothing again can tempt us to roam.

Your Bro. sighing for immortality,—
GEORGE L. TEEPLE.

P. S. Brn., if time should continue much longer, I think that there will be some good done in the West. There is a wide spread field, and I wish that I could devote my whole time to the work of the ministry; but as it is, I am obliged to labor with my hands during the week to supply my wants. I desire an interest in all your prayers that I may labor successfully in the work to the saving of some.

O, my Brn., be active, be engaged, be awake. No longer dream, but obtain a full assurance of faith. Why, the same God that was with Daniel, the three Hebrew children, Paul and Silas, and all the worthies, is alive to-day, and retains the same power and wisdom, and can save all that put their trust in him.

"Finally, Brn., farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you." Amen.

"Jesus soon is coming, this is my song,
Cheers my heart when joys depart,
And foes are pressing strong."

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. W. Sheldon

BRO. GRANT:—In compliance with your request, I pen a few lines for the Crisis. I should have done so before now, had I not been necessarily otherwise engaged. My interest is still connected with the Master's cause, and my anxieties still grasping, by faith, the endless realities of the future world, where the King of glory shall reign in celestial grandeur, as "Prince of Peace," upon the throne of David—where the sorrow-stricken saint will drink the gushing fountain of immortal joy and sweet delight—where the lonely and homeless pilgrim will regale himself on the fascinating pleasures of an angel home, and where the scattered family will ALL be together!

My motive in leaving the East, and coming to the West, was to do the will of the Lord. My present object is still the same. As far as it lies in my power, I design to devote my energies to the promulgation of the gospel in this new field, for here is an important field. But I regret to say that as I am almost pennyless, at present I must content myself to preach only a portion of the time, that I may support myself by manual labor. I am sorry to thus rob the church and world of my services, which, though feeble, are greatly needed here, and would do far more good than at the East. I rejoice that I can sound the gospel trump a part of the time to good effect. With what a few friends contributed, I have been enabled to reach this place. If some of our Eastern professors who are heaping up treasures for the last day, had only lent some of their money to the Lord, by aiding me on my journey, as they should have done, (since no man is able to go a warfare at his own charge) I should not have landed here with my hands tied as it were. But now my hands must earn my furniture for housekeeping, my provisions, &c., before I can launch out extensively into the field as I long to. There are hungry souls scattered here and there through this territory, who feel almost impatient to have the Word of Life proclaimed in their localities; and I am equally as anxious to proclaim it, and intend to do so as extensively as my circumstances will admit; but where I have to defray my own travelling expenses, as is generally the case among the poor in new countries, I cannot do as much in the cause as I should be glad to. Once since I came here, I received a very pressing invitation from a Bro. to come and preach in his town. I did so at the expense of near seven dollars, without a penny's remuneration. Such calls from the poor I love to fill; but my present circumstances keep me nearer home, and prevent me from preaching except Sundays, for the time being.

The "KEY OF TRUTH" is preaching to good effect. Thus I have briefly given you the commencement of my labors in this Western Territory, together with the circumstances under which I commence. I am satisfied that this is the place for me to do good, as our doctrines are new to the people, and they are willing to hear; hence, I am sorry to be trammeled. I find more worldly-mindedness to encounter than bigotry. A thirst for wealth captivates nearly all who come out here, even to ministers of the gospel.

God forbid that I should get even the symptoms of this epidemic, while so near the judgment; and since there are so few faithful watchmen on the walls! I did not come out here to get into the love of the world, but to get more into the love of God.

I rejoiced to learn that Bro. Grant had been chosen as Editor, since our much esteemed Bro. Merriam resigned. May the Lord enable you to "feed the flock of God," with food that will produce more practical godliness, which is the most important item.

Yours in Christian love,

W. Sheldon.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. L. P. Judson.

Bro. Grant:—Some weeks since, I wrote a few times for the Crisis, in which I took the liberty to say several things. I should have written again ere this, but I have been waiting to see whether the way seemed to be opened for the communication ot candidly written and honestly expressed sentiments.

Poverty forbids my taking any paper, or I should be a subscriber to the Crisis. I hope it will be sustained, and shall be happy to do what I can to extend its circulation, while it seeks to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, to know the whole truth, and fit men for the coming kingdom.

I have not seen it, but have been told that the article was published, with an editorial note stating, in substance, a willingness to insert the kind of communications referred to. I therefore wait no longer, but venture to write again. Perhaps I may be thought to be too particular, on this point; but I have been so much accustomed to having articles suppressed, that I had concluded to waste no more ink and paper, and time, unnecessarily.

There are many things I would like to express, but I believe what I now say, will be of Christ, and what He has done for us.

He is called "The beginning of the creation of God." The Arkee—the beginning,— not only in point of numbers, being the first; but the Highest. The most elevated in point of position and authority. The Chief above all others. It is also used in the sense of the Author; the Originator; the producing cause, "All things were created by Him." "By Him all things consist." "God created all things by Jesus Christ." "Though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through His poverty might be rich." This was indeed great grace in our Lord Jesus Christ. "He was rich." "Father, glorify Thou me with thine own self, with the glory I had with Thee before the world was." "He is before all things.' Above; at the head of all power and might. But this glory and this dignity, he voluntarily laid aside, and appeared in our world "poor, without where to lay His head;" and submitted to death, even the death of the cross, that we might be exalted to an eternal inheritance; even to thrones and crowns in the Kingdom.

"This is wondrous grace indeed,
Grace bestowed in time of need."

And for such grace, "my heart says, praise the Lord."

But, how is it that such sinners as we, are to be thus exalted? What virtue is there in the death of Christ, to open up such a fountain of Life to us?

The word must teach us.

"Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." Christ, in his character as a lamb, has an important mission to peform. Sin is to be removed from the habitable earth; the kosmos,—not the age.

The Lamb was not only innocent, but it was a sin-offering. This sin-offering was put to death. Christ, the great Antitype, must die and his death has an important relation to the taking away of "The sin of the world." "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth from all sin." The Christian is indebted to the death of Christ for his deliverance from sin; for "without the shedding of blood, there is no remission." "He died for our sins." "He was delivered for our offences;" so that he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows." "He was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed."

The cruel torturing of Christ on the cross, was the work of the wicked, murderous Jews. Human deformity did this, instigated, no doubt, by demons. And God saw fit to withhold his legions of angels that could have prevented Christ from having been taken and thus put to death by them.

But that Christ should die, was an arrangement subsisting between the Father and the Son. God's love to the world, induced him to send his Son into the world. Christ's love to the world induced him to come. "It pleased the Lord to bruise him; He hath put him to grief." This was when God made his soul an offering for sin." But Christ was equally voluntary in the solemn part he acted in this sublime scenery. He had "power to lay down his life" and he had "power to take it again." "This commandment" he "received of the Father." No man had power to put Christ to death. Christ "poured out his soul unto death," and thus "yielded up the Ghost."

Here was a voluntary work on the part of the Father and the Son. "It pleased the Lord to bruise him." "To bruise," is, the mildest term that could have been given to the phrase. It signifies, to break in pieces; to crush as with an overwhelming weight. Sin is compared to mountains and mighty hills. "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." No wonder, then, that he was crushed. The wonder is that he had not have melted down flesh and bones in the garden before he reached the cross! He would have died there, had not angels have strengthened him. But Christ loved the world too; and desired the salvation of men. Hence, from his lips broke forth at this juncture, the humble and thrilling sentence, "not my will, but thine be done." He went to the cross and "laid down his life." But thanks be to God, he took it again and is now exalted to be a Prince and a Savior. "Faith in his blood," now secures remission. Reader, have you this faith? "The law was weak." It had no power to bring a dead man to life. All it could do, was to let a man continue to live, if its precepts were obeyed. But Christ, by virtue of his obedience unto death, hath received power to give life—ETERNAL Life and Immortality.

O, wondrous, joyful, BLESSED HOPE! May we participate in its realities.

Yours, fraternally,

L. P. Judson.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. D. C. Hart.

Dear Brn. in Christ:—I write to let you know that I am still serving the Lord. I do bless God that he ever called after me to leave this wicked world with all its pleasures, and live for my dear Savior, so that when he shall come, I may be ready to say,—"lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us." Glory be to God, for the blessed promise which lies before the poor, despised pilgrims who are cast out as evil—but the good Savior tells us to "fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" to reign with him forever and ever. Let us cheer up, for the land is nearing; soon the good old ship Zion will enter the harbor with all its faithful crew. I can say with all the dear, tried, and tempted ones, "come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly, and gather the faithful home.

From your Bro. looking for Jesus,

D. C. Hart.

Domestic Summary.

More Mob law in Missouri.—It appears that there is in Rochester, Andrew county, Mo., a Northern Methodist Church, and the citizens, ignorant it appears of the action of the General Conference at Indianapolis, getting the idea that this church declared its members could not hold slaves, met and calmly voted it to be a "nuisance."

"It was then declared to be the will of the community that the preacher in charge of this Northern Methodist Church should be silenced. He was accordingly asked to desist from preaching, but he would not comply, and the St. Joseph Gazette informs us that, 'as the penalty of his temerity he was tarred and feathered.' In the difficulty which occurred, another man named Holland, an 'Abolitionist,' was killed.

A series of resolutions were adopted, declaring that every Northern Methodist Anti-slavery man in the county should be notified by the Vigilance Committee, to pack up and leave."

As there appears to be no authority to check this scandalous edict, it will no doubt be enforced by the ruffianly mob.

Excitement against the Mormons of Beaver Island.—Detroit papers state that great excitement exists in that quarter against the Mormons of Beaver Island, in consequence of the robberies and other crimes committed by them. Companies were being formed at Mackinaw and other points, for the avowed purpose of proceeding to the Island and making arrests.

Strang, it is said, cannot survive. His assassins have been discharged, and are active in the demonstrations against the Mormons.

A Half Year's Marine Disasters.—The New York Journal of Commerce publishes a statement of vessels reported either lost or damaged during the past half year, and which it states to have been prepared from the Underwriter's books with considerable care, the estimated loss in each case being rather under than over that actually experienced. It is an appalling list,—the amount of loss by wreck, total and partial, within a period of six months, being nearly $16,000,000,—an amount of disaster probably without parallel in our commercial history.

A Thrilling Scene.—A sub-marine diver from Buffalo has at last succeeded in raising the safe of the American Express Company, which was lost when the steamer Atlantic was sunk off Long point in 1852. It will be recollected that this steamer was instantly sunk by colliding with a propeller, and that a large number of passengers were lost. The diver was protected by copper armor, and was under water forty minutes, during which time he had some strange adventures

The upper deck of the steamer lies one hundred and fifty feet under water, and far below where there is any current or motion. Everything, therefore, is exactly as it first went down. When the diver alighted upon the deck, he was saluted by a beautiful lady, whose clothing was well arranged, and her hair elegantly dressed. As he approached her, the motion of the water caused an oscillation of the head as if gracefully bowing to him. She was standing erect, with one hand grasping the rigging. Around lay the bodies of several others as if sleeping. Children holding their friends by their hands, and mothers with their babes in their arms were there In the cabin the furniture was still untouched by decay, and to all appearance had just been arranged by some careful and tasteful hand.

In the office he found the safe, and was enabled to move it with ease, and took it upon deck where the grappling irons were fastened on, and the prize brought safely to the light. Upon opening the safe it displayed its contents in a perfect state of preservation. There was in the safe $5000 in gold, $3500 in bills of the Government Stock Bank and a large amount of bills on other banks, amounting in all to about $35,000. The papers were uninjured, except that they smelled very strongly of decayed human bodies, as if it had laid so many years in a coffin with their owner. Of course, all this money goes to the persons interested in this wonderful adventure.

The Detroit Free Press says:—

"The new bills, we are told, are comparatively uninjured by their long imprisonment and exposure to dampness, but the old ones are quite injured and defaced, whether so much so as to prevent their identification and redemption we have not learned. There are several thousand dollars on the exploded Government Stock Bank of Ann Arbor, included in the amount recovered.—Detroit Adv., June 28.

From Kansas—The Free State Legislature Dispersed by Col. Sumner's Command, under the Authority of the President.—St. Louis, July 9.—Advices from Topeka to the 4th inst., state that a Convention met there on the 2d, and passed resolutions in favor of the Republican party, and denunciatory of the Democrats, appealing to the friends of Free Kansas in Congress to stop the supplies until Kansas is admitted under the Topeka constitution.

Marshal Donalson and Judge Elmore read to the Convention the President's February proclamation, and Gov. Shannon's proclamation, and one from Mr. Woodson, Secretary of the Territory. Also, a note from Col. Sumner saying that he would prevent the meeting of the legislature. They were unheeded. About 800 persons were present, all armed.

Both branches of the legislature met on the 4th inst. The roll was called, and a quorum found to be present.

About noon, Col. Sumner entered the town with 200 dragoons, and planted two cannon at the head of Kansas Avenue. The troops were drawn up before Constitution Hall, when Sumner told the citizens that he would not disarm them or break up the Convention, but he had orders to dissolve the legislature, and he would do so.

Sumner then repaired to the Hall of Representatives, and informed the members that he had orders to dispertse hem. He said:—

"I am called upon to perform the most painful duty of my life. Under the authority of the President, I am here to dissolve this Legislature. In accordance with my orders, I command you to disperse. God knows I have no party feelings in the matter, and will have none while I hold my present position in Kansas. I have just returned from the border, where I have been sending home the Missourians, and am now here with instructions to disperse this Legislature. I again command you to disperse."

Judge Schingles asked, if they were to understand that they were driven out at the point of the bayonet?

Col. Sumner replied—"I will use the whole force under my command to enforce my orders."

The House then dispersed.

A similar scene was enacted in the Senate which also dispersed.

The Convention was preparing resolutions endorsing the State Government and the Topeka Constitution.

Fears of invasion had kept large numbers from attending.

Col. Lane had not arrived.

Foreign News.

The Baltic at New York, has brought advices from Europe to June 25, on which day she sailed from Liverpool. We have received our files of Liverpool and London papers to the latest date.

Secret Societies in France.—An occasional correspondent of the London Times, who has recently traveled all through France, makes some startling revelations as to the extensive existence of secret revolutionary societies, and expresses his decided conviction that France is at this moment sleeping in false confidence on the brink of a volcano. Within the space of a few months, there have been six or seven monster persecutions, and yet the police are totally unable to effectually discover or repress these menacing organizations. Secret societies, he states, are known to have taken root in not less than sixty-five departments; and what creates more alarm, a very active propaganda is going on in the ranks of the army. There are three well-known principal societies, which are supposed to be the parents of all others—the "Marianne," the "Militante," and the "Commune Revolutionaire." The first is the most considerable and important of these. Marianne is the slang Socialist name for guillotine, and Banqui is the recognized chief of this society of competetes. Blanqui is the incarnation of the revolutionary tradition of 1791; and in the eyes of its members the torch, pillage, and confiscation are all lawful to ensure the successes of their cause. In all of these societies the affiliated members bind themselves by the most terrible oaths to secrecy.

The "Commune Revolutionaire" is an old organization, but has declined in importance. Then there are the "Jeune France Socialiste," "Les Enfans de la Terre," "the Union," and many others.

The writer adds:—

"Unfortunately at the present day there is no vigor in any party but those representing two extreme principles. There is the despotism enthroned in the Tuileries, and the communism which conspires in the dark. A struggle will come. Who shall tell the event?"

The Inundations in France.—The extent of the district inundated by the recent floods in France is variously stated at from 600 to 1200 miles; human habitations to the number of 40,000 were destroyed or so seriously damaged as to require reconstruction; and a corresponding number of families were suddenly reduced from a state of domestic comfort to the extremity of distress.

The Washington Union publishes a letter from Mr. McRae, the United States Consul at Paris, exhibiting the full extent of the calamity. The writer says:—

"The inundation which has buried under water many of her cities and towns and vast extents of territory has been of a most extensive and destructive charater. The crops in the inundated district, covering fifteen departments, must be destroyed; and not only so, but the rivers have brought down in their deposites of gravel and sand, which, to the depth of several feet and covering a great extent, has made a permanent evil which years of labor and expense will be required to remove. In the towns and villages, houses have been swept away, and immense amounts of property destroyed. Poverty and suffering have fallen upon thousands, and France as a nation, is in mourning for the sufferings of so many of her people."

The Czar and his Mother.—The footing on which the present Emperor stands with his mother, the Dowager Empress, is described to be of the most affectionate and cordial nature, in spite of the notorious difference of their views; the mother remains still as closely wedded to the ideas of the late Emperor as she was to himself in life; the son embracing the power thus early committed by Providence to his hands as a welcome opportunity of working out another set of principles and views. It is related that when the young Emperor was preparing on the day of his father's death, to receive the homage of the rest of his family, and of the dignitaries of the State as Emperor, shortly before he would have to enter the marble saloon, where they were all assembled, his mother entered his room alone, to be the first to greet him as Emperor. She had left the bier of the husband she had loved so truly, had dried her tears, and clothed herself with all the insignia of imperial majesty, the white satin robe of state, &c., and set her crown on her head, to do full and official honor to her son on his accession to the throne.—London Times.

The day preceding the baptism, Friday last, Cardinal, Patrizi, legate a latere, to represent the Pope at Notre Dame, was received in form by the Emperor at the Tuileries. The Cardinal delivered himself of a speech in bad Latin, to which Louis Napoleon replied in good French, saying, among other things complimentary, these: "One of the surest means of deserving the protection of Heaven, is to testify all veneration for the Holy Father who is the representative of Jesus Christ on earth." Let each one make his comment, for which I will only furnish the appropriate exclamatory punctuation!

The Abbe Michon, a Catholic priest of Paris, has published a pamphlet to demonstrate that the Pope ought to renounce all secular authority, and remove to Jerusalem, there to preside over the Christian Church.

Excitement in Italy.—The Italian journals give a recital of some disturbances that have just taken place at Genoa and Turin. The Cattolico of Genoa states that at a grand banquet of the students, which was held on the occasion of the anniversary of the proclamation of the constitutional statue, a toast to the "Unity of Italy," was drunk with loud applause. On the following morning the same words were raised as a rallying cry among a numerous crowd in the street, and also at the theatre. The Movimento, another Genoa journal, states that the police had torn down a placard affixed to one of the pillars of the Carlo Felice theatre, which contained menaces against the Austrian consul. A letter in the Echo du Mont Blanc, in mentioning the subject, says, "Placards containing insults and threats against the Austrian consul have been pasted at the corners of several streets, and torn down by the police. In the evening several persons assembled under the windows of the consul, threw stones against the door and at the Austrian arms over it, and uttered cries of 'Down with the consul—war against Austria.' The walls of Turin are covered with the words, 'Death to Austria. Long live Victor Emanuel, King of Italy.'"

"The Militante is a young swarm emanating from the parent hive, the Marianne. It was founded in 1853, and in the short space of little more than two years it has extended its ramifications into every principal point of France. Its programme is short but significant. Entire abolition of all existing laws; confiscation of the property of every individual possessing more than 50,000f.; arrest and imprisonment of every individual possessing more than 100,000f.; dismissal of all public functionaries; overthrow of all established institutions; death to all Cæsars."

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, 165 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may perhaps subserve the cause of humanity to present this advertisement to the public.

For the Crisis.

Hope thou in God.

BY A. C. JUDSON.

"Hope thou in God." Yes, hope indeed,
He'll give thee strength in time of need;
Will comfort, soothe thee, and sustain
In hours of sorrow and of pain.

Though dismal clouds obscure thy sight,
So that thy day be turned to night;
Still brightly shines the sacred word,
O then believe and trust the Lord.

Hope thou in God! Though sinners reign,
And sin is spread o'er earth's domain;
Oppression, crime, and war prevail—
Yet this blest word can never fail.

And He hath said that wars shall cease—
When Christ doth reign, the "Prince of peace;"
Yes, that the wide earth then shall be
From sin and sinners too, made free.

Hope thou in God! To Him belong
Wisdom and power—His arm is strong,
Eternal is its strength, and still
'Tis ours, if we but do His will.

There's glory for the saint in store
When these few fleeting days are o'er—
March on then in the heavenly road,
Pilgrims be strong—Hope thou in God!

Victor, July, 6, '56.

For the Crisis.

"Be of good Cheer."

BY H. M'CULLOCK.

AIR—"Dying Californian.

Cheer up, lonely, dreary pilgrim,
For earth's night is almost past;
Brighter than the gems of India,
Zion's morning dawns at last.

Louder than the roar of ocean,—
Far away in foreign lands,
Sounds the glorious proclamation—
Jesus' coming is at hand!

Richer than the flow of music
Will the heavenly anthems roll;
Alleluia! Jesus reigneth
O'er the earth, from pole to pole!

Lovely as the rose of Sharon—
Purer than the moon-beam's ray;
Reigns on earth the Prince eternal,
Scattering darkness far away.

Peaceful in the glorious kingdom;
Near the flowing stream of life;
See the weary birds reposing,
Safe from sorrow, pain and strife.

Hear the swelling song of triumph,
Like the ocean's rolling tide;
See the Savior now to glory,
Welcomes home his weeping bride!

For the Crisis.

Christ's Coming.

BY N. BERRY.

All hail, the joyful day of God,
When all the saints shall reach their home,
With joyous songs proclaiming loud,
That Christ their Heavenly King has come.

All hail, the day, the blissful day
When saints their promised rest shall see;
When darkness shall be changed to light,
And mortals, e'er immortal be.

O, Father, hasten on that day
For which thy servants oft have sighed;
O, show thy glorious face to us,
Thou who for sinners once hast died.

We long to meet thee in the skies,
Untrammelled by this mortal coil;
And soar above this blighted earth,—
Free from its cares, its strife and toil.

Saco, Me.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. Reliance E. Wood.

BRO. MERRIAM:—It is through much tribulation that I expect to enter the kingdom.

I feel somewhat depressed in spirit, and have for some time, and under this experience would attempt to write, though it may appear broken.

I am still looking, with the rest of my Brn. in this place, for that "blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."

Living in a time when we may reasonably expect that the day will soon come, as a thief in the night, to an ungodly world, in the which the heavens shall pass away, &c., what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness?

With what comfort and satisfaction do we read, "Nevertheless, we according to his promise, look for a new heaven, and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

O the thought that we shall so soon exchange this for a more blessed state in the kingdom of God!

The theme of my soon-coming Lord is what I love, and is what I hope to be found loving when he shall appear. This truth never looked more real, or more glorious than now. I am willing to consecrate and devote all that I have, and all that I am, to so precious a cause. Soon the King of Israel will stand in glorious triumph amidst his faithful church in the "holy," "beloved" new Jerusalem, on mount Zion, "singing in the midst of his brethren." What a song!

All will have a voice to sing, and the "Man of sorrows," once, but now the Man of glory, will lead the choir! O that day of song! that morning of deliverance! when will it come? "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust!" will soon be spoken with the archangel's voice, and the precious ones come forth to the marriage of the Lamb and to all the joys of his presence forever.

O can it be possible that poor erring creatures like us shall be so highly exalted, our vile body fashioned like unto his glorious body, when the Lord himself shall descend from heaven to take us who are ready, with the dead in Christ, unto himself forever? Sweet anticipation! This mortal shall put on immortality, and we shall have no more suffering, sorrow, weeping, wickedness, or death. Thank God for such soul-cheering and heavenly promises.

Dear Brn. and Srs., I am more and more confirmed that we have been, and are still right in looking for our Savior about this time, although our faith has been most severely tried.

The only safe ground for us to occupy at this time, is to plant ourselves upon the sure word of prophecy, with our garments pure and white.

It seems to me, by examining the Scriptures, we have passed all the way-marks, and now may have the blessed expectation of a speedy arrival at Mount Zion, the city of the living God.

O, praise the Lord for a prospect of a glorious triumph through Zion's conquering King!

Soon, very soon, will our dear children, that dwell in dust, awake and sing. O my God, let the fair morn of Zion's glory dawn on this world of grief and sin. Bring home the ransomed host of thine elect, with singing unto the city which hath foundations.

O Lord hear; defer not; come and swallow up death in victory! Send life and immortality through the charnel house of thy saints, and hush forever sorrow's sigh!

Comfort Zion! Make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord! Cause joy and gladness to be found therein; thanksgiving, and the voice of melody! The anticipation of such a glorious change bears up amid afflictions and privations.

O, how dismal, rayless, cheerless, would be the chequered scenes through which we are all called to pass, if it were not for the hope of immortality at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Ah, sorrowful indeed would be the mingled cup of the poor pilgrim, were it not for the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory promised.

Yes, yes, the blessed promise calms all our fears, soothes all our sorrows, and smooths our way over life's rough sea. When poverty and want press, the gracious promise,—"I will never leave thee nor forsake," is enough. O my God, save me from unbelief, and the crime of ingratitude. I will bless the Lord that he ever gave me an investigating mind, and that he has inclined my heart to search for truth.

I know that nothing else will avail me in the trying day, and it rejoices my heart to receive the little winged messengers weekly, laden with what I feel to be meat in due season. Though there are some points all do not see alike, yet, that one absorbing theme,—the Lord is at hand,—seems to swallow up other considerations.

We prize the Crisis here in Cheshire and would hardly know how to get along without it.

Our beloved Sr. Parker wishes it continued to her, she prizes it next to her Bible. She has not the means to send you for its publication; but her sympathy and prayers are with you, for its continuance and prosperity; she is aged, and poor in this world, yet rich in faith, heir of the kingdom, in glorious expectation of that blessed inheritance, so soon to be given to all the finally faithful.

Dear Brn., you will have your reward at the resurrection of the just, for your kindness to the poor pilgrims. May the Crisis still continue to be a blessing to God's cause and people.

We would that the Lord would send some of his own servants into this part of his vineyard; those who have the truth and know whereof they affirm.

And now, Brn., let us who are in active service, gird up the loins of our mind, be sober, and hope unto the end. And those who are slumbering, awake! O awake, and enter the service of the King who is soon to reign in righteousness, that you may reign with him.

From your sister, striving to be one of the number, RELIANCE E. WOOD.

Cheshire, May 29th, 1856.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. B. Newton.

BRO. MERRIAM:—We hail the Crisis as welcome messenger; we love the spirit in which its articles are written; my heart glows with love and praise to God while reading many of them. I love to hear from those of like precious faith, who are looking for the coming of our blessed Lord. What zeal, yea, what purifying of ourselves,—yea, what cleansing of ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, does this blessed hope work in us, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. O what blessed, glorious living is this, to have the spirit of God witnessing with our spirit that we are his, and he is ours; to lay down our head on our pillow every night with the sweet assurance that God is our Father, and Jesus our Redeemer; the Holy Spirit our purifier, sanctifier, and comforter; and that we safely trust our all in his hand, that living, or dying we are the Lord's and believing that soon he will come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, and take us to dwell forever with himself if we endure to the end and overcome all things.

But we have come into a time when our faith is peculiarly tried,—when peace and safety is the cry through Europe, I think it may now truly be said, "nevertheless when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Now is the time to watch more closely than ever, "lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping;" "for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

The Lord help us to watch and keep our garments pure, is my earnest prayer.

B. NEWTON.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. D. N. Kidder.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—We are still here in this wicked, sorrowful, weeping world, looking for and loving the glorious appearing of Christ our King. And are we not living in perilous times? and does it not require all the wisdom, meekness, love and patience and forbearance that we can obtain, to live right and do right? We are surrounded on all sides with foes who not only are desirous and wait for our down-fall, but are willing to put forth some little effort if possible to ruin and destroy our hope; and those, too, from whom we should reasonably expect better things. But, thank God, a strong and powerful arm surrounds his little humble ones, who, with child-like simplicity and holy confidence, look up to him for protection. He will not let them fall. He will temper the wind to the shorn lamb—fold it in His arms, and carry it in his bosom. Methinks I hear that sweet heavenly voice saying:—"Marvel not if the world hate you;" "be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

A little while longer and I shall be there—the wicked shall then no longer triumph over you but shall in that day be as ashes under your feet. Be humble—keep my word—do my commandments, and you shall have right to the tree of life.—I am preparing a mansion for the poor and distressed,—be meek, and you shall inherit the new earth. I know your sorrows and temptations, your trials and griefs, well: I was once a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief—had not where to lay my head, and tempted in all points as you are, and I know how to deliver you. Neither need you be so careful to bear your burdens alone; cast them upon me for I will with pleasure bear them for you, because you are my care and delight when you keep my word and obey my voice.

These and many more precious things the blessed Saviour has taught us in his word. O my dear Brn. and Srs., what should we do without this blessed volume of epistles written to us? Sometimes, when I read his precious sayings, especially those recorded by John, my heart is deeply affected, and I cannot refrain from weeping, when I remember that this very same Jesus, this precious Son of God that has taken my sins, so meekly bore them in his suffering and agony upon the cross—surrendered his life—rose triumphant—ascended to his Father,—is preparing a mansion and is so soon coming again as our deliverer. I can say welcome, thrice welcome, the cross, suffering, sorrow, trials, and all that can hurt or harm; it is enough if the servant be as his Lord, yea, it is enough if Christ be mine and I am his.

How often under severe trials, when it seemed for the moment that I should be overcome and fall by the hand of mine enemies, has a soft, gentle whisper—"It won't always be so," calmed my troubled breast and strengthened my hope in God. Now sin reigns—death triumphs, and the grave is victorious; but blessed be God, it won't always be so.

Now, the dear saints of God are scattered to and fro on the earth, many of them trodden down in prison and in chains, while others are held in derision, scorn, and contempt; but let this comfort your hearts; it will not always be so, soon there is to be a gathering of the redeemed of the Lord out of every kindred, and tongue, and people and nation; then there will be but one fold, and one shepherd. O hail happy day! when will thy resplendent glory dispel the dark dismal night of gloom, and suspense, that now hang so heavily over our hearts? When will thy bright visions open to our longing, waiting eyes, the glorious heavenly realities we have anticipated?

"Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in."

We look, we long, we wait to see thy glory. While faith lends her golden wings, we view not far in the distance, the holy city with its pearly gates, its jasper walls and golden streets; all, all "illuminated by the Lamb," and the white robes of the redeemed as they walk with him, reflecting the sun-beams of his righteousness; and our enraptured soul cries out, "we are almost home," "we're almost there."

"Fly swifter round ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

Hallelujah! Amen and amen!

Your Sr. in Christ, D. N. KIDDER.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. Jane D. Roberts.

BRO. GRANT:—Having for some time past had a desire to speak to the scattered ones that are pilgrims and strangers, I now pen a few thoughts for the Crisis.

I have been thinking of the different situations that the children of the kingdom are in. Here are some who want for nothing as far as earthly luxuries are concerned; they can go here and there, seeking for things to feed the lust of the eye and adorn their mortal bodies without even thinking of this or that poor Bro. or Sr. who have to toil so hard for the necessaries of life to support themselves while preaching the gospel.

Did I say poor Bro. or Sr.? Are they not rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom? Are those who do not think of these self-denying, cross-bearing, devoted ones, worthy the name of Bro. or Sr.? Can it be that they are heirs of the same kingdom? Can they be christians and see Christ's cause suffering, when they could alleviate its suffering, in a measure, by taking the means they use for vain adorning, and spend it in spreading the truth, or in having the gospel preached to the poor?

Again; suffer me, (although unworthy) to ask, do such consider that they are not their own, but that they have been bought with a price? Do they realize that now they are stewards for the Lord, and that they must soon give an account of their stewardship? Are they like Christ, our example, and the apostles, pilgrims and strangers on the earth? Ah, one would not think that they were pilgrims here, bound for a better land.

In conclusion, let me say to the way-worn,—be not weary in well-doing, for in due season you shall reap if you faint not; and when weary and suffering bodily pain, and duty still seems to demand your toil, look not to those who, from a little weariness, (occasioned, perhaps, by work on some vain thing,) recline on their sofas, or downy beds, but turn your thoughts to Him who has been made perfect through suffering, and also think how soon, if faithful, your vile bodies will be changed and made like to Christ's glorious body.

I would say to all, watch and pray, lest you be overcome in this day of peril; in this day when iniquity so abounds that the love of many has grown cold. Let us be very careful not to set our affections on earthly things, but on things higher, and more worthy of our affections, who profess to be followers of the lowly Jesus. Now let us pray often—pray each for the other—be long-suffering—continue looking for the Lord, and soon he will appear unto us without sin unto salvation.

One trying to serve the Lord,

JANE P. ROBERTS.

Pine Meadow, Ct., June 8th, 1856.

For the Crisis.

Letter from B. P. Manning.

"Watchman, what of the night?"

"The watchman said, the morning cometh, and also the night; if ye will enquire, enquire ye; return, come." Isa. 21: 11–12.

This is the enquiry of many souls in this time of declension. In this part of the vineyard of the Lord, what has become of those loved ones, who wrote for the Crisis in former days? How it cheered the heart of the pilgrims to read those letters from different Brn. and Srs., in various parts of the country. Where are those dear Brn. and Srs. now? are they fallen asleep in Jesus, or have they given up their blessed hope? O Brn., awake! awake!! put on the whole armor of God. "Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward, for ye have need of patience that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise; for yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith."

O, Brn., do not draw back, if you do, I fear you will go to perdition. The promise is, "he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved;" the promise is not to them that start and run well for a short time, and then go back because the time has passed and Jesus has not come. To go back into the world is death; yes, sure death. "Let us take heed to the more sure word of prophecy, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the Day-star arise in your hearts." 2 Pet. 1: 19.

"Grudge not one against another Brn., lest ye be condemned; behold the Judge standeth before the door. Jas. 5: 19.

Yes, the Lord is about to come—praise his holy name! How good the Lord is to his children to give them his word and spirit, to show them the way to the Kingdom.

Well, dear Brn., hold fast whereunto you have attained, that no man take your crown. May the Lord save us all in his kingdom, is the prayer of your Bro., waiting for the promise.

BENJ. P. MANNING.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. E. Whitney.

BRO. GRANT:—I am still looking for that blessed hope—for that loved one to return, who promised if he went away, he would come back again. I looked for him in '43, but he did not come; but in '44, although I had been disappointed, I went forth with the little flock with ardent hopes of meeting our coming King, but we were doomed to another disappointment. And truly it was a disappointment to the little band, who, like Peter, had left all. Many that were rich in this world's goods before, became poor in giving their goods to the needy; and having that confidence that Peter had when he cast himself into the sea, saying Lord, save or we perish. The Lord did extend his hand to Peter, and so he has to the little flock who left all to follow him. He has promised that he will never leave nor forsake those who put their trust in him.

But '44 passed, and with it many of them that had been with us to the house of prayer went back to the world, and became scoffers of the blessed Hope. This was a trying time to the little band. Scoffs, and frowns on every side, forsaken by relatives and professed friends, the church saying, come back and confess, and we will receive you.

Many went back, and where are they? Let their lives tell. Truly the world looked dark and dreary before us, but what should we do? Give up the blessed hope and go back to the wicked world, and mingle in their unholy amusement? For this we had no relish. Riches we cared not for; worldly honors we did not desire; we were pilgrims looking for that better country, and we felt like pilgrims. The question would be often asked, "are you not going to give it up, now your time is passed?" Our response would always be, "Jesus said, "if I go away I will come again," and we believe him; and he said, when ye see the signs begin to come to pass, look up, for your redemption draweth nigh; and we fully believed that we had seen the sign in the sun, moon and stars, and in the history of the world had passed Babylon, Media and Persia, Greece and Rome, and were down in the last remaining fragments of the old Roman Empire—the man of sin had been revealed, and would soon go into perdition. It was having the faith once delivered to the saints, that enabled us to stand the scoffs and frowns of a wicked world, and knowing that the promises were to those that endured to the end. Like Moses, we were willing to renounce the honors, the riches and the pleasures of this world, that we might gain a better inheritance. Thus month after month, and year after year passed away. The little flock sighing for deliverance, and the earnest prayer ascending—"thy kingdom come." The children of God searched the Scriptures to see the reason of their Lord's delay.

We found in the parable of the virgins that we were to go out to meet the Bridegroom, and to meet with a disappointment. There was to be a tarrying time; this strengthened us in our position, and encouraged us to go on to see the King in his beauty at the end of the journey. Then we read there should be "distress of nations with perplexity," this we saw commenced in 1848, and I believe never will close until our Lord shall come. The nations are to be in an angry state when God's wrath comes, and the dead are raised. Although the nations are now being lulled just enough for the Lord to prepare for the great battle, and the peace and safety criers to be taken in a snare, but the angry nations will soon have cause to be gathered to Jerusalem to battle.

When I heard the sound, that some believed the Lord would come in '54, it was a joyful one to me. I looked at the evidence, believed it to be true, and left all to go and proclaim the glad tidings to my brethren, and to a wicked world. Although I have met with another sad disappointment in not seeing my blessed Savior, yet I thank the Lord, I went and preached the gospel of the kingdom, for it was truly the power of God unto salvation, to many that believed among the hills and mountains of New Hampshire, where I have labored for the last two years. Many a warm heart beats within a rough garment, and the fervent prayer goes up to Him who is no respecter of persons.

I would say to my dear Brethren and sisters whom I have left in New Hampshire—be strong in the Lord, trust in him, forget not his goodness, be watchful, be prayerful, and the God of peace be with you.

O, Brethren and Sisters! let us be up and doing, for the Lord will soon come and reward all his faithful ones. O how glorious it will be when this earth is brought back to its Eden state, and the dear saints of God raised from the dead, are made immortal, where no sickness, no sorrow, no death can ever come. Praise the Lord. I want to be there in that bright world of glory, where we shall meet to part no more. Amen.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. B. Titcomb.

BRO. GRANT:—I hope and pray that you may be endowed with wisdom from on high, that you may be enabled to feed the flock until the chief Shepherd shall appear. I am still looking for the return of the Bridegroom, and hope to be found ready for the marriage supper of the Lamb. May the Lord help the Bride to make herself ready. The blessed truth seems more and more dear to me every day. I do thank God for permitting me to see the great light that shines in these last moments of time. There has been one conversion recently among our little band. A Bro. Miner whose attention was arrested under father Miller's preaching at Chicopee Falls and Three Rivers. He has been on the water the past five years, but the impressions then received never left him. He came in to our little meeting, and was so affected that he cried and sobbed like a child; and the same night, he became so happy that he could shout. He is now in Somers, Ct.

I send my mite for the old debt on the Crisis. SARAH B. TITCOMB.

Holyoke, Mass., May 29, '56.

To contend against the evils of other men, does not remove our own.

The man who seeks to destroy another, will most certainly destroy himself in the end.

If the soul is a spiritual thing, and immortal, then it must have spiritual immortality how then can it die a spiritual death?

How could David say, "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave," if the grave has no dominion over the soul?

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Faith, Hope and Love.

BY ORRIN P. ALLEN.

Heavenly words are these. The most glorious that adorn the Christian's vocabulary. Fraught with blest assurance, calm expectation, and holy affection, they ever sustain the lone pilgrim, journeying through this world's night of sorrow.

Faith is an anchor firmly attached to the rock of Ages; yea, its cable extends beyond the stormy billows of the dark ocean of time, and twines around the throne of God. Sublime and glorious is the power of faith; it never fails to buoy up the pilgrim-freighted bark, though beset by the wildest storm. It sustained Noah in that awful voyage when the mighty flood rolled round the deluged world, and became, as it were, the second father of mankind, while the sinful antedeluvians who scorned the noble assurance that prompted him to build an Ark, perished because they had no faith in God. It was faith that rescued Lot from the wrath that impended over the cities of the plain; and when the fiery tempest swept over them like a whirlwind, he was resting his wearied form in the distant city of Zoar, rejoicing in that higher power, that had saved him from death. Even Abraham, whose earthly hopes centred in his lovely son Isaac, murmured not at the stern decree of Heaven which bade him offer up his son as a lamb for sacrifice. And when beside the altar on distant Moriah, he was about to strike the fatal blow, lo, an angel stayed his hand. It was enough. His faith upheld him in that severe trial, and he became the recipient of the most glorious promises ever bequeathed to man.

In a later age, when the children of Israel stood on the shore of the Red Sea, with the hosts of Pharaoh pressing behind them, by faith Moses stretched out his wondrous wand over the dark waters and opened a passage for his people; while the enemies of God were overwhelmed by the angry billows that swept over them. This was a glorious triumph of faith; but what has not been accomplished since by the same confidence in divine aid. The multitudes of Israel are faint with thirst in a desert land; the flinty rock is smitten with a rod, and a cooling fountain gushed forth for their relief. The bold tide of Jordan stays its flow till the faithful are passed over its course. The proud walls of Jericho tremble and fall to the ground at the blast of Israel's trumpeter. Even the Sun and Moon pause in their courses at the command of Joshua, to view his triumph over the heathen. The nations of Canaan tremble, and their armies flee in dismay before the standards of the tribes. Through faith they take possession of the promised land and divide its fair domains among themselves.

In after years when Israel had rebelled against God, and were a lonely captive band by the cold stream of Babel, what noble example of faith do we behold in the fortitude of the three worthies, who had rather brave the fierce flames of the fiery furnace than bow before the golden image of the proud Nebuchadnezzar; and in the noble Daniel who feared his God more than the ravenous lions. Noble-minded was their triumph, as the triumph of the faithful ever is, for God never forsakes those who trust in him. It is faith, firm as the adamantine hills, that has ever guided the church through the storms and perils that have beset his path. By its aid she passed undaunted through the cruel persecutions of pagan Rome, overcoming her enemies by acts of love, rather than of force. And it forsook her not even when the black night of Papal rule hung like a pall of terror over the world; but through that gloomy period when the earth was made rich with the blood of her martyred hosts. She shrunk not from the dangers that threatened her on every side, but met the cruel scourgings of her enemies with a fortitude that astonished the world.

The above are but a few of the examples of what faith has accomplished, yet enough are given to show the influence of this powerful principle in sustaining the mind amid all the trying scenes through which it is called to pass.

Closely allied to faith, is another principle implanted in the bosom of man, called hope. Cheered by its influence, man never becomes weary in the pursuit of any desirable object, as long as that object is attainable. Hope, is a glorious star ever beaming in the heavens, to guide man o'er life's thorny pathway. The darkest storms of adversity obscure not its heaven-born light, but shining on, it continues to point the lone traveler to that far off clime where the azure sky of joy never grows dim with lowering clouds. Hope was coeval with man's creation, and has ever been the companion of his joys and sorrows. There are, however, two kinds of hope. The one often deceives the heart by weaving false promises of happiness around our golden future, which, alas, is often darkened by the first breath of adversity. But the other, surrounded by all the evidences of eternal truth, never blights the warm expectations of the confiding heart, with disappointment. This last is the hope delineated in holy Writ, which is ever abiding, and will fade not even when all sublunary things dissolve.

"Eternal hope! when yonder spheres sublime,
Peal'd their notes to sound the march of Time,
Thy joyous youth began—but not to fade,
When all the sister planets have decay'd;
When wrapt in fire the realms of other glow,
And Heavens' last thunder shakes the world below,
Thou, undismayed, shalt o'er the ruins smile,
And light thy torch at Nature's funeral pile!"

Glorious boon is this to the Christian; it not only cheers his footsteps here, but it is destined to transport him above the wrecks of nature to the bosom of the Father. Then, not till then, will hope be lost in the blaze of blest reality. For its divine mission ends only with the consummation of the Universal Plan.

It is the province of hope to gladden the heart, with bright expectations of the future; but what is love? It is that influence which unites heaven in one harmonious whole, and is the very soul and essence of the glorious plan of salvation.

Love is a green oasis, smiling with perennial flowers, amid the drear desert of earth's conflicting passions. It is the one connecting link between earth and heaven, and almost the only vestige remaining, to tell of the earth's primeval innocence. If it were not for the influence that love exerts on the mind, earth would present a sad waste, uninviting as the burning sands of Sahara. For where malice and hatred reign, happiness can find no lodgment. It is the sympathetic flow of kindred spirits, that causes man to forget the sorrows of adversity; and naught will calm the raging storm of passion so soon as the influence of love. It distills its balmy dew on the sere leaf, as well as the gaudy flower, and it breathes its fragrance on foe as well as friend. How beautifully the gentle forbearance of love is delineated, in the following from the Hindoo.

"When on the fragrant Sandal tree,
The woodman's axe descends,
And she that bloomed so beauteously,
Beneath the keen stroke bends;
E'en on the edge that wrought her death,
Dying she breathes her sweetest breath,
As if to token, in her fall,
Peace to her foes and love to all."

Faith and Hope are the cheering attendants of frail mortality, but a glorious era will come when faith will be lost in sight, and hope will be swallowed up in the blaze of blest reality. Then will be enjoyed that sweet rest which faith has often promised the weary pilgrim; then will be realized those visions of angelic bliss, which hope hath often pictured to the ardent fancy. But even in that bright age, which has long been the theme of inspired prophets and bards, the divine influence of love will not cease. But through out the shining cycles of eternity, the pure banner of love will float above the myriads of the redeemed. Her influence will thrill each heart, and forever be the grand theme of the harmonious songs which will continually ascend the holy hill of Zion.

Be of Good Cheer—Have faith in God.

BY HENRY F. CARPENTER.

Come, and at night time, learn with me a lesson from the shore of Gennesareth. See that toiling ship, as amid the wild wind's roar and tempest's rage, she now mounts up to heaven and anon goes "down again to the depths." Look upon that little band as with every nerve and sinew they struggle at the oar, wrestling with the storm. Mark that bewildered look, as anxiously gazing through the darkness brooding o'er the boiling deep, they clearly behold some object bright, approaching. What trembling seizes upon them. "Is it not enough," methinks they say, "that we contend with wind and angry sea, without a 'spirit' to affright us?" But hark! amid the strife of excited elements they catch the sound—"Be of good cheer! It is I, be not afraid!" What magic in those words! It seems to me I can even now almost feel their power, like the electric chills of emotion which stole o'er them till their whole being was electrical with joy. Behold the change! The oar is dropped—danger is forgotten—fear is exchanged for confident safety, and from that devoted disciple, as he stands already to launch away, is heard—"Bid me come unto thee." Ah, my Brn. and Srs., is there not here a lesson for us? Darkness is settling o'er this sea of life—the shades of deepest night are falling upon the world—the winds of infidelity are lifting high the waves and letting loose the floods of sin, while upon these angry surges our bark is tossed. 'Tis a time for action, for effort, for mighty zeal. The interest of a perishing world is at stake. As that little ship on Gennesareth's heaving bosom bore the hopes of the whole earth in Him, through whom "life and immortality" were to be offered to man, "dead in sin," so also is our bark freighted.

Had that ship been wrecked, the story of redeeming love would never have come to melt our hearts and give us hope: so should our bark sink, wretchedness and death would end our existence. But thank God, she cannot sink; her Builder is He that maketh the storm a calm, "so that the waves thereof are still;" that spake a world from naught. He has made her strong to brave all danger, and fear no evil. Well then may we boldly ply the oar in faith. Yes, Brn. and Srs., though we sail through raging seas, let our hearts be strong, trusting in Him whom winds and sea obey; for, as we toil, can we not see amid all the gloom of unbelief now resting upon this agitated ocean of life; cannot we, whose sight is aided by the light of truth, see an object, bright and glorious, coming, nearer and nearer, before whose coming heaven and earth shall flee away? Can we not feel a thrill of joy as we hear the echo of that well-known voice, saying "Be of good cheer? It is I?" As we stand all ready and longing "to depart and be with Christ," do we not hear him say, "Come?" Yes, and not only so, but more than this have we to encourage and comfort us, for, as in those perilous times we wait for him, "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ, do we not hear Him say, "Behold, I come quickly?"

But we have yet, as did Peter, to walk o'er heaving billows, ere He shall receive us to himself, thus ever to be with Him. Shall we, as we see "the winds boisterous," be "afraid" and begin to sink? God forbid! Who is it that has said unto us—"Come unto me?" The Lord himself. Has he, who "came to seek and save that which was lost," who loved us "unto death," called us forth to perish in the deep? He that spared not His own Son, but delivered him up for us all, shall He not also freely give us all things? "O ye of little faith,"—wherefore do ye doubt?" O may we ever keep the echo in our hearts,—"Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world;" and "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

The Heavenly Warrior.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Behold the heavenly warrior as he boldly enters the fearful strife of the moral battle field, clad in robes of salvation, harnessed in divine panoply, girded with God's essential truth, and holding the weapons of his Commander's orders!

The battle in which he engages is a battle for life—eternal life. If he is victorious, he is gloriously victorious; and if he is vanquished, it is a fearful retreat he must make. The enemy with which he contends is both multitudinous, and magnitudinous. Earth, and hell, and self, contest the ground, step by step. Poor soldier, now is thine awful hour! Fight valiantly now, and win immortal palms! Thy Master is beholding thee—God, angels, men, devils are beholding thee. Will thy courage fail? Look up to the Fountain of help! Cease not to cry for strength from the Mighty One. Seest thou not those shining hills of light in the distance? On those hills squadrons of bright seraphs wait to chant thy triumph, when thou shalt march home to receive thy laurels!

Thy position is not an isolated one. Patriarchs, prophets, apostles, martyrs, and common saints have fought before thee. Yea, the great Immanuel himself, thy Captain and thy Lord, has stood on the bloody field in person, and engaged hand to hand with hell's bitterest and fiercest numbers.

See, see him in the wilderness of Judea engaged in the awful struggle! Forty days fasting, all alone, in the midst of wild beasts, measuring swords with the king of darkness—the victory is sure—the devil retires ashamed, and angels descend to fold their wings on the bosom of the holy Sufferer! It should nerve thee thus to consider the triumph of thy Redeemer.

Nor is this the only instance of his life, which need demand thy attention. Look at him in the midst of criticising Pharisees, tempting Sadducees, questioning lawyers, and fault-finding Jews, still he is victorious! Look at him on the Roman cross—his form is mangled, his visage is marred,—his disciples weep around in the distance, his own mother mourns at the foot of the cross; death's halo gathers on his eyelids, his Father's face is hid, hell triumphs, devils rejoice,—life is almost gone,—still he is victorious!—O how victorious! Hear the heavenly Hero cry: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!"

Was ever victory like this?

Turn thine eyes to Him, christian, and learn to secure triumph in death!

It has been remarked, that when Commodore Perry's men fought on Lake Erie, when one and another of them fell, they turned, in falling, and fell facing their commander. So fall thou, with thine eyes on thy Commander; and thou shalt "RISE AGAIN."

Choice Selections.

Key of Truth.

The following is another extract from Bro. Sheldon's "Key of Truth." We commend it to the lovers of truth, praying that it may be the means of unlocking the treasure house of wisdom and the fountains of light that have been so long closed by the iron grasp of papacy.

PUNISHMENT OF THE WICKED.

"Are the wicked now being punished in some unknown hell, or are they to be punished at the judgment day?

Ans. 'Reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment TO BE PUNISHED." 2 Pet. 2: 9; Job 21: 30.

Does the sinner receive his damnation at death, or at his resurrection?

Ans. 'They that have done evil (shall come forth) unto the RESURRECTION of damnation.' John 5: 29.

Are the wages of sin eternal life in misery?

Ans. 'The wages of sin is DEATH.' Rom. 6: 23.

What death awaits the sinner?

Ans. 'The SECOND death. Rev. 20: 14.

Will the sinner exist eternally unconsumed?

Ans. 'Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall BURN THEM UP, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them NEITHER ROOT NOR BRANCH.' Mal. 4: 1; Ps. 37: 10; 2 Thess. 1: 9; Obd. 16; Rev. 20: 9.

Will the wicked emigrate to some remote realm to receive their punishment, or will the foretold hell of the impenitent exist on the earth at the great burning day?

Ans. 'The heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto FIRE against the DAY OF JUDGMENT and perdition of UNGODLY MEN.' 2 Pet. 3: 7; Prov. 11: 31; Matt. 13: 40–42.

With the popular view, we have had only a human sacrifice for immortal souls, for it is contended that only the body of Christ died; whereas, the Scriptures show us that we have had a divine sacrifice, as Christ 'poured out his SOUL unto death,' making 'His soul an offering for sin.' Isa. 53: 10, 12; Matt. 26: 48; Acts 2: 27–31.

Modern theology is subversive of the scriptural doctrine of a judgment day, as it represents men as going to heaven or hell before being judged, involving the idea of a future rally from hell and heaven to 'stand before the judgment seat of Christ,' which would be like first hanging a man, and afterwards trying his case! Neither the reward of the righteous, nor the damnation of the sinner can be realized before the judgment. Jesus never told us that we must give an account at death, but 'They shall give account IN THE DAY OF JUDGMENT.' Matt. 12: 36.

HELL!

The Scriptures do not teach the present existence of a burning hell, but they describe its future existence. This word frequently occurs in our version of the Scriptures, when no allusion is made by the inspired writers, to the hell of final punishment. The term 'hell' is indiscriminately translated from the original terms Sheol, Hades, Tartarus, Gehenna, which we will examine:—

1. Sheol is a Hebrew term which is often rendered 'grave' in our version. It never signifies a place of conscious existence, for, says the inspired penman, 'There is no work, nor device, nor wisdom in Sheol.' Eccl. 9: 10.

It never implies the future 'lake of fire,' for it was the receptacle of Christ for three days and nights; 'Thou wilt not leave my soul in (sheol) hell.' Ps. 16: 10.

Christ's soul went to Sheol, (incorrectly rendered hell,) but was not 'LEFT' there to see corruption.' Acts 2: 31.

Even if Sheol could be construed to mean a burning hell, it would not prove an endless one. 'O sheol, I will be thy DESTRUCTION.' Hosea 13: 14.

2. Hades is a Greek term corresponding with sheol. Peter in quoting the language of David concerning Christ's burial, substitutes the term hades for sheol, and remarks, David 'seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ that His soul was not left in hades.' Acts 2: 31.

The grave of Christ is here called hades. It never brings to view the hell of punishment, but is merely the receptacle of the dead, righteous and unrighteous, till the judgment day. 'Death and hell (hades) were cast into the lake of fire.' Rev. xx. 14. If hades implies a burning hell, then hell must be cast into hell; or in other words, hell must burn itself up!

3. Tartarus is a Greek term employed to describe the state of "the angels that sinned"—not the place of their abode. It is used but once, "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to (Tartarus) hell, and delivered them into the chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment."—2 Peter ii. 4. The fact that they are there "reserved unto judgment," proves that Tartarus is not the hell of punishment, or lake of fire. Where are the angels that sinned? Are they confined in some distant burning realm? No; Beelzebub, the prince of devils, is 'walking to and fro in the earth,' 'seeking whom he may devour;' and 'seven' departed from Mary; and 'legions' of them were permitted to go among the herd of swine; yet they were all this time in Tartarus—not a burning hell, but a state in which they are reserved, unto judgment to receive their final doom, which is destruction.—Heb. ii. 14.

4. Gehenna does clearly bring to view the future hell of the ungodly, but as clearly disproves its present existence. The wicked are destroyed in gehenna, both soul and body, and certainly the body does not go to a burning hell at death; therefore the existence of gehenna (hell) is on the other side of the 'resurrection of damnation.' Prior to that resurrection, there is no damnation or hell to the ungodly; for God will reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. Jesus informs us that the whole body will be cast into gehenna, (Matt. v. 30,)—of course at the judgment day!

There is a future hell or lake of fire for the wicked. Rev. xxi. 8. The whole man is guilty, and the whole man must be punished at the same period—not an abstract part at a time! Modern theology casts reflections upon God's past dealings with men, while it claims that the soul is the only intelligent part of man, and that body a mere organ through which the soul plays its pranks. For instance, in the Mosaic dispensation the man who picked up sticks on the Sabbath must be stoned to death. Here, according to modern theology, the wicked soul stood behind the curtain, and made a tool of the innocent body, with which to commit the sin. Then God commands the innocent body to be stoned to death, and let the wicked soul escape the penalty. The truth is, the entire man sins, and the entire man reaps the penalty. Man's soul never exists without the body. In the primary sense of the word, man is a soul. 'The Lord formed man (of what material?) of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils (not an immortal soul, but) the breath of life; and MAN (not the breath) became a [illegible]

ing SOUL.'—Gen. ii. 7. 'All the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls.' Ex. i. 5. We read of 'full souls,' 'lean souls,' 'fat souls,' 'hungry souls,' 'blood of the soul,' &c.

Without a resurrection, death would hold an eternal dominion over the human family. Without 'a resurrection of life,' the saints would not be recompensed.—Without a 'resurrection of damnation,' no punishment to the wicked.

Napoleon.

"In the Morning Chronicle for Friday, Nov. 2nd, you will find the first or only announcement of what may prove the most MOMENTOUS OCCURRENCES OF THE AGE.

On Sunday, the 30th of Sept., 1855, the French flag was hoisted at Jerusalem—the French Emperor made the patron of the Holy places, and prayers offered up for him by all the clergy, as if Jerusalem were a part of his own empire."—"The last vials." No. 11, p. 10.

Says the Chronicle:

"While our attention is fixed upon the events of the Crimea, the French are settling the disputed question of the Holy places of Jerusalem, in their own way."

Says an English writer:

"The seizure of the Holy Places, and, in fact, of Jerusalem itself, is the greatest of all the great events which have occurred within the 19th century. The rest are great only politically, this event is great SCRIPTURALLY. It looks like the beginning of the end."—"The last vials." No. 11. p. 11.

"The largest body of faithful Jews in the world is to be found in the Crimea. They are the Karaites—the purest and most faithful of all the Jewish race; they adhere solely to the Word of God, and rejects the tradition of the Rabbinical commentators. The liberation of these Karaite Jews from the Crimea will hereafter form an important element in Jewish affairs."—"The last Vials." No. 11, p. 13.

THE MOON.—"Dr. Scoresby, in an account that he has given of some recent observations made with the Earl of Rosse's telescope, says:

"With respect to the moon, every object on its surface of one hundred feet was now distinctly to be seen, and he had no doubt that under very favorable circumstances, it would be so with objects sixty feet in height. On its surface were craters of extinct volcanoes, rocks, and masses of stones almost innumerable. He had no doubt that if such a building as he was then in were upon the surface of the moon, it would be rendered distinctly visible by these instruments. But there were no signs of inhabitants such as ours—no vestige of architecture remains to show that the moon is or ever was inhabited by a race of mortals similar to ourselves. It presented no appearance which could lead to the supposition that it contained anything like the green fields and lovely verdure of this beautiful world of ours. There was no water visible—not a sea, or river, or even the measure of a reservoir for supplying town or factory—all seemed desolate."

WITNESSING FOR CHRIST."—In the time of the Marian persecution," says Brooks "there was a gracious woman who being convened before bloody Bonner, then Bishop of London, upon the trial of religion, he threatened her that he would take away her husband from her. Saith she, 'Christ is my husband.'

'I will take away thy child.'

'Christ,' saith she, 'is better to me than ten sons.'

'I will strip thee,' saith he, 'of all thy outward comforts.'

'Yes, but Christ is mine,' saith she; 'and you cannot strip me of Him.'

O, the assurance that Christ was hers bore up her heart, and quieted her spirit, under all."

As without the sun there could be no sunlight, so without Christ there could be no Christians. And as the sun's rays enlighten the world—although they are not the world—although they are not the sun—so Christians, too, are the light and life of the world.

Those who excel in strength are not most likely to show contempt of weakness. A man does not despise the weakness of a child.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 23, 1856.

☞ We learn from Bro. J. B. Cook of Rochester, N. Y., that he will endeavor to be at the Wilbraham Campmeeting.

We are rejoiced to know that his Eastern friends may hope to greet him once more in the tented grove, to where Zion's songs give cheer to the weary pilgrim.

☞ Meetings in Boston at the Free Chapel, corner of Lowell and Causeway street, every Tuesday and Friday evening, and at the usual hours on the Lord's day. Our Brn. and Srs. visiting the city can get further information by calling at the Crisis office, 167 Hannover St.

Portsmouth.

Last Lord's day, July 13, was spent pleasantly with the Brn. in the above named city.

They have a pleasant chapel owned by the church, and well filled when they assemble for worship.

The devil has not been able to drive a dividing wedge among this happy company of Christ's followers, consequently, prosperity attend them, and the christian feels at home in their society.

I have noticed when in Portsmouth one very valuable trait of charactor in the church. It is this: They are careful "to speak evil of no man."

In conseqnence of obeying this Scripture, they act and feel like brethren.

I am fully convinced of one great truth; viz., that it is impossible to have christian prosperity, while in the practice of evil speaking or backbiting.

Brn. and Srs., let us do as we would be done by.

If our noted enemy can get us to talk over each other's faults, he has almost secured us for his service; though outwardly we may profess to be disciples of Jesus.

Remember—no backbiter can dwell in the tabernacle of God, nor he that taketh up a reproach against his neighbor.

Book Notices.

THE OLD PATHS; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a future Life, embracing copious extracts from the writings of primitive christians, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. HASTINGS. SECOND EDITION.

There are some persons who suppose that the doctrines of life and immortality, only through Christ are NEW,—such should peruse the above work. The author starts upon the basis of a previous work—"Pauline Theology," and proceeds to show the faith of primitive christians upon this subject.

The first writer is Bàrnabas, the second is Clement. (Phil. 4, 3) The third is Hermas, mentioned Rom. 16 14 The fourth is Ignatius who was a disciple and successor of Peter at Antioch, and the fifth is Polycarp, who was the friend and disciple of the beloved John, the Revelator. This list comprises all the writers who had the benefit of personal acquaintance with the apostles. From their writings the author has selected every passage which has reference to the future state of man. In all their writings there are no such expressions as "eternal torment," "immortal soul," "never dying spirit," &c., &c. The plain and simple doctrines of life and death,—life for the righteous and death for the wicked are presented in clear and explicit language, showing that those writers held a faith entirely different from that of the ordinary writers of the present day.

Camp-Meeting and Conference.

Providence permitting, there will be a general Camp-meeting Conference at North Wilbraham, at the old ground on the hill, commencing Monday, Aug. 18, to continue one week.

All Christians, without regard to sect or party, are invited to attend; and all who wish to become the followers of Christ.

We expect one of the best meetings we have ever enjoyed. It is on the Western Railroad, 10 miles East of Springfield, 44 West of Worcester, and 88 from Boston.

For particulars, see Crisis, No. 46.

The countenance is the title page to the book of the mind, and it may also be regarded as the preface—a portion of the work we should by no means leave unread.

Turner's Magic Cordial.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you say through the Crisis once only, for the benefit of those who have long known and used my Cordial for Summer complaints, that I have on hand a small quantity of the article, of best quality, which I will forward to order to any part of this country.

All who wish this Cordial this season, will do well to send their orders immediately, as I do not intend to manufacture any this year, on account of the high prices of the materials I use, and of my present embarrassments.

Orders must be addressed to Joseph Turner, Hartford, Conn., and all orders attended by the cash, or from friends that I know will receive immediate attention.

The season is upon us which should find every family prepared to combat summer complaints in every form; to those who have known or used my Cordial, I need not say it is the medicine they should possess,—they know its value is unrivalled.

For the Crisis.

A Word.

BY H. L. HASTINGS.

BRETHREN:— To-day multitudes are finding recreation and pleasure in the celebration of liberty, a liberty that seems oscillating with fearful sweep between anarchy and slavery. I have no heart to join in the exultation, or to swell the hosannahs of a snivelling generation. My heart groans for deliverance from the bondage of corruption, and I long for the emancipation of the Sons of God. While this is delayed, I cannot exult,—but when the delay is over, then we will cease our sorrows and take up the blessed song—

"Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to Him: For the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready."

But this is future, and I want to write something about the present, about duties, necessities and obligations.

Some who read this remember the campmeeting at Wilbraham last year, and how God blessed us the last night, when we raised money enough to buy the Winsted tent, and send it to the Great West. We called it the New England Mission tent. Well, they have used it some, have had three or four meetings in it this season, and I hope it will prove a blessing to the cause.

But look here; you know guns are not worth much without ammunition, and artillery without carriages wouldn't be sa good as muskets or rifles. To speak plain: Bro. Walter Pratt is out there with the tent, but his health is low, his spirits lower, and his pocket lowest of all, I fear. He wants help—he will not ask for it, and so I will. Now I shall let him tell his own story by taking the liberty of publishing a private letter from him. He writes under date of May 23d, '56:

"BRO. HASTINGS:—I have heard nothing from you since I sent you an order for books, to New York. I will now say in relation to the order, if you have not filled it you need not. The reason is a sad one to me. For some cause, probably getting overdone traveling and preaching, I am stopped with an affection of the heart. I was laboring in De Kalb Centre—interest good, and every appearance of a good work,—when I had two attacks of palpitation of the heart, so severe that I have been scarcely free from pain since. I stopped preaching at once, and for the first time since I entered the field I was compelled to say, 'I am satisfied I shall have to leave the field.'

Poverty has stared me in the face, and many other things have obstructed my path, but none of these things ever moved me. But now, poor, frail, mortal life seems to be giving way; yea, life's perpetuator seems obstructed. The thought is anything but pleasant. I can hardly endure it.

I have not informed my family, as I expect to go home in a few days, and it would only cause them anxiety that would be of no benefit to me, and might do them much harm.

I might write much on the subject—my health—my circumstances—my prospects,—but the subject is too exciting, and the picture too dark for me to contemplate in my present state, with profit. Well, if my work is done, my mission ended, and I am about to fall asleep, I have some things to console me, as well as many things to regret. I shall not, however, now pen them, as I am too weak. Suffice it to say, for this reason, you need not send me the books and tracts ordered, as I cannot travel to dispose of them.

I have some three months' labor laid out, but I am stopped—I go home to my family weeping, and wait the result and the opening of Providence. God only knows what awaits me. Your prayers I need not solicit, I know I shall have them.

Thy Bro. WALTER PRATT."

The above was not received until after the books were sent. He wrote me previously, that pecuniarily, he had been "running behind" ever since he went to the West.

I have received another letter, dated June 29th, from which it seems that his health is some better, though so poor that he finds it needful to labor with great care and moderation. He is, however, disposed to continue the warfare, and will probably find use for the tracts; here, however, arises another difficulty, which he may state in his own words:

"But the West is the hardest place to sell books of any place I have ever found. I have paid some $15. freight on what I have received, and at the three meetings I have held, I have not sold enough to pay freight. The people will not lay out money for books. . . . I should be very glad to have brethren make up a FUND, so I can DISTRIBUTE TRACTS at the meetings. To SELL is small business, and to give them away I cannot, if I have got to meet bills. My health is not firm. I never was so poor as I am now."

The above presents the case briefly to the reader's mind. Now whats to be done?

Well, when Bro. Pratt went West, I determined to do what I could to aid in the work there, in which I was unable to engage personally. Accordingly, I have forwarded him tracts, which, at the wholesale prices, would amount to one hundred and fifty dollars, or more. These tracts he could pay for if he could sell them. But men who do not know the truth, will not buy, till they become interested; and many who once loved the truth, and who went West desiring to spread it, get drawn into the vortex of worldliness, and swept along on the tide of speculation, and unless God pities, they will be drowned in destruction and perdition.

Now, to go into a worldly and covetous community, and tell them that the Kingdom of God is at hand, and then persuade them to buy tracts on the subject, is impossible,—we want to scatter the printed pages, like autumnal leaves, and so generously that if only one seed in a hundred does any good, yet, even then, we'll not lose the harvest.

Now shall these brethren at the West be assisted to do this? or shall they wear out lungs and life, and leave the seed to be caught away by the enemy, for want of cheap little publications to assist the hearers in retaining what has been preached?

I shall write to Bro. Pratt, and tell him to give those tracts to all who will read them. Peradventure, among all those thousands of tracts, one may reach some poor benighted mortal, and give him light—it may save one soul from death, if so, this is worth more than all the cost, and if this object is attained it will reward the toil.

Further, I shall try to pray for Bro. Pratt, and those that labor with him in the Western field.

But here a thought arises. Part of those tracts and pamphlets I bought and paid for, but there are others that are not paid for yet, and my notes are in the hands of the bankers, and paper dealers, to the amount of several hundred dollars for them.

Now then, will the brethren take hold of this matter? If Brn. who have the means will pay one-half of the bill above named, i. e., $75. I will credit Bro. Pratt the balance on the tracts and pamphlets, and thus he will have one hundred and fifty dollars worth of tracts to give away, or to sell to any who wish to buy, and he can take the proceeds to sustain the tent, or to purchase more tracts.

Come, Brn., here is a chance for those who "don't see what they can do." Here's a chance for those who have complained about having such "big taxes to pay"—lay up your treasure in heaven,—money in God's bank pays no taxes and draws compound interest to all eternity. Brn., here is a chance for all to preach, and preach to persons whose faces you will never see till you stand before the judgment seat of Christ. Would you like to meet there a sinner saved by grace through the instrumentality of a little tract that your penny had purchased?

Brn., pray for the brethren at the West,—pray for the New England Mission tent, and pray with your hands in your pockets, if your religion is "pocket deep."

Brn., some of you have kindly told me to let you know when I needed help and you would assist. This I probably shall not do. While I have One on whom I can cast all my care, I shall not need to mention it to others,—besides, I desire that men should learn their duty from God by the Spirit's teaching rather than from me. But in this case I lay the facts before you—the amount can easily be raised if those that love God will take hold and try. Who will do it? Let what is done be done quickly. Time is short. If the Brn. will raise $75 towards those tracts, which will not pay the actual cost of some of them, I will give the rest of the $150. If they will not do it, I shall give the whole, and trust in God for means to pay the notes when they come due.

Persons can send direct to Walter Pratt, Moline, Illinois, or they can send to me, and I will, at Bro. Pratt's request, receive and appropriate their offerings as they may direct. H. L. HASTINGS.

Bible Truth.

BY HENRY W. DANN.

NO. II.

Human life is a mystery; and for the unfolding of man's mysterious existence, we are indebted to Revelation alone. It is true, there are a few glimmering rays of twilight that dawn on living mortals, but it is Revelation alone that has brought life and immortality to light, and inspired the Christian heart with hopes that are big with immortality. If we look not to divine Revelation for guidance, to what other point in the universe of God can we direct our spiritual visions? Shall we look to creeds, churches or professors? Alas! they fail in their vain attempts to guide the mind of man aright. Man is destined to immortality, (if good,) and, with this high destiny, shall we trust to fellow-man for guidance or counsel? No! But rather let us exclaim with the Psalmist of old, "thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory."

In every age of the world's history, men have sought for consolation in material things, and indeed, so absorbed and engrossed have been their minds in worldly affairs, that Revelation's holy light has never dawned upon their minds; and hence the infidelity and skepticism that has obtained in every age; and I do not wonder that the blessed Master himself marveled at the unbelief of the Jewish skeptics, when we consider the jealous eye with which they looked upon the dawn of the Christian era. But when the Jews themselves witnessed the mighty works of the Messiah, their minds were wrought upon, so that they could see, though dimly, traces of spiritual life. Indeed, the many sacrifices they had to offer led them to believe that it was impossible that spiritual influence could be brought to bear on mortal men, except through sacrificial observances. But Christ, when he came, taught them a better way—the way of faith; and also gave them to understand that it was impossible for them to attempt to please God in any other way, than that which he had already given for their consideration. These instructions and sayings which Christ had imparted to the Jewish nation were of too much importance to be lost; and fearing lest they might become extinct, the good men of the age were led to compile and bring them together for the benefit of the generations that were to succeed.

This book, thus brought before us, we avow to be the word of God. Now if it is true that this compilation is from God himself, then of what vast moment and tremendous interest it is to mortal man. It unfolds to our spiritual vision the dark and mysterious future that awaits us,—it informs us of the great and mighty events that will transpire in this world's history—it tells us of a coming Messiah—of a glorious resurrection from the dead—and of eternal life beyond this vale of tears and sorrow. O who would still cling with tenacious grasp to material things, when such a spiritual feast is afforded in the word of God? We shall take up the different points and doctrines of the Bible hereafter in separate articles, but now we shall confine our brief remarks to the Bible as a whole. The Bible, we contend, is a revelation of the will of God to men; and the first point that deserves our notice, then, is the fact of the possibility of a revelation; and without stating the thousand sayings of theologians on this point, we will merely suggest a few common sense remarks.

In the first place, a Revelation from God, is possible, because all things are possible with God; then as all things are possible within the range of Deity, it needs only the will of the Almighty in order to give a Revelation of his perfection and attributes to his rational creatures; and, as he is a being of Almighty power and omniscience, he cannot be at loss for means to communicate his will, and do it in such a way and manner as will sufficiently mark it as his own.

In the second place, we notice the desirableness of a Revelation. It is desirable from the fact that it is the only certainty that lies within our grasp; and more, it is the only thing yet found capable of giving us proper discoveries of God, his attributes and nature—the way of salvation, and multitudes of other things that are of importance to the interests of men.

In the third place, a Revelation from God is necessary, for, without this, man would ever live in a state of doubt and anxiety; and could attain to no certain knowledge of the events that follow his mortal career; neither could we get any correct idea of the glories that attend the redeeming power of the cross. We might extend our remarks greatly by giving some of the evidences in favor of Revelation, but we have said enough already, having shown briefly,—

1. That a Revelation is possible.
2. That it is desirable.
3. That such a Revelation was necessary to the interests and hopes of men.

Now, we think the above three points of themselves setting aside the evidences of Christianity, are sufficient to induce men to make careful perusal of the word of God. The things that are both desirable and necessary, God cannot withhold from his creatures. We say cannot, for he has declared in his word, that "no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly," and do according to his will.

In a future article, we shall adduce some of the evidences of Christianity, but suffice it now, that we receive the Bible, as it is—the word of God. If we look to any other source than this, our hopes will be blasted forever, and we doomed to disappointment and despair. If we turn to the church, behold her apostate professors. If we turn to theologians, behold their varied and visionary speculations. If we turn to our own hearts—they are deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." It remains then, as the only source of consolation and ground of hope for living mortals, that we turn to divine Revelation, and, as we scan its sacred pages, let us implore the divine spirit to illuminate our hearts, and give us a right understanding of the sacred oracles, so that in reading we may be enabled to understand what the spirit saith, and also to prepare for the great, glorious, and sublime events that are about to dawn on the world.

We live in perilous times. The son of perdition longs for victory, and the evidence on alls sides, tell us we live in the last days, and ere long we shall hear the trumpet sound, as it awakes the sleeping nations of the dead. O Lord, give us a part in the first resurrection, for "on such the second death hath no power," and prepare us for thy coming and kingdom. "The night cometh in which no man can work," and the voice even now sounds in our ears, "be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

[We rejoice with our Bro. Dann, who is just entering the ministry, that he has seen the light on the great truth of the premillennial Advent of our Savior, and the still more blessed part of the belief, which is, that our longing eyes will soon, yes, VERY SOON "behold the King in his beauty." My Bro., let your light shine, and the good Lord will bless you.—ED.

Letter from Bro. W. Pratt.

NEW ENGLAND MISSION TENT.

As our friends East contributed freely for this tent, and sent it into the Western field in good faith, they may think it is about time to hear from it. And I suppose they have a perfect right to demand some knowledge in reference to it. Well, as it falls on Jonah's lot to give a few items, I cheerfully pen what little I can in truth, in hopes it will cheer some.

I believe I have not pledged myself to hold any number of tent meetings or conferences this season. I only intend to do what I can, and if works do not witness for me, I do not intend to give you a paper revival. I have seen so much printed relative to travels, revivals and conferences, which put the substance on the paper, that I have often thought I would say nothing. A brief sketch is due, however.

As Bro. Morgan has engaged to supply the desk in this place for the present, it fell to my lot to take the tent. My health not being firm, I have not done much. I have held three meetings, perhaps to some profit.

The tent and conference meeting at Shabbona Grove was held according to appointment. We were much disappointed in the tent not getting there in time, but the Lord gave us good wine at the last of the feast.

The friends were very kind and took much interest in the meeting; and for one I can say it was a profitable meeting. It will tell no doubt at a future day. As there will be a report, I need not say much. It was cheering to meet friends from the surrounding region in our temporary house, Jacob-like, and sing Zion's songs—mingle our prayers and hear the word of the Lord. Here I met Bro. Curtis from Old Connecticut—Hartford City. I was very glad to greet him. Had a pleasant interview—was reminded of former days. He thought I looked quite natural, holding tent meetings; it called to mind past meetings, and seemed New England-like. Some covenanted to go to the kingdom. We parted in tears and started for the meeting in Elizabeth, Jo Daviess county.

After traveling all night behind the iron horse, I reached Galena and procured a team, and about one o'clock I arrived at the house of my old friend, Bro. Pilcher in Elizabeth.

We erected our humble tabernacle, and on Thursday, we commenced our meeting. Bro. M. Chandler came on Friday. Had three discourses each day. Meeting closed Sunday evening. After the notice got out, the congregation was quite good, especially evenings and Sunday. A notice of the withdrawal of the appointment no doubt was the cause for not having more at the commencement.

The meeting removed much prejudice, besides quickening, comforting and strengthening the brethren. Here some started for the kingdom. The Lord be praised.

Bro. Chandler and myself were not in a very good trim to preach. He was suffering from a bad cold, and I was hoarse and quite feeble, not having yet recovered fully from sickness. Well, we got through by the blessing of God, and the result will be known in the judgment.

One circumstance connected with this meeting, I ought to mention. There was a preacher in the place whose name and acts seemed to be in keeping with a certain class Paul speaks of, Acts 20; 29, to some extent, to say the least. I was informed, he said, we had been preaching lies for fifteen years. I gave public notice the stand could be occupied half of the time, by any one in the place who wished to show us our errors, or point out our "lies" as they were called. But no one appeared to show the error, hence we continued to preach the word. May it find lodgment in the hearts of the people! This meeting was well sustained. The Lord reward the tried and liberal friends.

At Princeton, Iowa, we commenced a meeting, June 19, and held it over the following Sunday. Here let me say, before the meeting, we overhauled the tent, as it was not in shape for a preaching tent. In this work I began to sympathize with Paul, more fully than ever before. For the first time I went to tent-making. Doubt whether it will be the last. Well, if the Lord willing, we will have a tent after a little time in which we can publish the tidings of the coming kingdom.

The weather being extremely warm, made it very oppressive and destroyed much interest no doubt in the meetings. But this meeting will be reported, hence I need not do it.

The thermometer is ranging from 85 to 100° above zero. I shall have to wait a while, till the weather is cooler to hold meetings to much profit.

To make our large meetings profitable, tracts ought to be scattered by the hundreds gratuitously. But I have not the means to do it. I have tracts as well as books, as you will see by another notice, yet I have not the means to scatter them as I could wish. Brethren East must recollect that brethren West are few, and scattered over a large territory, and can do but little comparatively in breaking up the wide western field. Some are doing what they can, others do something to spread light. Tracts are like so many sermons preaching always, and if they are of the right stamp will take care of themselves. If friends East want a little stock in the great Savings Bank, and would contribute so that we can have a tract fund, I will assure them the money shall all be throw light on the great truths God designed for this age. Some brethren here have pledged five dollars, others no doubt will do the same, or more, to forward this God-honoring work. I do not speak of this because I want to be the distributer, No! no! All I want is to have truth spread—light given—knowledge of the end known. I care not whom God sends to preach or spread it. But go it must either by our effort or by some one else. God will have the way prepared for the coming kingdom, and if we refuse to act, we suffer loss, and God in his providence takes some one else. May God speed the truth in this uncultivated field.

Moline, Ill. W. Pratt.

P. S. Funds can be put into Bro. H. L. Hastings hands.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me to inform the friends in the West, that I have received a quantity of books and tracts, and can fill orders at short notice. I will give a list of the works I have received.

Books.—Voice of the Church on the Reign of Christ, by D. T. Taylor, Price $1.00
Dobney on Future Punishment, .75
Pauline Theology, .75
Church Debts, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D., .75
Treaties on Matt. 24th and 25th Chaps., by I. C. Welcome, .33
The world as it was, is, and will be, by Mrs. A. C. Judson, .38
Bible vs. Tradition, paper covers, .60
Unity of Man, by Anthropos, .15
Age of Gospel Light, by Z. Campbell, .12
Spiritualism, a Satanic Delusion and a sign of the times by Wm. Ramsey, D. D., 38cts, bound, .50
Old Paths, by H. L. Hastings, .18

Tracts.—Voice of warning from the four winds—Church not in darkness—Three Worlds—Last days—New Heaven and Earth—Milton on the State of the Dead—Tracts by Dr. J. Cumming—Noah, His and our age, No. 1.—The desire of all nations, No. 2.—It is done, No. 3. The above tracts are $3. per hundred, 5 cts single.

Also, Tracts entitled—Vindication—Landmarks—True source of Life—Key of truth—Night cometh, and others.

Also, Scripture Searchers, No. 1, 2. 3.

The above works can be had at the published Eastern prices. All I want is to cover the first cost. If I get the money back I have to pay out, it is all I expect or want. But I wish the truth spread in this wide field. I am anxious to have the people see truth, and then if they reject, our skirts are clear—our work done, and they decide to their own peril. Truth must go, and God's children are the carriers of it in most instances. Who will engage in the work? If you cannot preach you can lend books, scatter tracts, and sow the seed in this way. Let us keep the seed flying—the Lord cause it to grow.

Send orders with cash, to Walter Pratt, Moline, Illinois.

Letter from T. E. W.

Bro. Grant:—I have thought that it might be cheering, and perhaps profitable to hear from the Brn. and Srs. in every place where there are any faithful followers of Christ; who are looking for the appearing of the Son of God, according to his word. There is a goodly number in this place, who are looking for the fulfillment of His word, and desiring to behold in all of His glory, Him whom our souls love. They are well united in love and good will, and many of them are fully persuaded to see the consummation of the Christian's Hope, even at the loss of all things temporal. They are happily agreed to disagree upon all points of Scripture of doubtful interpretation; whereas on the fundamental principles of the Gospel they are united, and striving to maintain them in their daily walk and conversation, before a scoffing, wicked world. These, I believe, are times of peril to the Christian, from the fact that multitudes have a desire for the riches of this world, and are striving with all their hearts to obtain them, forgetting the new riches of the kingdom; and the Christian, if he is not watchful, will drink into the same spirit. Perilous, because sin and wickedness of every hue is stalking abroad through the world. The strong current of pride, desire of honor, the love of and excess in dress, (contrary to scripture), the spirit of war, and political strife, even among professors of religion; the great amount of church lotteries, church fairs, church pic-nics, &c., the spreading of Spiritualism to a fearful extent, the indifference and luke-warmness of the church at large,—these are signs that we need not mistake, showing these are times of peril indeed. Many are virtually saying by their works,—"my Lord delayeth his coming;" of those, I would ask—think you that the Lord has been in the movement, proclaiming His coming for the last few years? And if so, do you think He commenced the work many years too soon? Think you the God of Israel will not carry it on to its glorious and final and conclusion? and that in his own way time? whether men believe yea or nay? or whether believers depart from the faith or not? What think you? Are most of the signs of the Lord's soon coming in the past or not?

Thank the Lord, some are striving to hold on to the end, and some are being added to the number of such as shall be saved. In this place there are some waiting an opportunity to express by baptism, their faith in the resurrection of the dead, and show their willingness to yield obedience to the commands of the Lord. We are glad the Lord has some faithful servants who proclaim the word of life in its simplicity, and with the power of the spirit. May the good Lord carry on his glorious work to the end,—save all that can be saved according to his own plan, and soon come and redeem his waiting church to praise his worthy name eternally. Amen.

Portsmouth, N. H., July 5, '56.

A noble mind, weighed down and obscured by suffering, may be likened to one of the plain wooden clocks of our forefather's days. A glance at the outside discloses nothing brilliant or beautiful; nothing strikes the eye but the dark heavy weights which give it motion. But for usefulness these are the best of clocks."

Obituary.

Died in Shipton, C. E. June 10th, 1856, of lingering consumption, Lydia Bangs, wife of Bro. Bangs, aged 41 years.

Like the Lydia of Paul's day, the Lord opened her heart to the preaching of Bro. Edwin Burnham, when the light of the knowledge of the gospel of God's everlasting kingdom was first published in Shipton. She understandingly embraced the whole truth as far as it has been presented in this place; namely, the Lord at hand, this dispensation when closed to be succeded by the personal reign of the righteous heir to David's throne and Kingdom, when He shall come in His glory to build up Zion, beautify the land, make it like Eden,—the garden of the Lord, and restore Paradise, when the penitent thief with the millions of God's redeemed shall have access to the tree of Life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God. We here firmly believe Sr. Bangs will have a part in the glorious kingdom. She was intelligent, strong in faith, and not easily moved away from the truth, when once embraced. As the light of Revelation increased upon her mental vision, she renounced the fabled phantom of "dying and going to heaven." She loved life, and regarded death as an enemy. She sleeps in Jesus, and waits the day when this last of foes shall fall. The deadly influence of death on his approach to the vitals of his victims, is generally felt, when the physical or mental powers by sinking or becoming deranged, announce the stealthy advance of the subtle enemy, but not so in her case; the tidings and the stroke came together, and the shortened breath and last few minutes were spent in exhorting the weeping family to "make sure of the recompense of reward, "and with a voice now sunk in death, she bid them "Farewell."

Sister Bangs being the daughter of one of the first settlers in Shipton, who is still alive, herself and husband in respectable standing in the community, there was, it is said, the largest concourse of people in attendance at her funeral ever witnessed in this place; who listened with attention to a discourse from Hosea 13: 14, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death." Domestic Summary.

Dreadful Railroad Accident—56 Killed.—In a brief telegraphic despatch from Philadelphia, published in the Traveller yesterday, it was stated that a serious accident occurred yesterday morning, upon the Northern Pennsylvania Railroad, near Fort Washington.

The following additional particulars have been received:

Eight hundred persons were on the train.

Six cars were entirely demolished.

Among the killed is Father Sheridan, of St. Michael's Catholic Church.

The excursion train contained 1100 children with their parents and teachers.

They came in collision with a down train on the curve near Fort Washington, while the latter train was going slowly, and the former rapidly, endeavoring to reach the stopping place in season.

Both locomotives were crushed, and three of the cars of the excursion train rushing together, caught fire and were consumed.

Beneath their ruins were a number, crushed so that extrication was impossible.

The scene was of the most heart-rending and terrible description.

The total killed is 56, and wounded 78.

The scene of the accident is 14 miles from this city, in the neighborhood of two curves, so that approaching trains cannot be seen 500 yards, and the track is a single one.

When the locomotives came together they rose on an end, their fire-boxes nearly touching one another, and fell over across the road.

The fire being scattered about the wreck of the first excursion car, it caught fire, and extended to the two other cars piled upon it.

Most extraordinary efforts were made to extricate the mutilated beings crushed amid the wreck, many of whom were still alive when the flames reached them.

The groans and cries that filled the air were awful.

Two hotels, one dwelling, a blacksmith shop, and a small shed, within three hundred yards of the disaster, were used to shelter the dying and wounded.

A number of physicians from this city, and from Germantown, were early in attendance.

Two engines from Chestnut Hill forced water through hose to the wreck, and, after working for several hours, the human remains beneath it were removed.

Nineteen bodies were removed to the blacksmith's shop, three of them supposed to be females.

Under another shed were eight bodies, so charred as to defy recognition.

Many of the friends of the dead and wounded walked from the city, and others proceeded thither in every description of vehicle, which were taken and made use of in bringing the wounded and dead into the city.

Wm. Van Staven, the conductor of the down train, has committed suicide by taking arsenic.

Wm. Lee, the engineer of the same train, has been arrested and committed for examination.

The train this evening brought down four bodies burned to a crisp. These were those of John Dillon, two brothers named Royce, and one unknown.

All the human remains were gathered up and brought to the city. Twenty-seven bodies have not been recognized, and they are so badly burned it is feared they can never be.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the America.

Halifax, July 15.

The royal mail steamship Niagara, from Liverpool about 11 A. M., on Saturday 5th inst., arrived here shortly after 7 this evening, en route for Boston, bringing 99 passengers for the latter port.

FRANCE.

Reports have been some time current, that unpleasantness existed between the courts of France and Russia, and that Count Mornay's departure for St. Petersburg was delayed in consequence. As Mornay is about ready to embark, the difference is probably arranged.

The report of the Committee of the Corps Legislatif, refusing to accord to the Emperor the power of granting pensions, is published. It is respectful but firm, and is considered the severest check Napoleon has yet met from his government.

The projected meeting between the Emperors of France and Austria is confirmed. The Frankfort Journal says positively the meeting will take place at Maunbiern, about the last of July. Napoleon will reside at the Ducal Palace, and the Emperor of Austria at the Hotel de Europe. The Kings of Wurtemburg and Saxony, and the Dukes of Hesse Baden and Nassau, will also assist. Another account says they will meet at the castle of Abremberg.

A monk, whose name is Spenser, and who is a member of a noble family in England, is making a pilgrimage through Hungary with the permission of the Pope, his object being to establish praying societies, whose special task it will be to pray in chapels that the English nation may be converted and return into the bosom of the true church.

A Prelate in Danger.—A letter from Genoa states that the Vicar of Rome, Monsignore Patrizis, on his transit from the "Eternal City Vecchia, only escaped from falling into the clutches of Lazzarini by that celebrated brigand's arriving too late at the point where his ambuscade was to be planted. But for this contretemps, his band was sufficiently numerous to have overpowered the guards of the Legate. Lazzarini had promised his wife the consecrated golden rose, destined for the Empress of the French, for herself and the reliquary, with the straw from the cradle of Bethlehem, to hang on the neck of their child.

ITALY.

Private letters from Milan of the 21st mention that a movement on a large scale, indeed on the whole line of the Italian Peninsula, is in course of preparation. This movement is attributed to Mazzinian agency, in order to anticipate another movement of a more constitutional character. The Mazzinian party fear, no doubt, that Italy will be taken out of their hands, if the moderate leaders, who look up to Sardinia for the liberation of their country, act before them; and they seem determined to strike a blow at once in their usual fashion. Copies of incendiary proclamations, exciting to pillage and assassination, are circulated throughout Italy.

Affairs in Parma are becoming worse, and an insurrection is feared.

The clerical journals of Turin say that France has addressed a note to Sardinia, counselling moderation on the Italian question.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Springs and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough, and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be had of the proprietor, [illegible]

Poetry.

Bro. Grant:—A scrap of paper met my eyes and I felt that it was so good, that I would send it to you, and if you feel that it is worth a place in your paper, please insert it: J. H. C.

"A Wreath of Flowers and a Crown of Thorns."

"They platted a crown of thorns and put it about His head."—Mark. "Let us go forth to Him without the camp, bearing his reproach."—Paul.

"I will that women adorn themselves in modest apparel with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness,) with good works."

"What do I see? a wreath of flowers
Entwined around a Christian's brow!
No one should let their ransomed powers
Before the shrine of pleasure bow.
Let pretty flowers,
In nature's bowers,
Blossom and bud we know not how.

It cannot be a tinsel wreath
Becomes a lonely "pilgrim" here;
The hair that flows so fair beneath
Does much more beautiful appear;
God gave it thee
Then let it be
An ornament accounted dear.

We know a crown of piercing thorns
Was placed on thy Redeemer's brow;
And does a fancy wreath adorn
Thy head in imitation now?
Can it be so?
Are all to know
That you such vanities allow?

There is a day, an awful day,
That comes along with quickened pace,
When "all the proud" (the Scriptures say,)
"Will fall before the Judge's face;"
Though honored here,
They will appear,
To be the subjects of disgrace.

No wreath of flowers no sparkling gems,
No costly robes will then avail;
Nothing secures life's diadem,
Nor saves one from the sinner's wail,
But to possess
Christ's righteousness,
And have our hope within the veil

Then, sister, seek a spirit meek,
Let that thy chief adorning be,
And when the King of glory comes
He will not be ashamed of thee.
Enrobed in white,
In realms of light
Thou wilt the King eternal see."

From the Tennessee Baptist.

Twilight.

BY H. L. H.

Sweet is the twilight's holy hour,
Full of soothing peace and power;
How our spirits sink to rest
'Neath the beams that gild the west.

Now with humble hearts we come
To the Savior's gracious Throne;
Now as earthly cares recede,
We the Savior's promise plead.

Bowing low before Thy face
Lord we seek forgiving grace.
Pardoning mercy full, and free,
Lord we humbly ask of Thee

Blessings now from heaven we call,
On our friends, our kindred, all,
Blessings on each exiled one
Who a pilgrim here doth roam.

Now let care from us depart—
Purify and soothe each heart;
Make us in thy favor blest,
Thus in peace we sink to rest.

When another day shall rise,
Hail we it with joyful eyes,
Run with constant zeal our race,
Filled with love sustained by grace.

When our days and nights are done—
When time sinks like sinking sun,
Grant that in thy hallowed rest
We forever may be blest.

There may we forever dwell,
And in songs our raptures tell—
There may each receive a crown,
And our sun no more go down.

Peace Dale, R. I., Feb. 1856.

Bible Chronology.

BY R. PORTER.

Bro. Grant:—I have for a long time been desirous of communicating to the brethren, what appears to me to be scripture light, on the subject of Chronology; but I have been hitherto prevented by circumstances which I need not at present explain. Of one thing I am certain; that the Bible gives us a clear and definite chronology from the creation to the close of the Babylonish captivity, which was precisely 3700 years, thus leaving the prophetic period of 2300 years, to make the even number of 6000. And I do feel authorized to believe that the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, marked the termination of the 70 years of captivity, profane history to the contrary notwithstanding. I admit, we have plain intimation in the Bible, and nearly positive evidence of this —and why should we allow uncertain profane history to contradict even the intimations of the Bible? But I will proceed to present the true chronology down to that point, and then the reasons for my position.

Babylonish captivity,	70

To this sum add the foregoing 3188, and we have the complete number 3700, which, with the prophetic 2300, makes 6000.

With regard to the interregnum; Amaziah reigned 29 years, and then fled to Lachish, 2 Kings 14: 1, 19. In the 15th year of his reign, Jeroboam, king of Israel began, (2 Kings 14: 23,) and in the 27th year of Jeroboam, commenced the reign of Azariah, who was successor to Amaziah. 2 Kings: 15: 1. The 15 and 27 are 42, but as they were not full years, we must subtract the 29 years of Amaziah from 41, which shows an interregnum of 12 years, while he was at Lachish. This is the only interregnum that ever occurred during the kingdom of Judah.

The commencement of the indignation mentioned Zech. 1: 12, was when the king of Egypt captured Jehoahaz, and placed Jehoiakim in his stead, 22 or 23 years prior to the destruction of the temple. Three years later, Nebuchadnezzar, in his first year, came up against Jehoiakim, overcame him and carried away captives, among whom was Daniel, being one of the princes, Dan. 1: 1–3: and in the 11th year of Jehoiakim, he also was carried to Babylon, 2 Chron. 36: 6, and was succeeded by Jehoiachin, who reigned three months, and was carried to Babylon, 2 Kings 24: 15, in the 8th year of Nebuchadnezzar. Zedekiah succeeded and reigned 11 years, and was carried to Babylon; and in the 5th month the city and temple were destroyed, 19th year of Nebuchadnezzar; 2 Kings: 24: 18. 25: 8.

In the 37th year of Jehoiachin's captivity, (26th year of the general captivity) Nebuchadnezzar had been succeeded by Evil-merodach. 2 Kings 25; 27. Now if we allow five full years for the reigns of Evil-merodach and Belshazzar, (circumstances would not authorize more) and two years to Darius the Mede, the first year of Cyrus would be the 33d of the captivity. Then allow Cyrus 6 1-2 years, Ahasuerus (or Cambyses) 3, Artaxerxes 4, Darius 6, and Artaxexres, 19 1-2, (the fourth king mentioned Dan. 11: 2,) and the time comes out right.

Now for the argument.

1. Gabriel was commanded to make Daniel understand the vision,—time included; and we believe he obeyed. But if Daniel did not understand that the commandment was to go forth at the end of 70 years, he could not know but that it might be 500 or 1000 years subsequent; nor could he know anything about the lapse of time to the Messiah.

2. Daniel went into captivity 18 years before the city and temple were destroyed, and must have been about 18 years old; and would therefore have been 106 years old at the termination of the 70. But from the circumstance that he was appointed to the highest and most responsible office under Darius, Dan. 6: 3, sufficiently proves that he was not older than 70 at that time.

3. Several of the people who were mentioned by Jeremiah, and who may well be supposed to have been 30 or 40 years old at the beginning of the captivity, were also mentioned by Ezra and Nehemiah, as among those who went up from Babylon in the time of Cyrus, of whom are Jeremiah, Baruch and Pashur; and many others are mentioned, Neh. 7: 6, as having been among those who were carried into captivity, and were present at Jerusalem in the time of Nehemiah, and who, according to the chronology of historians, must have been at least 150 years old. Even Daniel is mentioned among the returned captives—and it is not probable that he would have died in a foreign land—who according to the old popular chronology, must have been 190 years old.

The threat, Jer. 25: 12, to punish the king of Babylon, could not have referred to any particular king or dynasty, but to the city and nation. The city was abandoned by the kings, and began to decay during the Medo-Persian dynasty.

Therefore the fact stands well supported that the Bible has furnished a plain chronology from the "beginning" to the "end." For we are repeatedly informed, typically, that the Messiah would sojourn forty years on the earth, (i. e., from the visitation) and prophetically, that he would be cut off at the end of 4184 years from the creation, and that 1816 years thereafter, the "SANCTUARY WILL BE CLEANSED."

To me this appears to be substantial and reliable evidence that the long looked for last year of this world is now passing away; that we shall very soon see the reality of our aspiri g anticipations. Let all the wise virgins keep awake,—there is no time for sleeping; that when the bridegroom comes, they may be found ready.

Washington, D. C., July 3, '56.

"We are Journeying."

BY JOHN LYLE.

Bro. Grant:—I have been thinking about the way in which I trust the Lord has led us. It has been a way which we knew not beforehand, but has been opened up gradually, as we have gone forward, revealing more and more of that light that shines unto the perfect day, so that with reference to many places on our pathway, we may look back and exclaim—"Surely the Lord was in this place, and we knew it not."

I desire to notice briefly three things which are deeply interesting to all who have believed in "definite time."

1. Our arrangement of the 1260 and 1335 days.
2. Our past mistakes.
3. Our discoveries.

THE ARRANGEMENT.

The following are some of the most prominent points:

1st. "The time, times, and a half," "1260 days," and "Forty-two months," in the Bible, refer to one and the same matter of prophetic history.

2nd. That period embraces the "Time of Tribulation" which Jesus foretold in Matt. 24, Mark 13, and Luke 21.

3d. "The Abomination of Desolation," spoken of by Daniel the prophet and Jesus the Lord, refers to the Papacy in its union with Imperial power to tread down the church of Christ for the space of 1260 years.

4th. This Union was effected at a point of time somewhere in the reign of Justin of the Eastern Roman empire, and was maintained by successive Imperial powers in Europe, until a point of time somewhere in the reign of Joseph II of Austria.

5th. From the point where the 1260 ended, began the "Time of the End," a period of 75 years, which added to the 1260, completes the 1335 days of Dan. 12, and brings the Resurrection.

II. OUR MISTAKES.

We supposed 519 A. D. was the year when the Papal and civil union was effected, from which we were to reckon the 1260 and 1335 years. Now we know better, time and history both have corrected us.

2nd. We supposed the dark day of May 19, 1780, was given for a chronological mark to show the precise point of termination of the 1260 years. Now we have a better understanding of the matter.

3rd. Many of us have held mistaken views on other points, more or less connected with the above arrangement, but they have no special bearing on the beginning or ending of the 1260 days.

III. DISCOVERIES.

I think we may now see very clearly that although a movement was made in 519 A. D., to effect the nationalization of the Roman Catholic church; the very nature of the case occupied a great deal of time before it was completed. One of the articles of union required that all the bishops of the East should sign the articles which the Pope sent by the Legates to the Emperor; this was not effected without a great struggle on the part of those bishops. Entreaties, threats, and displays of force were necessary on the part of the emperor to accomplish the work, so that many months (from 519 to 521) elapsed before the union was accomplished according to the letter and spirit of the Pope's articles.

The argument of Bro, Decker, contained in his pamphlet on the 12th, 13th, and 17th chapters of Rev. is worthy of the most diligent attention.

If we reckon the 1260 years from 521 A. D., we are brought down to the very time Joseph II, by an imperial edict disannulled all connection with Papal authority in 1781.

That the darkening of the sun must occur before the chronological period of termination is reached, is evident from the testimony of Mark 13: 24.

It is but reasonable to look upon the imperial edict of Joseph of Austria as the terminus of this prophetic number, inasmuch as it began by an imperial edict.

The signs in the Sun, Moon and Stars have no more to do with marking a chronological period than the budding of a fig tree has to do with making the figures of the Almanac. Its budding leaves confirm the correct Calendar, so do the celestial signs confirm the sure word of prophecy by assuring us that the Lord is now even at the door.

Bro. Decker, has attempted to harmonize the 2300 days with his argument on the 1335 days, and some who have heard him think the reasoning cannot be successfully gainsayed.

From A. D. 521 we are brought down through 1335 successive years to A. D. 1856, and here we are; the summer is upon us, and if there is anything in the types of the Law that shadows forth the time when our great High Priest shall appear the second time without a sin offering unto his waiting people; we must look to the coming Fall for the fulfillment of the seventh month type. To this interesting point the waiting people of Christ have come up once and again, and yet the type of the tenth day of the seventh month remains unfulfilled. Will they come up to it once more and reach the prize? How applicable are the words of Mark 13: 33–37. How solemn are these moments! How great the dangers! How carelessly secure the doomed world! O, my brethren, shall we escape those things that are coming on the earth and stand justified before the Son of man? I pray that we may. Pray for me, that I may hail you with all the ransomed of the Lord in his everlasting kingdom.

For the Crisis.

Letter from A. Bassett.

Bro. Grant:—I am thankful to you for back numbers, which I have just received through the office. I am glad to have the Crisis again, although I have been deprived of its precious reading for a long time past, yet it comes again filled with precious treasures from all sources. I have been deprived of Advent meetings since you and Bro. Pratt labored in Northampton.

I hope that the Crisis will still continue to come to me, and let every one, who is able to give, give. The Crisis is much prized here, and is read by three different families besides ours.

May we all be ready and waiting when the Lord comes. A. Bassett.

Letter from S. G. H.

Bro. Grant:—I do feel to praise the Lord for what he is doing for us in Bristol. Since you left us, the Lord has been hearing and blessing us. I have been out to meeting this evening, and the good spirit was there, and the resolutions were to be filled with it. O how it cheers my heart to have the spirit run, and feel that God is glorified. Your admonition was good for me, and I am striving to profit by it; that is, to bridle my tongue; we read in the good book, that if a man offend not in word, "the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body."

I mean to have love for the ruling principle of my life, for without it we are as "sounding brass, and a tinkling cymbal." I think my hope never looked so bright as at the present time; every thing is preaching to me the Lord is coming, the day hasteth. We are in a day of trouble and distress, "a day of wasteness and desolation," "a day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness." The Lord says, "Therefore shall the land mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein shall languish with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven;" we see all these things before our eyes. What manner of persons ought we to be in all our conversation; because it is written, "be ye holy, for I am holy."

Letter from J. L. Bassett.

Bro. Grant:—There is a little company in Bridgeport, who are hoping for better days, and are striving to live above this ungodly world. We often think of the little churches abroad as being a part of our family; if we hear that they have trials, it pains us; if they are glad and joyful it makes us so. When any of you pray, pray for Bridgeport, that good may come this way, and these drooping children may be revived. We have good preaching, and some praying ones who have strong faith and warm hearts. We see light ahead. Central Europe, (as I look at it,) is about to unfold the prophecies. The German Empire has a last phase to develop. Be of good courage, children, don't get impatient. The Lord sees that your hearts are pained. Pray much—fight for the kingdom—now see how courageous you can be a little longer —how much you can deny self and attend to prayer. Put a bridle on to Satan's masterpiece, the tongue—so shall sweet peace dwell in your hearts, and glory light up your countenance. A better day is coming. O that blessed new earth! Keep it in mind.

Your Bro. in tribulation,

John L. Bassett.

Be Kind to each Other.

"Be kind to each other,
The night's coming on,
When friend and when brother
Perchance may be gone."

"Go away, Willie; I do hate to be teazed when I am reading," said Annie M—— to her little brother, who was begging her to get him a drink of water.

"But, Annie, I cannot get it myself, and I am so hot and thirsty; please do."

"I tell you I don't want to go down stairs now; can't you wait for Bridget? she will be home soon."

"O, why can't you get me some water?" cried the poor child impatiently, and bursting into tears, he threw himself sobbing on the floor.

"I won't get you a drink now, because you are cross, and cry for it," said his sister; and she tried to believe she was behaving very properly, in punishing her little brother for his fretfulness.

Annie went on reading her book, and soon forgot all about little Willie, who, after crying bitterly for awhile, fell into a troubled sleep.

His face was flushed, and the breath came quick and hot from his parched lips.

The children had been left at home for a day with the nurse, while the mother visited a friend in the neighborhood. Annie was ten years old, and Willie was nearly five. She was quite old enough to take charge of her little brother, and amuse him; and this she was generally quite glad to do, for Willie was a merry, happy child, and loved his sister dearly. They almost always were good-natured and happy; but sometimes Willie was fretful, and sometimes Annie was selfish, and did not like to take trouble; and when she was cross, Willie was ten times worse than if she had been good-natured.

After a long time Bridget returned from her errand, and found Willie still lying on the floor asleep. She took him up and laid him on his bed in the nursery. When Mrs. M—— came home, she found her little boy in a high fever; he could not be roused up, but lay in a heavy stupor. He was immediately put to bed, and everything done for him that was thought likely to relieve him. In the morning he was no better, and a physician was sent for, who pronounced him in a dangerous condition. He had all the symptoms of scarlet fever, and was quite delirious.

Annie stood by, anxiously watching to hear the doctor's opinion; and when he told her mother that the child was very ill, and would need the most careful attention, she could not help sobbing aloud. The doctor told her not to be frightened, for he hoped her brother would be well. Annie did not cease crying at these comforting words; for she could not forgive herself for her unkindness to her brother. O, how her heart ached when she thought of her cruel neglect, and how many times she said to herself she would never be so unkind again.

For two days Willie lay in a state of great suffering; he did not seem to know any one; even his mother, whom he loved so dearly, called him in vain. He never spoke again, and on the morning of the third day he died.

No one knew, when Annie threw herself with a wild despairing cry, on the bed beside her dead brother, how hopeless and bitter was the sorrow of her heart; for she knew that never again in this world could she atone for her cruel words,—those last words that Willie had ever heard,—so cold, so selfish and cruel. O! that was indeed the bitterness of death. If he had only lived to speak to her, to tell her he forgave her unkindness—to give one kiss of recollection and love, she thought it would not have been half so hard to see him go down to the cold grave. But now all was over. The little brother she had loved so well was gone for ever. All his pleasant ways and loving words came thronging back to her heart, and she could only remember her own selfish cruelty to him when he was sick and suffering. She tried to comfort herself by saying, "O, if I had only known he was sick! If I had thought to look at him, I might have seen he was not well, and then I am sure I would have done everything for him. O how thoughtless, how cruel I was!"

After the funeral, when they had returned home, and Annie sat by her mother in the still evening, she told her, with many tears and sobs, how unkind she had been to her little brother on the first day of his sickness, and how dreadful it was to know that she could never ask his forgiveness, never hear his sweet voice to tell her he loved her again.

After this confession, Annie felt more composed and resigned than she had before; but she never could quite forget, and never ceased to regret the last harsh words her darling brother had ever heard from her lips. It was a lesson to be remembered for ever, and its influence was felt by her through all her life. When she felt tempted to speak unkindly, the thought that "these might be our last words," would come with a pang to her heart, and she was humble and gentle as a lamb.

Years passed by, and Annie grew to be a woman, loving and beloved by all, but in her heart never forgave herself for her last words to Willie.—Friend of Youth.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Quiet Religion.

BY C. A. SUMNER.

I confess I am ofttimes severely vexed by the whining remark,—"I believe in a quiet religion; I have no sympathy with those fanatical people, who, discontented with the good old orthodox doctrine, seek and declare new ideas about matters of christian faith."

Such a remark is the substance of a daily answer (?) I have to the Scripture truths I would urge.

I wish most earnestly to speak quietly, (in the right sense) but I must say that I believe that nothing but sharp fire from heaven, will ever get such persons into a receptive state for the truth. What can you expect, or hope of a man, who sits quietly before his Bible with his eyes shut, and thinks of what his nurse told him years ago, concerning hell and its inhabitants; repeats two or three strong texts, which would kill him, if he would investigate and grasp their real meaning; and softly concludes that he is satisfied in his mind? What does such a man know of a proper independence of thought? Does he know anything about it? If so, what?

Satisfied, after such a process of study and reasoning? Is God satisfied, think you, with the depth of such a man's convictions!

Give him a Scripture that flatly says "lie" to his views, he hears not; tell him he is mistaken, his nurse did not say thus and so. Ah! now he listens.

My Lord! is this man with a judgment! and man going to judgment?

Now understand me; I am not contending for a noisy religion, a religion which manifests itself in howlings. I think the wicked, the unrepenting wicked, are the only persons who should properly engage in such things. I do not run to every new interpretation, and embrace it, and rejoice in it merely because it is new; not at all. We are constantly represented in that light, but nothing could be more erroneous.

My friend, come here. What do you read the Bible for? To gain knowledge of spiritual matters?

"Yes."

Very well; when you gain spiritual knowledge, you find no difference, in one respect, between it and other, or secular knowledge. You are put in possession of something you did not have before.

"So plain, that it is absurd for you to repeat it."

Glad to hear you say that; only stick to it. Now then, what form does your acquired property take? In the end, it is opinion, is it not? belief?

"Of course."

Supposing that after much reading and reflection, you should find yourself on a strong iron tower of doctrine, lifting you far up and showing you more at a glance, of God's goodness and mercy, in this and another earth, than you had ever dreamed of upon the old eminences of faith; and elated and glowing with the new sight and conception, you were about to cry, Hallelujah, praise the Lord! when your eye met the stern look of one of the modern church Fathers, and your ear caught these words,—"Come down, come down; you are in an awful situation,—our sect never mounts that height; if you stay there, you are sure to topple into skepticism, infidelity, and hell. Come down!" You would come down, of course.

"No! I would not."

You would not wait till you were called "fanatic," and "fool,"—that would bring you down.

"No! it would not."

How? then wait till you are made an outcast from the "church, and all men say that you are given to wild delusion; till all heap contumely and scorn upon you, then you descend and take your prospect from the top of diminutive wooden buildings.

"No, never. I would not do so."

You would not? Give me your hand. I know of what I speak. By God's blessing, if you will, I will show you where you can find and mount a tower of doctrine built by God, and constantly made known by his early apostles. But if you go up, remember, it will be said that you are not satisfied with a quiet religion.

Where is true peace? In easy indifference to anything that purports to be a revelation,—if that revelation conflict with already accepted dogmas?

Oh, no, no. It cannot be. That is the stream of quiet religion which ever flows on, and gains new floods each day. The standing water is no stream. You may say it is quiet, but I may add, "it is stagnant.

Was you ever in a crowd, and did you ever hear ten men yell "quiet" to one poor fellow, who had no idea of making an unlawful disturbance, only wishing to correct an assertion of the loud-mouthed speaker?

Wrong Things.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Bro. Grant:—There are some things among us, which not only sound exceedingly disagreeable to me, and many others, but they are unscriptural, improper, and altogether wrong in themselves.

1. Calling Brn. and Srs. Mr. (Mister) and Mrs. when speaking to each other. How cold!

I have, for instance, come a long distance to see my dear brethren, and speak words of benefit to them, and they receive me with a cold Mr. Burnham!

O dear! for mercy's sake don't speak at all! Call me Edwin—say anything decent, rather than that flat, cold, freezing, unheavenly, worldlike, hateful Mr.

Do you own each other, or not? Are you brothers and sisters, or not? If you are, why be so starchified? Just go up to each other boldly, and take each other by the hand, and say brother, or sister, out plump, with a whole mouth full, just as if you loved each other! Cold words, and stiff, world-like manners, make cold hearts, and world-like feelings.

2. Calling churches by the name of bands. I read of the bands of the wicked—the bands of the Moabites—the Italian bands—band of soldiers, &c., in Scripture; but nowhere in the New Testament, is the church of God called a band, or the churches bands. Call them by the right name—Churches; and call the meeting-houses—meeting-houses, or chapels, and be consistent.

I believe there is a case in the Old Testament, where Jacob deplored the evil that he had "become two bands," and this is an evil to be deplored any time! We wish to be one church in spirit, while we are many in location.

3. Calling church officers by the name of committees. Some of our good people are partly frightened to death at the word "elders," or "deacons"; and I do not know but they would be wholly frightened to death at the word "bishops"; but they swallow the word committee all whole. Let them find that word in the Book! But the words, "elders," "deacons," "bishops," &c., are almost as common there as and in the child's primmer.

Come, come, away with this foolish superstition—let us not strain at a mole-hill and swallow a mountain! Call everything by the right name.

4. Calling plain preaching, rough, and hard preaching. Why, if some of us should preach to people that they are "a generation of vipers,"—"children of the devil," "liars," "evil beasts and slow bellies," "serpents," "hypocrites," and the like, there would seem to be more propriety in finding fault; but to find fault with plain, simple truth, because it does not suit us, shows the soft head instead of the soft heart.

O, well, some of us have made up our minds, in the spirit of Christ, to "tell the truth, and shame the devil," and otherwise do good. Why, if a man is covetous, what is the use to tell him he is "clever, and means well," and all that soft nonsense? Just tell him the truth plainly, simply, and fearlessly, in the love of God, and his soul, and in that way you may save him; but otherwise he will be damned at any rate.

If a man is vain, point it out to him in a manner he cannot misunderstand; it may save him. If Brn. are in error, show it to them, do it plainly, not in anger, but earnestly; and if they at first complain, they will thank you when they come to their senses.

"Open rebuke is better than secret love." (Solomon.)

"He that hateth reproof is brutish." (Solomon.)

Come, come let us live out the Bible in all things.

For the Crisis.

The Kind of Preaching we Need.

A Discourse preached in Moline, July 6, '56.

BY P. P. MORGAN.

2 Cor. 3: 6. "Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

In the few moments I shall occupy your attention this morning, I shall try to speak some home-truths, which I pray God may be sealed to our hearts. In the morning's discourse, I showed you how God had given such a variety of truth and talent, as was sufficient to meet the specific and entire wants of His church. But as every truth has both a primary and a relative importance, I shall in connection with the morning's discourse, attempt to shew you that however convincing and grand the truths we hold, or however large the array of talent we may put forth, yet, without something more than this, our entire efforts are for the most part a failure; I mean without the spirit of Almighty God to aid our infirmities.

I shall attempt to shew you the kind of preaching we need. Almost everybody has their own theological and homiletical standard of preaching. But there is no standard to be compared with the examples we have set forth in the New Testament.

The Apostle Paul in saying of himself and apostolical brethren that they were able ministers, did not indulge in frivolous egotism, but spake as prompted by the spirit of God, the truth that was important to be known; and yet I apprehend not so much for the simple fact that we might know they were able, as that it might be known how they were made so—as one truth leads to another truth. At one time we hear Paul saying—"Who is sufficient for these things?" And again we hear him say—"Our sufficiency is of God, who also hath made us able ministers." And then, as if not sufficiently explicit, it is added—"not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." Thus attributing every thing that gave success to their preaching, to God. But mark, it is a thing amazingly unpopular in the West. People say it is the pet of every ignoramus, and an apology for want of intellectual labor; that men go forth to preach the gospel, who cannot speak decent English, and who can hardly speak a sentence without either shocking their audience, or else so exciting their mirthfulness as to utterly prevent the truth they speak from doing any good; and then, as their grand apology, they bore their audience with the assumption that their sufficiency is all of God; that He is able to use foolish things to confound the wise, etc. This is what the people say in the West, where I have heard it more during the three years that I have been in this region, than in all my life before. I know the people are very sensitive upon this point. And I would not have you suppose that I would by any means encourage this intellectual sloth, or apologize for the blunders of this trashy pulpit declaration, of which I have witnessed many painful illustrations myself. But for all this, let us not therefore depreciate God's truth. Men say if you can speak the truth, speak it, and don't talk about your supernatural or superhuman aid. But of such men I hesitate not to say, whether they profess godliness or not, they know nothing of the power of God or of His word. It is against this unchristian principle, I wish to caution you. A principle which repudiates such a thing as being called by the Holy Ghost to preach; and I confess I cannot see that it makes religion much more than a merely intellectual affair. Now against such opinions I wish to protest, however popular they may be in the West, or in this congregation.

"Vox populi, vox Dei" is the cry. But I have long since learned that God's truth is not popular in the world—else the world would have been christianized long ago.

But I was saying to you that Paul felt his suffering was of God; and his experience and sayings we are bound to take as a demonstration upon this point. Although he declares that with his brethren he was "an able minister," yet let us continually bear in mind that his all was of God. And in this I do not mean to say that his existence and other things in common with the human family, was not of God; but that which gave him special ability as a minister of the New Testament was directly of God, and not of nature. It is by this fact we are able to understand many texts that appear to teach otherwise.

For instance, at one time he is called a "babbler;" again it is said, "his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible." He himself makes this humiliating confession to this same Corinthian church; "I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling." Observe; very little like the moral fortitude, and majestic bearing of what the world calls a great mind; but an unanswerable proof that his ability was not of nature, but of God. Hence it is we constantly hear him talking about the spirit as he does. He is a minister, "not of the letter, but of the spirit." And again—"my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of power." To the Romans he talks about the spirit of God dwelling in them—witnessing with theirs, that they are the children of God—helping their infirmities in prayer—of their being led by the spirit—and without which he declares they are none of Christ's. See in his Epistle to the Ephesians, how much he has to say upon this very matter; who, after they believed the truth, were sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise; by the power of which they were already raised up and quickened with Christ. He declares they were "builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." They were commanded not to grieve the Spirit; and again, to be "filled with the Spirit;" to pray in the Spirit. The word of God is talked of as the sword of the spirit. And so in all his Epistles he fails not to keep this subject before the minds of his readers. At one time, he says "most gladly therefore, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." And again, he adds, what, although it may be a very paradoxical, is yet a very illustrative expression,—"When I am weak, then am I strong."

Paul was a minister not of the letter, but of the spirit. The expression "letter," I do not believe to be kindly given to the Jews alone. True, they had their letter—the letter of the law—and they had the spirit of their letter likewise, although few rested in anything save the letter; on which account they were as a people wholly unprepared for the first Advent of our Lord.

* * * *

We have also the letter and the spirit; Baptism, the Lord's Supper, the preached word, the form of godliness, all of themselves are but of the letter which killeth, except they be used in the spirit. What is preaching, or the ordinances, or a form of godliness, except used in a right spirit, and we have with the form, the power of godliness? I hesitate not to say, that all these things except used and enjoyed with the spirit, have a killing influence; are a savor of death unto death.

But there are some who deny the reality of these things. I have been shocked when I have seen this half infidel notion finding place in the teaching of religionists of this day; and that too among some who would be prodigies in religious knowledge. I would as soon believe there was no God, as that he was limited in his presence, or spiritual influence; or that he did not manifest His spirit's power in the church and world. Professed Christians, who deny that we may expect the Spirit's power to comfort and aid us, I would ask—by what power were the walls of Jericho thrown down? by what was Sampson, who under certain circumstances was as weak as other men, enabled, when feeling for the pilllars of the temple, to exhibit such unheard of strength? Or, I would ask by what power was Sinai shaken? Or, again, by what were devils cast out, the sick healed, and the dead raised up? I refer to these facts, to shew that in the past we have it demonstrated that there is such a thing as the presence of God's spirit in the world, in the demonstration and power of which the apostle preached.

It is affirmed that such things are now "done away;" or that the influence and power of such a spirit is no longer for the church; and that all preaching in the demonstration and power of the spirit ceased with the apostles. This may be assumed and asserted, but it cannot be proved, either by facts or Scripture. Without largely discussing this point at this time, let me say, bear in mind that the economy of God in a given dispensation, never changes until the dispensation ends; and all these assumptions are swept by the board.

Again, I remark, if the preaching in the demonstration of the Spirit and power of God is, to use a common expression, "done away," then there is left to us nothing but a dead letter, and the Gospel is but little, if any better than the law, and to prove this point, I need only direct your attention to such churches, and there are some in the West, who deny the influence of the Spirit of God, or that it operates abstractly; and what do you find there but universal spiritual dearth? Where in those congregations do you find those who talk of the love of God being shed abroad richly in their hearts—of a joy that is unspeakable and full of glory—of the communion of the Holy Ghost—of a hungering and thirsting after righteousness—or of a form of godliness with the power thereof? The facts are, you will usually find this kind of religionists full of theory, and frequently full of talk: and I am sorry to add, many times filled with bickerings and strife. They make prodigious strides in their efforts to grow in knowledge, but seldom think to grow in grace! Consequently, they have little of the [illegible] the spirit, and mind of Christ, and of the power of that spirit they know nothing. They call it animal excitement, or mesmerism, or perhaps fanaticism. Now I would not judge any, for God knoweth the hearts of all, and we know that we are judged according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not; but this I do say, that to myself, to say such things, would be little less than the sinning against the Holy Ghost. He that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation; because they said, "he hath an unclean spirit." Mark 3: 29, 30. I tell you my brethren, it is a dangerous thing to deny or discard the spirit of God.

The Fashion.—It is now a well ascertained fact that the largest portion of the profits in the United States, arising from commerce, manufactures and the mechanic arts, are absorbed in female attire, its decorations, and their attendant expenses. Leaving out tropical productions, which we need and import largely, the greatest portion of our enormous imports are for the use and gratification of woman, and the best and most costly kinds of our domestic manufactures, are also devoted to their service. If this is to be the result, all our industry, perseverance and enterprise will avail us but little, and we shall run the same career, ending in enervating luxury and social corruption, in which so many nations before us have gone down. In no other respect is the reputation of the United States so well understood and established in Europe, as in regard to its being the largest market in the world for high cost goods: and travellers and sojourners in Europe from the United States, are most noted for their lavish expenditures of money, said to average two or three times greater than those of Englishmen, and five times greater than the expenditures of the travellers belonging to nations on the continent, who make the tour.

The Eye, and Moral Impurity.—The eye is both the inlet and outlet of a great deal of wickedness of this kind—witness Joseph's mistress, Sampson and David; and we read of eyes full of adultery, that cannot cease from sin. We need, therefore, with holy Job, to make covenant with our eyes; a bargain with them, that they should have the pleasure of beholding the light of the sun and the works of God, provided they would never fasten or dwell on anything that might occasion impure imaginations or desires. What have we the covering of the eyes for but to restrain corrupt glances, and to keep out defiling impressions? And if looking be lust, they who dress, and deck and expose themselves with design to be looked at and lusted after, like Jezebel, that painted her face and tired her head, and looked out of the window, are no less guilty. Men sin, but devils tempt to sin.

Fourth of March—Why Selected.—Do our readers generally know the reason why the Fourth of March was chosen as the day for the inauguration of the President of the United States? It was selected because the Fourth of March in every year, commencing from the first inauguration, cannot come on a Sunday for at least three hundred years. This fact shows the great regard which the framers of our Government had for the Sabbath.—Rural New Yorker.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Quiet Religion.

BY O. A. SUMNER.

I confess I am ofttimes severely vexed by the whining remark,—"I believe in a quiet religion; I have no sympathy with those fanatical people, who, discontented with the good old orthodox doctrine, seek and declare new ideas about matters of christian faith."

Such a remark is the substance of a daily answer (?) I have to the Scripture truths I would urge.

I wish most earnestly to speak quietly, (in the right sense) but I must say that I believe that nothing but sharp fire from heaven, will ever get such persons into a receptive state for the truth. What can you expect, or hope of a man, who sits quietly before his Bible with his eyes shut, and thinks of what his nurse told him years ago, concerning hell and its inhabitants; repeats two or three strong texts, which would kill him, if he would investigate and grasp their real meaning; and softly concludes that he is satisfied in his mind? What does such a man know of a proper independence of thought? Does he know anything about it? If so, what?

Satisfied, after such a process of study and reasoning? Is God satisfied, think you, with the depth of such a man's convictions!

Give him a Scripture that flatly says "lie" to his views, he hears not; tell him he is mistaken, his nurse did not say thus and so. Ah! now he listens.

My Lord! is this man with a judgment! and man going to judgment?

Now understand me; I am not contending for a noisy religion, a religion which manifests itself in howlings. I think the wicked, the unrepenting wicked, are the only persons who should properly engage in such things. I do not run to every new interpretation, and embrace it, and rejoice in it merely because it is new; not at all. We are constantly represented in that light, but nothing could be more erroneous.

My friend, come here. What do you read the Bible for? To gain knowledge of spiritual matters?

"Yes."

Very well; when you gain spiritual knowledge, you find no difference, in one respect, between it and other, or secular knowledge. You are put in possession of something you did not have before.

"So plain, that it is absurd for you to repeat it."

Glad to hear you say that; only stick to it. Now then, what form does your acquired property take? In the end, it is opinion, is it not? belief?

"Of course."

Supposing that after much reading and reflection, you should find yourself on a strong iron tower of doctrine, lifting you far up and showing you more at a glance, of God's goodness and mercy, in this and another earth, than you had ever dreamed of upon the old eminences of faith; and elated and glowing with the new sight and conception, you were about to cry, Hallelujah, praise the Lord! when your eye met the stern look of one of the modern church Fathers, and your ear caught these words,—"Come down, come down; you are in an awful situation,—our sect never mounts that height; if you stay there, you are sure to topple into skepticism, infidelity, and hell. Come down!" You would come down, of course.

"No! I would not."

You would not wait till you were called "fanatic," and "fool,"—that would bring you down.

"No! it would not."

How? then wait till you are made an outcast from the "church, and all men say that you are given to wild delusion; till all heap contumely and scorn upon you, then you descend and take your prospect from the top of diminutive wooden buildings.

"No, never. I would not do so."

You would not? Give me your hand. I know of what I speak. By God's blessing, if you will, I will show you where you can find and mount a tower of doctrine built by God, and constantly made known by his early apostles. But if you go up, remember, it will be said that you are not satisfied with a quiet religion.

Where is true peace? In easy indifference to anything that purports to be a revelation,—if that revelation conflict with already accepted dogmas?

Oh, no, no. It cannot be. That is the stream of quiet religion which ever flows on, and gains new floods each day. The standing water is no stream. You may say it is quiet, but I may add, "it is stagnant.

Was you ever in a crowd, and did you ever hear ten men yell "quiet" to one poor fellow, who had no idea of making an unlawful disturbance, only wishing to correct an assertion of the loud-mouthed speaker?

Wrong Things.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

BRO. GRANT:—There are some things among us, which not only sound exceedingly disagreeable to me, and many others, but they are unscriptural, improper, and altogether wrong in themselves.

1. Calling Brn. and Srs. Mr. (Mister) and Mrs. when speaking to each other. How cold!

I have, for instance, come a long distance to see my dear brethren, and speak words of benefit to them, and they receive me with a cold Mr. Burnham!

O dear! for mercy's sake don't speak at all! Call me Edwin—say anything decent, rather than that flat, cold, freezing, unheavenly, worldlike, hateful Mr.

Do you own each other, or not? Are you brothers and sisters, or not? If you are, why be so starchified? Just go up to each other boldly, and take each other by the hand, and say brother, or sister, out plump, with a whole mouth full, just as if you loved each other! Cold words, and stiff, world-like manners, make cold hearts, and world-like feelings.

2. Calling churches by the name of bands. I read of the bands of the wicked—the bands of the Moabites—the Italian bands—band of soldiers, &c., in Scripture; but nowhere in the New Testament, is the church of God called a band, or the churches bands. Call them by the right name—Churches; and call the meeting-houses—meeting-houses, or chapels, and be consistent.

I believe there is a case in the Old Testament, where Jacob deplored the evil that he had "become two bands," and this is an evil to be deplored any time! We wish to be one church in spirit, while we are many in location.

3. Calling church officers by the name of committees. Some of our good people are partly frightened to death at the word "elders," or "deacons"; and I do not know but they would be wholly frightened to death at the word "bishops"; but they swallow the word committee all whole. Let them find that word in the Book! But the words, "elders," "deacons," "bishops," &c., are almost as common there as and in the child's primmer.

Come, come, away with this foolish superstition—let us not strain at a mole-hill and swallow a mountain! Call everything by the right name.

4. Calling plain preaching, rough, and hard preaching. Why, if some of us should preach to people that they are "a generation of vipers,"—"children of the devil," "liars," "evil beasts and slow bellies," "serpents," "hypocrites," and the like, there would seem to be more propriety in finding fault; but to find fault with plain, simple truth, because it does not suit us, shows the soft head instead of the soft heart.

O, well, some of us have made up our minds, in the spirit of Christ, to "tell the truth, and shame the devil," and otherwise do good. Why, if a man is covetous, what is the use to tell him he is "clever, and means well," and all that soft nonsense? Just tell him the truth plainly, simply, and fearlessly, in the love of God, and his soul, and in that way you may save him; but otherwise he will be damned at any rate.

If a man is vain, point it out to him in a manner he cannot misunderstand; it may save him. If Brn. are in error, show it to them, do it plainly, not in anger, but earnestly; and if they at first complain, they will thank you when they come to their senses.

"Open rebuke is better than secret love." (Solomon.)

"He that hateth reproof is brutish." (Solomon.)

Come, come let us live out the Bible in all things.

The Kind of Preaching we Need.

A Discourse preached in Moline, July 6, '56.

BY P. P. MORGAN.

2 Cor. 3: 6. "Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

In the few moments I shall occupy your attention this morning, I shall try to speak some home-truths, which I pray God may be sealed to our hearts. In the morning's discourse, I showed you how God had given such a variety of truth and talent, as was sufficient to meet the specific and entire wants of His church. But as every truth has both a primary and a relative importance, I shall in connection with the morning's discourse, attempt to shew you that however convincing and grand the truths we hold, or however large the array of talent we may put forth, yet, without something more than this, our entire efforts are for the most part a failure; I mean without the spirit of Almighty God to aid our infirmities.

I shall attempt to shew you the kind of preaching we need. Almost everybody has their own theological and homiletical standard of preaching. But there is no standard to be compared with the examples we have set forth in the New Testament.

The Apostle Paul in saying of himself and apostolical brethren that they were able ministers, did not indulge in frivolous egotism, but spake as prompted by the spirit of God, the truth that was important to be known; and yet I apprehend not so much for the simple fact that we might know they were able, as that it might be known how they were made so—as one truth leads to another truth. At one time we hear Paul saying—"Who is sufficient for these things?" And again we hear him say—"Our sufficiency is of God, who also hath made us able ministers." And then, as if not sufficiently explicit, it is added—"not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." Thus attributing every thing that gave success to their preaching, to God. But mark, it is a thing amazingly unpopular in the West. People say it is the pen of every ignoramus, and an apology for want of intellectual labor; that men go forth to preach the gospel, who cannot speak decent English, and who can hardly speak a sentence without either shocking their audience, or else so exciting their mirthfulness as to utterly prevent the truth they speak from doing any good; and then, as their grand apology, they bore their audience with the assumption that their sufficiency is all of God; that He is able to use foolish things to confound the wise, etc. This is what the people say in the West, where I have heard it more during the three years that I have been in this region, than in all my life before. I know the people are very sensitive upon this point. And I would not have you suppose that I would by any means encourage this intellectual sloth, or apologize for the blunders of this trashy pulpit declaration, of which I have witnessed many painful illustrations myself. But for all this, let us not therefore depreciate God's truth. Men say if you can speak the truth, speak it, and don't talk about your supernatural or superhuman aid. But of such men I hesitate not to say, whether they profess godliness or not, they know nothing of the power of God or of His word. It is against this unchristian principle, I wish to caution you. A principle which repudiates such a thing as being called by the Holy Ghost to preach; and I confess I cannot see that it makes religion much more than a merely intellectual affair. Now against such opinions I wish to protest, however popular they may be in the West, or in this congregation.

"Vox populi, vox Dei" is the cry. But I have long since learned that God's truth is not popular in the world—else the world would have been christianized long ago.

But I was saying to you that Paul felt his sufficiency was of God; and his experience and sayings we are bound to take as a demonstration upon this point. Although he declares that with his brethren he was "an able minister," yet let us continually bear in mind that his all was of God. And in this I do not mean to say that his existence and other things in common with the human family, was not of God; but that which gave him special ability as a minister of the New Testament was directly of God, and not of nature. It is by this fact we are able to understand many texts that appear to teach otherwise.

For instance, at one time he is called a "babbler;" again it is said, "his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible." He himself makes this humiliating confession to this same Corinthian church; "I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling." Observe; very little like the moral fortitude, and majestic bearing of what the world calls a great mind; but an unanswerable proof that his ability was not of nature, but of God. Hence it is we constantly hear him talking about the spirit as he does. He is a minister, "not of the letter, but of the spirit." And again—"my speech and my preaching was NOT with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of power." To the Romans he talks about the spirit of God dwelling in them—witnessing with theirs, that they are the children of God—helping their infirmities in prayer—of their being led by the spirit—and without which he declares they are none of Christ's. See in his Epistle to the Ephesians, how much he has to say upon this very matter; who, after they believed the truth, were sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise; by the power of which they were already raised up and quickened with Christ. He declares they were "builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." They were commanded not to grieve the Spirit: and again, to be "filled with the Spirit;" to pray in the Spirit. The word of God is talked of as the sword of the spirit. And so in all his Epistles he fails not to keep this subject before the minds of his readers. At one time, he says "most gladly therefore, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." And again, he adds, what, although it may be a very paradoxical, is yet a very illustrative expression,—"When I am weak, then am I strong."

Paul was a minister not of the letter, but of the spirit. The expression "letter," I do not believe to be kindly given to the Jews alone. True, they had their letter—the letter of the law—and they had the spirit of their letter likewise, although few rested in anything save the letter; on which account they were as a people wholly unprepared for the first Advent of our Lord.

* * * *

We have also the letter and the spirit; Baptism, the Lord's Supper, the preached word, the form of godliness, all of themselves are but of the letter which killeth, except they be used in the spirit. What is preaching, or the ordinances, or a form of godliness, except used in a right spirit, and we have with the form, the power of godliness? I hesitate not to say, that all these things except used and enjoyed with the spirit, have a killing influence; are a savor of death unto death.

But there are some who deny the reality of these things. I have been shocked when I have seen this half infidel notion finding place in the teaching of religionists of this day; and that too among some who would be prodigies in religious knowledge. I would as soon believe there was no God, as that he was limited in his presence, or spiritual influence; or that he did not manifest His spirit's power in the church and world. Professed Christians, who deny that we may expect the Spirit's power to comfort and aid us, I would ask—by what power were the walls of Jericho thrown down? by what was Sampson, who under certain circumstances was as weak as other men, enabled, when feeling for the pilllars of the temple, to exhibit such unheard of strength? Or, I would ask by what power was Sinai shaken? Or, again, by what were devils cast out, the sick healed, and the dead raised up? I refer to these facts, to shew that in the past we have it demonstrated that there is such a thing as the presence of God's spirit in the world, in the demonstration and power of which the apostle preached.

It is affirmed that such things are now "done away;" or that the influence and power of such a spirit is no longer for the church; and that all preaching in the demonstration and power of the spirit ceased with the apostles. This may be assumed and asserted, but it cannot be proved, either by facts or Scripture. Without largely discussing this point at this time, let me say, bear in mind that the economy of God in a given dispensation, never changes until the dispensation ends; and all these assumptions are swept by the board.

Again, I remark, if the preaching in the demonstration of the Spirit and power of God is, to use a common expression, "done away," then there is left to us nothing but a dead letter, and the Gospel is but little, if any better than the law, and to prove this point, I need only direct your attention to such churches, and there are some in the West, who deny the influence of the Spirit of God, or that it operates abstractly; and what do you find there but universal spiritual dearth? Where in those congregations do you find those who talk of the love of God being shed abroad richly in their hearts—of a joy that is unspeakable and full of glory—of the communion of the Holy Ghost—of a hungering and thirsting after righteousness—or of a form of godliness with the power thereof? The facts are, you will usually find this kind of religionists full of theory, and frequently full of talk: and I am sorry to add, many times filled with bickerings and strife. They make prodigious strides in their efforts to grow in knowledge, but [illegible] to grow in grace. [illegible] quently, they have little of the [illegible] the spirit, and mind of Christ, [illegible] power of that spirit they [illegible] nothing. They call it animal excitement, or mesmerism, or perhaps fanaticism. Now I would not judge any, for God knoweth the [illegible] of all, and we know that we are judged according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not; but this I [illegible] say, that to myself, to say such things, would be little less than the [illegible] the Holy Ghost. He that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation; because they said, "he hath an unclean spirit." Mark 3: 29, 30. I tell you my brethren, it is a dangerous thing to deny or discard the spirit of God.

BOSTON, JULY 30, 1856.

Kind Expressions.

We wish to return our thanks to the many dear Brn. and Srs., who have so frequently cheered us in our labors, by their kind expressions in their christian letters.

We seldom publish them, lest some one should think we loved the praise of men, rather than of God; but be assured those kind words of sympathy are appreciated by your editor, and often give stimulus to his wearied mind.

It is blessed to be associated with such self denying and self-sacrificing christians as those who are looking for the coming kingdom.

"Bless'd be the tie that binds
Our hearts in christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

Though separated by hills and valleys, broad prairie lands and mountain peaks, though deep rivers, lakes and seas roll between; still, when we come—

"Before our Father's throne,
And pour our ardent prayers;
We feel our hopes, our aims are one,
Our comforts and our cares."

Praise the Lord for such union; none but christians know and feel the joy and peace, that fill the soul baptized in Jesus' love.

Thanks eternal to the KING OF KINGS for leading me to join the company bound for the land of glory.

I never loved the way better, or felt more fully satisfied that we shall soon see Jesus and shout His praises in the pilgrim's "sweet home," than at the present time.

"Cheer up, cheer up, the day breaks o'er thee,
Bright as the summer's noontide ray.
The star-gemm'd crowns and realms of glory
Invite thy happy soul away."

Now is the time to gird on the armor. "Quit you like men, be STRONG." "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil."

Can we not say as said Paul:—"We are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul?"

I imagine I hear a thousand voices respond—AMEN.

Camp-Meeting.

We learn there is a good degree of interest felt in the meeting to be held at N. Wilbraham, commencing Monday, Aug. 18; but we fear there will not be sufficient effort made to provide tents.

Families will find it very convenient to have a small tent of their own. The cloth can be used for domestic purposes at the close of the meeting.

Your tents should be double, at least a portion of them, and then in case we should have a shower, you will be able to keep your bedding dry.

In towns where there are several families, let them combine together and get a larger tent that will accommodate not only themselves, but their neighbors. Let all bring their own bedding, if possible.

If you come alone, one quilt and a pillow will be sufficient, which, with the straw used in the tents, will make a very comfortable and healthy bed.

Come at the beginning of the meeting, and stay till its close, and we hesitate not to say, you will find it better for your physical and spiritual health, than all the watering places in the country; and the theological student will learn more at such a meeting in one week, than in a whole year in the Seminary.

Come and try it.

Brethren, let much prayer be offered for this meeting, as it will be one of deep interest to the cause of truth.

Come, determined to work for the Lord, and him alone.

There are few people who are more often in the wrong than those who cannot endure to be told.

Book Notice.

We can now supply orders for the work advertised in our columns by Bro. H. L. Hastings, entitled "Spiritualism, a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times.

By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. Hastings.

We can say with emphasis, this is the best work, according to our judgment, that we have seen on this subject.

It should be read by every lover of truth.

Price in paper cover, 38 cts, postage 8 cts. Price in cloth gilt binding, 50 cts, postage 10 cts.—ED.

Camp-Meeting and Conference.

Providence permitting, there will be a general Camp-meeting Conference at North Wilbraham, at the old ground on the hill, commencing Monday, Aug. 18, to continue one week.

All Christians, without regard to sect or party, are invited to attend; and all who wish to become the followers of Christ.

We expect one of the best meetings we have ever enjoyed. It is on the Western Railroad, 10 miles East of Springfield, 44 West of Worcester, and 88 from Boston.

Thoughts on the Sabbath.

BY WILLARD.

Those who observe the Sabbath of the Bible, may plead as their foundation, a divine institution. God blessed the Seventh day and sanctified it." In this consists the Sabbatic institution itself. As God has never taken this blessing from the Seventh day, the original institution still exists. As God has never sanctified another day of the week, much less enjoined another day as a weekly Sabbath, it is the only Sabbatic institution.

Jehovah was the first that rested on the seventh day. His example was followed by the Son of God, and by the church universal, so far as the record of inspiration extends.

As the seventh day was here sanctified by God, its observance is henceforward a moral duty. But like the other precepts of the decalogue, it was not at first expressly enjoined in the written Word.

When God enjoined the Sabbath on Israel (Ex. 15:) he pointed out the true seventh day, by a three-fold weekly miracle, which continued for the space of forty years. Thenceforward the history of the Sabbath is given in the records of inspiration, so that a knowledge of the true seventh day has been preserved to the church.

When the law was given by the voice of the Almighty, we find the observance, as well as the date of its sanctification, is also clearly given.

The Lord made heaven and earth in six days and rested the seventh, "wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." The Sabbath then, is a standing memorial of God's act of creation. By its observance man would have kept in memory the knowledge of the true God.

We have now considered three important points in the history of the Sabbath.

First, its institution. Gen, 2.

Second, the fact that the true seventh day was pointed out to Israel. Ex. 16. Neh. 9.

Third, the grand law of the Sabbath. Ex. 20.

As we proceed in this examination, we notice three different Sabbaths.

First, the Sabbath of the Lord—the seventh day. See Ex. 20.

Second, the Sabbaths of the Jews, the first and eighth days of their feasts, &c., Lev. 23.

Third, the Sabbaths of the land the seventh year. Lev. 25.

As the Sabbath of the Lord had a real existence before the law of commandments contained in ordinances" was appended, therefore, when that law was nailed to the cross, the sabbath remained in full force. Not so with the Sabbaths of the Jews, and the Sabbaths of the Lord. That law gave them their only force; and when that ceased they were abolished.

The most precious blessings are promised to those who keep God's Sabbath. See Isa. 56: and 58. And it is worthy of note, that this prophecy pertains to a period when God's salvation is near to be revealed. The blessing is promised to "the Son of the stranger," (the Gentile,) as well as to Israel.

Mark the distinction between God's Sabbaths, and those of the Jews, as presented in the prophets. Of the perpetuity of the first, let us judge, after reading Isa. 66, where we are informed of its existence in the new earth. But God assures us by the prophets, that the latter shall cease. See Hos. 2, 11. The fulfilment of this prophecy may be read in Col. 2. Please compare Isa. 56: 4, Ex. 20: 10, with Hosea 2, and Lev. 23, and note the language, "my sabbaths" and "her sabbaths."

Though the scriptures nowhere teach or authorize a change of the Sabbath, yet they contain accurate prophecy of the power that should do this thing. Let the reader compare Dan. 7: 27, with the history of the Papal church, and note its acts of changing "times and laws."

We have seen the grand law of the Sabbath embodied in the decalogue. We come now to the New Testament,—that our Lord did not destroy that law or lessen our obligation to obey it, he clearly teaches in Matt. 5: 17–19. And we may with the utmost safety affirm "that the apostles did not disturb what their Lord left untouched." See Rom. 3: 31.

We say that the New Testament teaches the perpetuity of God's law, and for that reason does not re-enact it.

Our Lord came to "magnify the law and make it honorable." He kept His Father's commandments; but he brushed aside the traditions of man by which they were made void; "The sabbath," he says, "was made for man, and not man for the sabbath." By which he rebuked the Pharasiic observance of the sabbath on one hand, and on the other the views of those who teach that the Lord's sabbath is one of the things against us, which was taken out of the way at Christ's death. Col. 2.

The fact that those who had been with Jesus during his ministry "rested the sabbath day according to the commandment," after his crufixion, and resumed labor on the first day of the week,—shows clearly that they knew nothing of its change from the seventh to the first day.

The fact that God has never sanctified the first day of the week, shows plainly that it is not sacred time—is not a divinely instituted sabbath.

That sanctified time exists in the gospel dispensation, or in other words, that there is a day which belongs to God, is clear from Rev, 1: 10. That "the Lord's day," is the Sabbath day is plain from Isa. 58: 13.

As the sabbath was made for man, we find it under all dispensations, and in every part of the Bible.

For the Crisis.

Letter from H. Twing.

BRO. GRANT:—I am thankful that our kind Father has provided a way, whereby the poor, tried and tempted pilgrims can communicate with each other, as they journey toward that city that hath foundations. I have been one of those that entertained the hope, that I should live to see our glorious King come in the clouds of heaven, and like good old Elijah not see death; but I have a kind Father who will do just right in this matter. I would rejoice if it is for his honor and glory and for my good could I remain and mingle my voice with those whose hearts are made glad at his appearing, and from a full heart cry out, "this is our Lord, we have have waited for him, he will save us." This poor body that is suffering from disease and pain now, will then be exchanged (if I am faithful till the end) for a most glorious body; one like unto Jesus', glorious body, and a long, everlasting farewell to sorrows, pains, disappointments and trials. Can this be so? will the poor despised pilgrim be crowned with eternal life? Will he find an eternal home with Jesus, and the holy and good of all ages? Shall we be permitted to see good old Abraham? Yes, and converse with Isaac and Jacob. Daniel will be there—Job, Isaiah, Peter and Paul, and that great host of Pilgrim martyrs. This meeting will in a little while from this, be a living reality. The great marriage supper will have been made ready, the bridegroom have claimed his loving bride. O how pure, how spotless! These are they that were redeemed by the blood of Jesus—these are they that were made perfect through suffering and trials—they are all passed by now; they have worked for us a "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." I would say to the Pilgrim, cheer up, the land is nearing—we are almost home.

Jesus with open arms says come. Angels are interested now—our great Adversary is exerting his powers to draw us away from Jesus, but let us be sure that our eye is single, let us look to Jesus—we shall have strength given unto us to endure unto the end if we look to him for strength. My Brethren and Sisters I will endeavor to strive with all my heart to meet you in the soon coming kingdom of king Jesus.

For the Crisis

Letter from Bro. L. Boutell.

BRO. GRANT:—I was glad to see in the Crisis a call from the Watchman Committee in behalf of Bro. Turner, who is suffering on account of the old debt, which ought to be mutually borne. I was glad also of your response to the same. I am still glad to see Bro. Crawford suggesting a plan, which I hope will bring immediate relief to our Bro.'s wants, to the injury of none. But it will bring consciousness that it is more "blessed to give than to receive." I do hope all will be interested, that our ears may never be pained with another call from this Committee. Are there not others, yea, an hundred of them, who will stand by the side of Bro. Crawford? If not, are there not those who would be glad to take three or four shares in this Christ-like enterprise of relieving the poor, made so by the most active labor for Christ and the Church?—We are among a suffering people for Christ's and the truth's sake—we all know it. The toil-worn Watchman feels it. Well, I hope soon for that better clime. I sigh for home.

The remaining time let us fully realize the responsibilities we are under, live like pilgrims, bear one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of love. I shall try to help, and my influence must always be on the side of the suffering.

In haste, L. BOUTELL.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. R. Collins.

"While they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner, as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 9–11.

Humble christian reader, can we form any idea what were the feelings of those devoted followers of Christ while they beheld their Savior taken up from them?

That dear friend, who had been their teacher and guide, and had set before them a good example for them to follow, had gone, and as they looked steadfastly toward heaven, it might have appeared to them that they were beholding their Lord for the last time. But listen, what are those words of consolation? "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." This truly was glad tidings to the lonely pilgrims. And is not this promise a source of great joy to us who believe the time is near at hand for our Lord to return? O, how can any one disbelieve those words, "This same Jesus shall so come in like manner" as He went into heaven? Yet there are many who ridicule this sacred promise. "But these as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." 2 Pet. 2: 12. But unto them that believe, the truth is precious.

There are some who sincerely believe that Jesus is coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.

Soon, very soon the parting clouds will reveal our long absent Lord, and He will come the second time to restore and replenish, until all shall be made new.

This earth shall then a garden be,
Where blooms the tree of life;
And sorrow then we ne'er shall see,
For past is mortal strife.

We'll dwell with Christ on earth below,
And in his pleasures share;
And grief we then no more shall know,
For Jesus will be there.

We know his coming now is nigh,
The signs are very clear;
And for it now his children sigh—
O, Jesus, soon appear!

We then will sing our trials o'er,
And be with Abram blest;
With Christ to dwell forever more,
And in his kingdom rest.

Yours in Christian love,

For the Crisis.

Seventh Day Sabbath.

BY W. SHELDON.

No. IV.

CONCLUDED.

The force of circumstances compels me to refrain from writing as much upon this topic as I had intended; and this article is our last for the present. We have already demonstrated the following facts:—

1. Christ never enforced the keeping of the Seventh day Sabbath upon his followers in any of his discourses; but His enemies repeatedly accused Him of Sabbath-breaking.

2. The apostles never once mention such a sin as Sabbath-breaking among the sins of their days, or of our "latter days;" nor did they ever caution their hearers or readers, upon this point, as did the prophets of the preceeding age—not even when writing epistles to Gentile converts, who had never been accustomed to Sabbath-keeping.

3. The Seventh day Sabbaths, as well as the festival Sabbaths, and new moons, helped compose the "SHADOW" which was to reach only to Christ; Col. 2: 14–17, hence, if the Seventh day Sabbaths come this side of the cross, so also do the "holy day" Sabbaths, or festival Sabbaths, and the new moons; which is inadmissible. Two classes of Sabbaths are mentioned as component parts of this "SHADOW;" and there were only two classes of Sabbaths in the Jewish system, viz:—"holy day" Sabbaths, and seventh day Sabbaths.

We have also shown the fallacy of arguments used to enforce the Sabbath upon Christians. But being compelled to leave the matter here for the present, it may be well to say that we deem it expedient to observe the "Lord's day," (the resurrection day of Jesus—Sunday,) according to the practice of the primitive christians. In the absence of an express command, it cannot be wrong at least, to patronize what was practiced and countenanced by the apostles themselves. That the "first day" (our Sunday) was observed as a day of christian worship by the apostles and early christians, we learn from two sources;

1. We learn it from the Scriptures; Acts 20: 7. 1st. Cor. 16: 2. It was a day of gathering together, a day of preaching, a day of eating the Lord's Supper, and a day of laying by some of the goods of this world, to benefit the needy saints, whether laymen or ministers; but it was not a substitute for the Sabbath.

2. We learn the same from the writings of early christians. Says Barnabas, who was a fellow-laborer with Paul, and who is called an "apostle" in the scriptures. "We observe the eighth day with gladness, in which Jesus rose from the dead." Bar. Epis. 13: 10. The eighth day is the next day after the seventh; being the first day of another week. It is thought by some that Barnabas was an inspired man; but let this be as it may, he was according to Scripture testimony, "filled with the Holy Ghost," and therefore his statement can be relied upon as correct history. He knew well what day was then observed by the different churches through the land, as he had traveled much with Paul, as well as with others.

Again, Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, only sixty-eight years after the crucifixion, and six years after the death of the apostle John, writes as follows:—"Let us no more Sabbatize, but let us keep the Lord's day."

Justin Martyr, who was born only fifty-six years after the cross, writes:—"On the Lord's day, all christians in the city or country, meet together, because that is the day of our Lord's resurrection, and then we read the writings of the apostles and prophets; this being done the president makes an oration to the assembly, to exhort them to imitate and practice the things we have heard; then we all join in prayer; and after that we celebrate the sacrament; then they who are able and willing give what they think proper," &c. Eusebius tells us that "from the beginning, the christians assembled on the first day of the week, called by them the Lord's day; for the purpose of religious worship, to read the scriptures, to preach and celebrate the Lord's supper."

Hoping that these articles may elicit some light, I close by subscribing myself,

Yours in christian love,

W. SHELDON.

There are three modes of bearing the ills of life; by indifference, which is the most common; by philosophy, which is the most ostentatious; and by religion, which is the most effectual.

For the Crisis.

Letter from J. T. Ongley.

BRO. GRANT:—Having just returned from a short tour in Western New York and the North Western part of Pennsylvania, I thought I would write a journal of the same and send it to the Crisis, and thereby encourage others of like precious faith to hold on to the promises.

Although it has seemed to some that the vision has forgotten to speak,—"yet it will speak and not lie." Therefore, I would say to the weak hands "be strong," and to the feeble ones, forget not the places of resort, where you used to pray; his promise is, that he "will come," "even God with a recompense. he will come and save you."

At the close of an afternoon meeting in this place (Waterloo) we repaired to the water's edge, went down into the same and planted one willing soul into the likeness of his (Christ's) death.

The next morning, June 2, we started for Buffalo, N. Y., stopped at Rochester, and had a good visit with Bro. J. B. Cook, found him strong in the faith, believing that the last chains of prophecy prior to the coming of the Messiah are fulfilling.

We also visited Bro. Marsh (Ed. of the Prophetic Expositor,) at his office, was glad to see him, and find that he is still endeavoring to warn the people to prepare for the Judgment Age. From R. we went to Buffalo, and found a goodly company waiting for us at their place of worship,—a pleasant Hall, corner of Maine and Mohawk Sts. After meeting, quite a company followed us to the water, although it rained, when three were buried by baptism.

Wednesday morning, we started for Erie, Pa. We found there one family that was glad to receive us and listen to the word; we found them truly "faint, yet pursuing"—poor as to this world's goods, but loving the news of the return of our Messiah. They have not been able to take any paper since '54. Though poor myself, yet I enclose 50 cents to have the "Crisis" sent to them; cannot others do likewise, so that the poor among us can have the privilege of reading the Crisis as well as ourselves?

Thursday afternoon, we took the stage from Erie to Edenboro, about twenty miles south from E., and found quite a number in that vicinity looking for Jesus to come the second time to awake the sleeping saints, change the living righteous, give them immortality, and an immortal kingdom. We staid with them two evenings. At the close of the last meeting we broke the loaf in commemoration of the broken body of our redeemed Lord, an ordinance that I am satisfied is too much neglected by our Advent brethren.

From Edenboro, we were taken by Bro Wm. G. Davidson to Blooming Valley, about twenty miles farther south; found an appointment out for us that evening, and quite a company came out, considering the weather, it being quite rainy.

On Sunday there was quite an assembly; we also broke the unleavened loaf to them.

On Monday, we went about six miles east of Blooming Valley, and preached to a house full.

We spoke again to the people in Blooming Valley Tuesday afternoon, and I trust that the truth will be appreciated. There is quite a number in that vicinity who were brought to see the main doctrines of the second Advent, under the labors of Bro. Crawford; but I am afraid do not live up to its requirements, so as to have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom. They have built quite a nice meeting house, and they do not believe in sending off one of God's servants with merely a "God bless you"

From Blooming Valley, we went to Girard, about thirty-five miles, and found a few there of like precious faith, and an appointment given out for us.

Wednesday evening we had a good hearing. We went around the next day and visited with the few and endeavored to encourage them on in the path that leads to life. They have not had any Advent preaching in that neighborhood for a year.

Thursday evening we met again and talked to the people until eleven o'clock.

On the morrow, before we started to take the cars to return home, one Bro. came to the place where we staid and wished to be baptized; we therefore repaired to the water, and like the eunuch of old, he felt like going on his way rejoicing.

If this should be read by any body who has not obeyed the Lord in that ordinance,

I would say, "Go thou and do likewise." Many there are that believe the doctrine, but have not obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered them.

Some may enquire,—what is that form?

Ans. 1. The Lord's supper to represent our faith in the death of our blessed Lord, and also to obey the commandment of our Savior,—"Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood, ye have no life in you." Whoso eateth his flesh and drinketh his blood has the promise of eternal life and a resurrection at the last day. See John 6: 53–54. 1 Cor. 11: 1, 2, 23–29.

2. Baptism to represent the burial of Jesus Christ.

3. The resurrection of the same Lord. Therefore, being planted in the likeness of his death, we have the promise of being in the likeness of his resurrect on.

Friday we started homewards, and on our way stopped at Buffalo, and endeavored to exhort the brethren and sisters to faithfulness, from these words,—"seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be," &c. Although we may even know the time when the wedding is to take place, it is necessary to have the wedding garment, lest, when the Master comes we be found speechless.

When we returned home we found that Bro. C. F. Sweet had stopped in the vicinity of Waterloo and Seneca Falls, and preached three times and baptized two souls. There is quite a company at Seneca Falls, three miles east of this place, that have a hall where they meet to exhort one another. They would be glad to have any of our brethren as they pass through give them a call, and dispense to them the word of Life. Enquire for Obadiah Jennings.

Also, we would be glad to have them give us a call at Waterloo. We cannot promise to give them much more than a "God bless you," for in fact, there are but two families that pretend to support meetings here, and they are poor. They have, however, hired a nice hall for Advent meetings. I preach there once a fortnight. Bro. E. Hoyt, of Mich., preached to us yesterday in the afternoon, and in the forenoon at the Falls. He spoke to us from the words,—"I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," &c. It was quite encouraging.

If any of the Brn. should conclude to stop at Waterloo, enquire for Benj. Hanson, who will direct them to me.

Yours in the hope of eternal life at the appearing of Jesus, JOHN T. ONGLEY.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. B. M. Clark.

BRO. GRANT:—I have long thought it my duty to write for the Crisis, yet I feel so unqualified to contribute to your worthy columns, that I hardly dare to take my pen; but God being my helper, I will try to give some of my trials, while exchanging my former errors, for the word of God.

I experienced a change of heart when a child, and joined the Baptist Church in Mount Holly, Vt., and my name has been enrolled in the Church book more than thirty-five years. My parents and my ministers have ever taught me from my childhood, that I had an immortal soul that could not die, and I verily thought that the Bible taught it also. Two years ago this spring, I was requested to prove from the Scriptures, that the spirit lives after the body dies. I said I would do it. I verily thought that I could. But when I made the attempt, I failed, and how great was that failure. By searching, I found that souls were made, and souls were born, souls died, souls went into the grave and into the pit, &c. Beasts, fishes and men alike have souls, and alike die; all have one breath, and all return to dust. Yes, I saw plainly that I had been clinging to error, and had pressed it to my heart as God's truth, these many years. I was ashamed to let it be known that I was defeated in my proof, for I saw that I could not sustain my own belief from the Bible. Now what was to be done? My only resort was this—go to God, confess my errors, and ask Him to lead me into truth. My prayer was,—Lord, what is truth? Lord, teach me thy truth, for I desire nothing else but truth. I found myself in trouble. The Bible was my only guide. I never had read a word or heard a sermon preached, which led me in this direction. My faith was strong in the word of God. I believed it would lead me out, so that I could see light in God's light, remembering what our Savior said—"I am the way, the truth and the life."

So I read, and prayed, and thought on His holy word: in so doing, I found that it was strong meat to digest for one so frail. Sleep departed from my eyes, my food refused to nourish this mortal body. It well nigh destroyed me before I could give up my long cherished error, and believe that which was a new doctrine. And while I was in this study, and had been for nearly three weeks, Bro. Bywater came to our place and delivered a course of lectures on the second coming of Christ; he threw some light on my pathway,—still I did not wish to believe anything only what would harmonize with my Bible. I set apart a day for fasting and praying, and my only desire was to find God's truth. I was troubled and distressed. Every former argument failed me now. I fell on my face before God, and plead in faith, believing and trusting in the merits of Christ alone for light and truth. O how did my heart rejoice when I heard my Savior say, "this is the way, walk ye in it." O how glorious was the plan of salvation to my poor heart; it was as an open book before me; I could see it from Adam down to the second coming of Christ and the resurrection, when Christ shall come as a Redeemer to restore all that was lost in Adam. I could now see it a paradise restored by Christ. My heart was made to rejoice and cry out, glory to God. O what wisdom—O what power, yea what glory. I could see by the eye of faith, the consummation of the Christian's hope. I verily thought that I could tell it so that all would see and feel as I did. But how soon did I find that I could only speak to the ear; but God must speak to the heart.

I went to the church and gave them my views; told them that I believed them to be the great truths of the Bible. Such was my faith, and they must do as they saw fit; cut me off, or let me remain. So it has rested, until a few weeks since, a committee was chosen to visit me, hoping to bring me back on the old ground. But they found me strong in the Lord, no prospect of giving it up. No, thank the Lord, I am still rejoicing in hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave. So accordingly they took a vote to withdraw from me the hand of Church fellowship. I am not entirely cut off as yet, but I stand condemned until the next church meeting. Pray for me, that I may not faint by the way; that I may stand firm with my feet on the Rock of Ages, with my "loins girt about with truth," having my "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." "Looking for and hasting unto the coming of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ."

We have had no preaching here since Bro. Bywater was here two years since. (Advent preaching I mean.) But the old song is sung that the world is to be converted to God. Do we see any signs? No. I see none: but if the gospel could be preached in his purity, men would repent.

My prayer is, Lord send by whom thou wilt, but only send thine own humble servant, that he may break to us the bread of life.

Your Sister, looking for immortality when Christ comes.

For the Crisis

Letter from L. H. M. Holoway.

BRO. GRANT:—With a heart filled with love to God and a desire to honor and glorify him, I attempt to write a few lines for the Crisis.

I rejoice, to-day, in the God of my salvation; blessed be His name forever. We can now look up and rejoice, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. O yes, the Life-giver will soon appear for the deliverance of his sorrowing ones.

I bless the Lord, for the light that is beaming from his sacred Word. Truly, the light is shinging upon our pathway, and we know our whereabouts, glory to God. O, I am glad that I ever heard the midnight cry, that the light of the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ ever shone into my heart.

Sometimes, when I get a glimpse by an eye of faith, of the saint's bright abode, the renovated earth, I am almost impatient for the coming change which will make "all things new." And O can it be, that we are so near the port of glory? yes, it is even so.

Sometimes the way looks dark and lonely; but God knows in whose hearts it is to love and serve him, and he will never forsake his people. It is a trying time; and many who have been with us heart and hand in days past, are turning away to the false, alluring charms of earth again, and so bringing a wound upon the cause of the Redeemer. But God assisting me, I am going through to the end. Four years ago, I bid farewell to the pleasures of earth, and started for the kingdom of immortal glory. I feel to-day, that I am still on the journey to Mount Zion, the "city of the living God." I am still struggling for life,—and in a little while I expect to obtain it, glory to God. I am glad that God has a people on the earth that love him, and are striving to keep all the commandments. O may the God of Israel be with them, and keep them from falling in this evil time, is my prayer.

While I look around and see the faithful few, struggling for life, and on the other hand see the faithlessness of some who once bid fair for the kingdom, and see that wickedness is increasing; my heart cries out, come, blessed Jesus, and take the throne of thy father David and "reign over the house of Jacob forever."

O He will come in a little while and deliver his sorrowing, tried and tempted saints.

"And when I think of that blest morn,
When we shall all be upward borne
To meet the Lord in glory;
My heart beats quick, and pulse dilates,
With longing eyes to those bright gates
That open unto glory."

Dear Brn. and Srs., we are living in perilous times. And in the language of Bro. E. Burnham, it is "now the struggle of life and death." But O, let us gird on the armor of God anew, and face the storm in the name of the Lord.

It is no time to get weary now; for

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time."

O then let us be faithful in the discharge of every duty; let us dear Brn. and Srs. be faithful a little longer, and we will "ground our arms at Jesus' feet." We'll lay aside the cross for the crown.

There is a little band in Madison, whose faces are set Zionward, "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." We are a little band, it is true, but the God of Israel is with us, and we have nothing to fear.

"Our leader is strong, we'll win the day,
And gain the promised land."

O God, hasten the time, when the loved ones that are scattered all over this dreary earth, will meet to part no more in the everlasting kingdom.

I rejoice that the day is so soon to dawn, when we shall see the King in his beauty, and meet him whom our souls love. When we shall be permitted to range the fair fields of paradise, and meet with those we love in Beulah's peaceful land.

May God speed on the happy day.

From your Sr. in Christ, earnestly desiring redemption, HELEN M. HOLWAY.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. M. H. Austin.

BRO. GRANT:—I take the first opportunity since my sickness to write you a few lines; and send you one dollar to be appropriated to the Crisis, in some way as you may think best, either for the old debt or otherwise. It is but little, I wish it was a great deal more. I hope all will do what they can that the paper may be continued. I, for one, feel I could hardly do without it; truly it has been a welcome messenger to me, as I do not have the privilege of meeting my brethren of like precious faith. It rejoices my heart to hear that there are some faithful ones, that will work, will pray, and are patiently waiting the return of our King.

For myself, it would gladden my heart to meet with those that look for and love his coming, and at times, I think—can I submit cheerfully? then I think it is my Master's will, and he knows what is best for me, and by looking to him I find grace to help in time of need. I think I can say I am learning to lean more on the Almighty arm of God, for I find no other can save. Thanks to his dear name,—

"He kindly opes to me His ear,
And bids me pour my sorrows there,
And tell Him all my pains;"

then I go away comforted; and to-day I can say, glory to God, for the hope of a literal resurrection.

Two years this spring I knew but little of the Advent views, having never heard but a few discourses on the subject; at that time Bro. Grant preached and explained the Chart in Chapman and Meionaon Halls, Boston, and truly it was glad tidings of great joy to my heart; for the doctrine of endless punishment had well nigh weighed me to the earth, and I could not believe in universal salvation, and what could I do? I prayed that God would lead me into all truth, and when I heard his description of the kingdom, a voice seemed to say,—"This is the way, walk ye in it." A flood of light, life and joy broke in upon my soul, and I was led to exclaim,—"Truly, there is peace in believing;" and to-day I am looking for that glorious kingdom "wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Now, if I never meet the little flock in Boston again, I would exhort them to gird up the loins of their mind,—"be sober, and hope to the end," for the foundation of God standeth sure." He has promised to come again, and take the faithful home, and His promises are "Yea and Amen to every one that believeth."

"O I long to be there! and the thought that 'tis near,
Makes me almost impatient for Christ t'
appear;
And fit up that dwelling of glories so rare,
The earth robed in beauty,—I long to be there!"

Your Sister in Christ,

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. Jonathan C. Wilson.

BRO. GRANT:—Through the mercies of God I am enabled to say that my health is much better, so that I think of getting back to my old home next week. My Post Office address will be Vermont Post Office, Chautauque Co, N. Y.

I do not expect to be able to travel any more abroad, to preach. I feel grateful to God that he cast my lot in Peace Dale, R. I., to recover my health, where I have found Brethren and Sisters who have obeyed the gospel fully with regard to me; they received me sick and penniless and have taken the best care of me. Distant friends by letters, have cheerfully furnished me with means to get home: I tender to all those cheerful donors my sincere thanks for the kind assistance they have given me in my distressed circumstances. May the Lord reward them, as I shall never be able to do it.

Yours, in the best of bonds,

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Persia.

NEW YORK, July 23.

Steamship Persia was signalled off Sandy Hook at 4 o'clock this morning, and arrived at her dock about seven.

She brings upwards of 200 passengers. She left Liverpool at 3 o'clock P. M.

POLITICAL ARRESTS IN FRANCE.—It is reported that numerous arrests of a political nature have been made at the Sables d'Olonne, in La Vendee—a quarter where, we regret to learn, secret societies increase and multiply in a manner far too rapid to enable the authorities, notwithstanding their vigilance, effectually to check their progress.

RUSSIA.

It is now said that the Czar is sincere in his desire to abolish serfdom. A plan for its gradual extinction now commands the attention of the Russian Government. It is proposed to raise a loan, by means of which the Government will purchase the serfs from the private owners, and then liberate them under certain condition.

Arrival of the Indian.

QUEBEC, July 27.

The steamship Indian, from Liverpool, 9.30 A. M. on Wednesday, July 16, arrived at this port to-day at 11.30 A. M.

FRANCE.

Nothing can exceed the quiet of the political world at this moment in Paris. The journals only reflect the general dullness.

Domestic Summary.

ACCIDENT ON LONG ISLAND SOUND.—Explosion of the Steam Chimney of the Empire State—9 Killed and others injured.—A serious accident occurred on board the steamer Empire State, Capt. Brayton, at 10 o'clock on Saturday evening, when off Point Judith, on the passage from Fall River to New York. A despatch dated Fall River, July 27, is as follows:

The accident was caused by the collapse of the steam chimney of the starboard boiler, thereby forcing all the steam down the flues into the fire-room, and upon the main deck, scalding 22 persons, 9 of whom have since died of their injuries.

FROM KANSAS.—The St. Louis Republican has a letter from Palermo, Kansas, of the 8th, which says that Gen. Lane had entered the Territory with seven hundred men, and had been heard to declare that he would take Kansas or die.

The same letter states that there has been a serious difficulty between the Kickapoo Indians, caused by the free use of liquor. Several were killed.

The Philadelphia papers say that the whole number of victims by the recent disaster on the Northern Pennsylvania Railroad, is 62, of whom 48 were males and 13 females.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and as I have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may perhaps subserve the cause of humanity to present his advertisement to the public.

I would say, "Go, thou and do likewise." Many there are that believe the doctrine, but have not obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered them.

Some may enquire,—what is that form?

Ans. 1. The Lord's supper to represent our faith in the death of our blessed Lord, and also to obey the commandment of our Savior,—"Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood, ye have no life in you." Whoso eateth his flesh and drinketh his blood has the promise of eternal life and a resurrection at the last day. See John 6: 53–54. 1 Cor. 11: 1, 2, 23–29.

2. Baptism to represent the burial of Jesus Christ.

3. The resurrection of the same Lord, Therefore, being planted in the likeness of his death, we have the promise of being in the likeness of his resurrect on.

Friday we started homewards, and on our way stopped at Buffalo, and endeavored to exhort the brethren and sisters to faithfulness, from these words,—"seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be," &c. Although we may even know the time when the wedding is to take place, it is necessary to have the wedding garment, lest, when the Master comes we be found speechless.

When we returned home we found that Bro. C. F. Sweet had stopped in the vicinity of Waterloo and Seneca Falls, and preached three times and baptized two souls. There is quite a company at Seneca Falls, three miles east of this place, that have a hall where they meet to exhort one another. They would be glad to have any of our brethren as they pass through give them a call, and dispense to them the word of Life. Enquire for Obadiah Jennings.

Also, we would be glad to have them give us a call at Waterloo. We cannot promise to give them much more than a "God bless you," for in fact, there are but two families that pretend to support meetings here, and they are poor. They have, however, hired a nice hall for Advent meetings. I preach there once a fortnight. Bro. E. Hoyt, of Mich., preached to us yesterday in the afternoon, and in the forenoon at the Falls. He spoke to us from the words,—"I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," &c. It was quite encouraging.

If any of the Brn. should conclude to stop at Waterloo, enquire for Benj. Hanson, who will direct them to me.

Yours in the hope of eternal life at the appearing of Jesus, John T. Ongley.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. B. M. Clark.

Bro. Grant:—I have long thought it my duty to write for the Crisis, yet I feel so unqualified to contribute to your worthy columns, that I hardly dare to take my pen; but God being my helper, I will try to give some of my trials, while exchanging my former errors, for the word of God.

I experienced a change of heart when a child, and joined the Baptist Church in Mount Holly, Vt., and my name has been enrolled in the Church book more than thirty-five years. My parents and my ministers have ever taught me from my childhood, that I had an immortal soul that could not die, and I verily thought that the Bible taught it also. Two years ago this spring, I was requested to prove from the Scriptures, that the spirit lives after the body dies. I said I would do it. I verily thought that I could. But when I made the attempt, I failed, and how great was that failure. By searching, I found that souls were made, and souls were born, souls died, souls went into the grave and into the pit, &c. Beasts, fishes and men alike have souls, and alike die; all have one breath, and all return to dust. Yes, I saw plainly that I had been clinging to error, and had pressed it to my heart as God's truth, these many years. I was ashamed to let it be known that I was defeated in my proof, for I saw that I could not sustain my own belief from the Bible. Now what was to be done? My only resort was this—go to God, confess my errors, and ask Him to lead me into truth. My prayer was,—Lord, what is truth? Lord, teach me thy truth, for I desire nothing else but truth. I found myself in trouble. The Bible was my only guide. I never had read a word or heard a sermon preached, which led me in this direction. My faith was strong in the word of God; I believed it would lead me out, so that I could see light in God's light, remembering what our Savior said—"I am the way, the truth and the life."

So I read, and prayed, and thought on His holy word: in so doing, I found that it was strong meat to digest for one so frail. Sleep departed from my eyes, my food refused to nourish this mortal body. It well nigh destroyed me before I could give up my long cherished error, and believe that which was a new doctrine. And while I was in this study, and had been for nearly three weeks, Bro. Bywater came to our place and delivered a course of lectures on the second coming of Christ; he threw some light on my pathway,—still I did not wish to believe anything only what would harmonize with my Bible. I set apart a day for fasting and praying, and my only desire was to find God's truth. I was troubled and distressed. Every former argument failed me now. I fell on my face before God, and plead in faith, believing and trusting in the merits of Christ alone for light and truth. O how did my heart rejoice when I heard my Savior say, "this is the way, walk ye in it." O how glorious was the plan of salvation to my poor heart; it was as an open book before me; I could see it from Adam down to the second coming of Christ and the resurrection, when Christ shall come as a Redeemer to restore all that was lost in Adam. I could now see it a paradise restored by Christ. My heart was made to rejoice and cry out, glory to God. O what wisdom—O what power, yea what glory. I could see by the eye of faith, the consummation of the Christian's hope. I verily thought that I could tell it so that all would see and feel as I did. But how soon did I find that I could only speak to the ear; but God must speak to the heart.

I went to the church and gave them my views: told them that I believed them to be the great truths of the Bible. Such was my faith, and they must do as they saw fit; cut me off, or let me remain. So it has rested, until a few weeks since, a committee was chosen to visit me, hoping to bring me back on the old ground. But they found me strong in the Lord, no prospect of giving it up. No, thank the Lord, I am still rejoicing in hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave. So accordingly they took a vote to withdraw from me the hand of Church fellowship. I am not entirely cut off as yet, but I stand condemned until the next church meeting. Pray for me, that I may not faint by the way; that I may stand firm with my feet on the Rock of Ages, with my "loins girt about with truth," having my "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." "Looking for and hasting unto the coming of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ."

We have had no preaching here since Bro. Bywater was here two years since. (Advent preaching I mean.) But the old song is sung that the world is to be converted to God. Do we see any signs? No. I see none: but if the gospel could be preached in his purity, men would repent.

My prayer is, Lord send by whom thou wilt, but only send thine own humble servant, that he may break to us the bread of life.

Your Sister, looking for immortality when Christ comes.

For the Crisis

Letter from L. H. M. Holoway.

Bro. Grant:—With a heart filled with love to God and a desire to honor and glorify him, I attempt to write a few lines for the Crisis.

I rejoice, to-day, in the God of my salvation; blessed be His name forever. We can now look up and rejoice, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. O yes, the Life-giver will soon appear for the deliverance of his sorrowing ones.

I bless the Lord, for the light that is beaming from his sacred Word. Truly, the light is shinging upon our pathway, and we know our whereabouts, glory to God. O, I am glad that I ever heard the midnight cry, that the light of the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ ever shone into my heart.

Sometimes, when I get a glimpse by an eye of faith, of the saint's bright abode, the renovated earth, I am almost impatient for the coming change which will make "all things new." And O can it be, that we are so near the port of glory? yes, it is even so.

Sometimes the way looks dark and lonely; but God knows in whose hearts it is to love and serve him, and he will never forsake his people. It is a trying time; and many who have been with us heart and hand in days past, are turning away to the false, alluring charms of earth again, and so bringing a wound upon the cause of the Redeemer. But God assisting me, I am going through to the end. Four years ago, I bid farewell to the pleasures of earth, and started for the kingdom of immortal glory. I feel to-day, that I am still on the journey to Mount Zion, the "city of the living God." I am still struggling for life,—and in a little while I expect to obtain it, glory to God. I am glad that God has a people on the earth that love him, and are striving to keep all the commandments. O may the God of Israel be with them, and keep them from falling in this evil time, is my prayer.

While I look around and see the faithful few, struggling for life, and on the other hand see the faithlessness of some who once bid fair for the kingdom, and see that wickedness is increasing; my heart cries out, come, blessed Jesus, and take the throne of thy father David and "reign over the house of Jacob forever."

O He will come in a little while and deliver his sorrowing, tried and tempted saints.

"And when I think of that blest morn,
When we shall all be upward borne
To meet the Lord in glory;
My heart beats quick, and pulse dilates,
With longing eyes to those bright gates
That open unto glory."

Dear Brn. and Srs., we are living in perilous times. And in the language of Bro. E. Burnham, it is "now the struggle of life and death." But O, let us gird on the armor of God anew, and face the storm in the name of the Lord.

It is no time to get weary now; for

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time."

O then let us be faithful in the discharge of every duty; let us dear Brn. and Srs. be faithful a little longer, and we will "ground our arms at Jesus' feet." We'll lay aside the cross for the crown.

There is a little band in Madison, whose faces are set Zionward, "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." We are a little band, it is true, but the God of Israel is with us, and we have nothing to fear.

"Our leader is strong, we'll win the day,
And gain the promised land."

O God, hasten the time, when the loved ones that are scattered all over this dreary earth, will meet to part no more in the everlasting kingdom.

I rejoice that the day is so soon to dawn, when we shall see the King in his beauty, and meet him whom our souls love. When we shall be permitted to range the fair fields of paradise, and meet with those we love in Beulah's peaceful land.

May God speed on the happy day.

From your Sr. in Christ, earnestly desiring redemption, Helen M. Holway.

Madison Centre, Maine, July 6, 1856.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. M. H. Austin.

Bro. Grant:—I take the first opportunity since my sickness to write you a few lines; and send you one dollar to be appropriated to the Crisis, in some way as you may think best, either for the old debt or otherwise. It is but little, I wish it was a great deal more. I hope all will do what they can that the paper may be continued. I, for one, feel I could hardly do without it; truly it has been a welcome messenger to me, as I do not have the privilege of meeting my brethren of like precious faith. It rejoices my heart to hear that there are some faithful ones, that will work, will pray, and are patiently waiting the return of our King.

For myself, it would gladden my heart to meet with those that look for and love his coming, and at times, I think—can I submit cheerfully? then I think it is my Master's will, and he knows what is best for me, and by looking to him I find grace to help in time of need. I think I can say I am learning to lean more on the Almighty arm of God, for I find no other can save. Thanks to his dear name,—

"He kindly opes to me His ear,
And bids me pour my sorrows there,
And tell Him all my pains;"

then I go away comforted; and to-day I can say, glory to God, for the hope of a literal resurrection.

Two years this spring I knew but little of the Advent views, having never heard but a few discourses on the subject; at that time Bro. Grant preached and explained the Chart in Chapman and Meionaon Halls, Boston, and truly it was glad tidings of great joy to my heart; for the doctrine of endless punishment had well nigh weighed me to the earth, and I could not believe in universal salvation, and what could I do? I prayed that God would lead me into all truth, and when I heard his description of the kingdom, a voice seemed to say,—"This is the way, walk ye in it." A flood of light, life and joy broke in upon my soul, and I was led to exclaim,—"Truly, there is peace in believing;" and to-day I am looking for that glorious kingdom "wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Now, if I never meet the little flock in Boston again, I would exhort them to gird up the loins of their mind,—"be sober, and hope to the end," for the foundation of God standeth sure." He has promised to come again, and take the faithful home, and His promises are "Yea and Amen to every one that believeth."

"O I long to be there! and the thought that 'tis near,
Makes me almost impatient for Christ t' appear;
And fit up that dwelling of glories so rare,
The earth robed in beauty,—I long to be there!"

Your Sister in Christ,

Marcia H. Austin.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. Jonathan C. Wilson.

Bro. Grant:—Through the mercies of God I am enabled to say that my health is much better, so that I think of getting back to my old home next week. My Post Office address will be Vermont Post Office, Chautauque Co, N. Y.

I do not expect to be able to travel any more abroad, to preach. I feel grateful to God that he cast my lot in Peace Dale, R. I., to recover my health, where I have found Brethren and Sisters who have obeyed the gospel fully with regard to me; they received me sick and penniless and have taken the best care of me. Distant friends by letters, have cheerfully furnished me with means to get home: I tender to all those cheerful donors my sincere thanks for the kind assistance they have given me in my distressed circumstances. May the Lord reward them, as I shall never be able to do it.

Yours, in the best of bonds,

Jonathan Wilson.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Persia.

New York, July 23.

Steamship Persia was signalled off Sandy Hook at 4 o'clock this morning, and arrived at her dock about seven.

She brings upwards of 200 passengers. She left Liverpool at 3 o'clock P. M.

Political Arrests in France.—It is reported that numerous arrests of a political nature have been made at the Sables d'Olonne, in La Vendee—a quarter where, we regret to learn, secret societies increase and multiply in a manner far too rapid to enable the authorities, notwithstanding their vigilance, effectually to check their progress.

RUSSIA.

It is now said that the Czar is sincere in his desire to abolish serfdom. A plan for its gradual extinction now commands the attention of the Russian Government. It is proposed to raise a loan, by means of which the Government will purchase the serfs from the private owners, and then liberate them under certain condition.

Arrival of the Indian.

Quebec, July 27.

The steamship Indian, from Liverpool, 9.30 A. M. on Wednesday, July 16, arrived at this port to-day at 11.30 A. M.

FRANCE.

Nothing can exceed the quiet of the political world at this moment in Paris. The journals only reflect the general dullness.

Domestic Summary.

Accident on Long Island Sound.—Explosion of the Steam Chimney of the Empire State—9 Killed and others injured.—A serious accident occurred on board the steamer Empire State, Capt. Brayton, at 10 o'clock on Saturday evening, when off Point Judith, on the passage from Fall River to New York. A despatch dated Fall River, July 27, is as follows:

The accident was caused by the collapse of the steam chimney of the starboard boiler, thereby forcing all the steam down the flues into the fire-room, and upon the main deck, scalding 22 persons, 9 of whom have since died of their injuries.

From Kansas.—The St. Louis Republican has a letter from Palermo, Kansas, of the 8th, which says that Gen. Lane had entered the Territory with seven hundred men, and had been heard to declare that he would take Kansas or die.

The same letter states that there has been a serious difficulty between the Kickapoo Indians, caused by the free use of liquor. Several were killed.

The Philadelphia papers say that the whole number of victims by the recent disaster on the Northern Pennsylvania Railroad, is 62, of whom 48 were males and 13 females.

APPOINTMENTS.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Providence permitting, I will preach at Bristol, Ct., Sunday, Aug. 3.
River Point R. I., Thursday eve, Aug. 7.
Appanaug, Friday eve., Aug. 8.
Peacedale, Sunday, Aug. 10.
As Bro. Bellows may appoint, Tuesday eve., Aug. 12.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

The best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits. It will be found to answer an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, [illegible] Boston, Mass.

☞ We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine is well known to be an excellent remedy in many complaints, and we have proved to my entire satisfaction the good qualities of one of the articles, it may promote [illegible] the cause of humanity to present the advertisement to the public.

Poetry.

From the Tribune.

"It is more Blessed."

Give! as the morning that flows out of heaven;
Give! as the waves when their channel is riven;
Give! as the free air and sunshine are given;
Lavishly, utterly, carelessly give.
Not the waste drops of thy cup overflowing,
Not the faint sparks of thy hearth ever glowing,
Not a pale bud from the June rose's blowing;
Give as He gave thee, who gave thee to live.

Pour out thy love like the rush of a river
Wasting its waters forever and ever,
Through the burnt sands that reward not the giver.
Silent or songful, thou nearest the sea,
Scatter thy life as the Summer shower's pouring!
What if no bird through the pearl-rain is soaring?
What if no blossom looks upward adoring?
Look to the life that was lavished for thee!

Give, though thy heart may be wasted and weary,
Laid on an altar all ashen and dreary;
Though from its pulses a faint miserere
Beats to thy soul the sad presage of fate,
Bind it with cords of unshrinking devotion;
Smile at the song of its restless emotion;
'Tis the stern hymn of eternity's ocean;
Hear, and in silence thy future await.

So the wild wind strews its perfumed caresses,
Evil and thankless the desert it blesses,
Bitter the wave that its soft pinion presses,
Never it ceaseth to whisper and sing.
What if the hard heart give thorns for thy roses?
What if on rocks thy tired bosom reposes?
Sweetest is music with minor-keyed closes,
Fairest the vines that on ruin will cling.

Almost the day of thy giving is over;
Ere from the grass dies the bee-haunted clover,
Thou wilt have vanished from friend and from lover,
What shall thy longing avail in the grave?
Give as the heart gives whose fetters are breaking
Life, love and hope, all thy dreams and thy waking.
Soon, heaven's river thy soul-fever slaking,
Thou shalt know God and the gift that he gave.

From the Calendar.

Harsh Words.

Speak not harsh words; they grate upon the ear;
And what is more, they grate upon the heart;
They cause full many a bitter sigh and tear—
They cause full many a pair of friends to part.

Speak not harsh words; they are a bitter cup
For loving, sympathizing hearts to bear;
They dry the fountain of the heart-blood up—
They chill the feelings like Siberian air.

O, let your words be gentle, kind and true,
To all with whom you meet in life's brief hour;
So shall their influence be like evening dew,
That blesses tree, and shrub, and plant, and flower.

So shall you have from all respect and love,
Which are more precious far than golden ore;
And God, from His most gracious throne above,
Will on you smile, and bless you more and more.

Speak not harsh words, but gentle ones instead;
Then, when your pilgrimage is ended here,
And you repose among the silent dead,
You'll be remembered with a grateful tear.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. S. P. Green.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me to say a few words to you and all the rest of the flock scattered up and down in the earth. O, how I long to see some of you and talk with you about our blessed hope. What a joyful day will be the overcomer's; but the way is so dark and lonesome at times, that I almost despair of ever winging my flight with all the redeemed, when the last trumpet sounds. Then again, my desponding soul is lifted on high, and a gleam of heaven and earth made new, comes in and scatters night away. Glory to God,

I think drowsiness now would be very dangerous when within reach and sight of the prize; only let us wait for our Master to come, and give to each one of us our reward. I don't think it can be long ere He will come.

Let us study to know our duty, our whole duty, and may our acts be right in the sight of God, may our consciences be void of offence, both toward God and man.

Bro. Grant, you may think me too poor and unworthy to write for publication, and I think writing for the public belongs to more able minds than mine; but as I have no means of hearing from the lips of any of the preachers, or holding converse with them, I wish to communicate a few thoughts and wishes to those of like precious faith, through the Crisis.

It is good, yes, blessed to hear from different parts of God's church, which now is in her militant state, and know that there are a goodly number willing to throw themselves into His arms for mercy and protection, having crucified themselves to the world, and the world unto them.

I do claim to belong to that company of [illegible], although I am nearly alone here among the mountains, in a section of the country where the "everlasting gospel" does not sound. There has been a time when the alarm was sounded in the ears of all, both great and small, rich and poor; and there were many that awoke to a sense of their situation; but most of those who rose to trim their lamps and with vessels full of oil went forth to meet their Lord, have gone back to the world.

But Oh! how they do miss it. Just before them lies the record of all things, good and bad; a strict account has been, and will be kept, until there is heard a "voice from the throne," exclaiming, "it is done!" Ah! to what a scene millions are rushing blindfolded; so it is, and so it must be.

I will leave this subject with you now, and just say to you, that you cannot tell how blest I am in receiving this good little paper,—the Lord's paper. It is fitted out expressly for the benefit of poor, unfavored christians; poor, yet heirs of the inheritance.

I hope God's little ones can have this meat sent to them in this dry and barren land.

O praise God in His holiness. Let us learn to praise Him more, and with purer hearts. Let us pray for all saints, both of high and low degree; let us have the spirit of Christ or we are none of His; let us forget not to communicate and to do good, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased.

"O ye saints of God, take courage,
For Jesus leads the army,
And He's sure to win the day,
When we've gained the victory,
We shall lay our armor down.

There will be the crystal river,
And the tree of life forever—
And the children all together,
Praising God and the Lamb—
Shouting hallelujah, shouting hallelujah,
Shouting hallelujah,
With the pure celestial band."

When your eyes meet these imperfect lines, I do hope you will pray for me.

Your Sr., in hope of eternal life,
Sophronia P. Green.

For the Crisis.

Letter rom Bro. M. Batchelor.

Bro. Grant:—I take my pen to say a few words for the Crisis. The burden of thought with me, is the coming of Jesus. He has by his own teaching taught me to look for His coming, as the time when the church shall rejoice. Read John 16: 16 22.

His going away was the world's joy and the disciples' grief; His coming again is the world's grief, but joy to the church. The true church has fasted these eighteen hundred years during the absence of the Bridegroom, as Jesus said, Mark 2: 18–20; but when the Bridegroom returns they will feast.

From these facts we learn what the feelings of the church and the world will be, in view of the announcement of the coming One. One will lift up the head with joy at every sign that speaks Him near, while the other will be grieved and show feelings of disgust; and Oh, that this last character belonged only to the profane. The most bitter are in the professed church, and the most violent of that class stand forth by profession as God's watchmen. Let me be any character rather than by profession Christ's minister, and regardless of the prophecy that shows His Advent nigh. Such men will have an awful account to give. Their black coats, long sanctimonious look, will be no screen when God calls them to a reckoning. As certainly as God has given us a prophetic outline of earth's history, so certainly that sketch is about filled up, and the time of trial is near, "even at the doors."

Rome, to me, is the point of interest at this time. It must be in its last position allotted her in prophecy before her judgment comes. If I have a right idea of Revelations 17: she is riding on the scarlet colored beast under the "eighth" head which is of the seven and goes to perdition.

I think Bro. Storrs is right in the main, in the tract he published in '52 on the French empire; the state of the old Roman world justifies his views on the subject, only let the ten kings be the same as once constituted the old empire of Rome. They are all giving their strength and power to that beast that delivered the adulterous woman from her last great struggle in '48, and she is now riding that beast with her cup of abominations in her hand. Rev. 17: 4. But his end will be perdition. Rome is in her last form before she falls like a great millstone to rise no more. Rev. 18.

Brn., let no man deceive you in this matter with the idea that this perdition comes gradually; read, Rev. 18: 8, 17, 21, which shows positively that it will be as when God overthrew Sodom.

But some one will say,—the merchants stand afar off and bewail the ruin, which shows us that the fall of Rome does not bring the end.

True, there are such spectators, but not those merchants that trade, according to Rev. 3: 18,—"I counsel thee to buy of me," &c. The true bride will be gathered to see the smoke of her burning. Rev. 19: 1–9.

The Lord of the true bride takes the reins of government; and now for the great struggle when Jesus will overcome, for he is Lord of lord's and King of kings. Rev. 19: 11–16.

Reader, you may think of getting ready after Rome falls, but it will be too late: there will be other business to attend to in court. There will be a moment of awful suspense when the seventh trumpet sounds, it will not pass and no one know it and leave a few Adventists to quarrel about it and break up into other fragments, with test questions, &c.

No, no. They that are ready will go in to the marriage and the door will be shut.

Lord, prepare the writer and the reader to meet the sound of the last trump with joy, and the approbation of Jesus,—the smiles of our Father, and with all the Redeemed retinue to join in the song of Rev. 19: 1–3. Matthew Batchelor.

P. S. I often think I can excuse myself in not writing for papers, but I feel a responsibility resting upon me to give my testimono in reference to this last great and awful crisis, that is coming upon a slumbering world suddenly. I know of no great change to take place as warning to the world, until the "sign of the Son of man" appears in heaven, when all the tribes of earth shall mourn."

Let us be up and doing, laying aside every weight. M. B.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. F. H. Berick.

Bro. Grant:—Yours came safely to hand and I embrace the present opportunity to reply to the same.

By way of introduction I would say, that my silence for some time past is neither attributable to the recluseness of the hermitage, nor to a want of interest in the cause of truth in which we are engaged, and with which we are associated.

Two reasons may be assigned:

1st. You seemed to have had a plenty of communications without any of my productions.

2nd. My time, as a general thing, has been occupied in another department than that of writing.

I however, gladly comply with your request, and as an answer to your enquiries, pen the following communication relative to my position, general welfare, and the interests of the cause in this region of the country.

My position, as it regards the great doctrine of the Advent, is unchanged. What is meant by this, may be expressed as follows:

The Bible plainly teaches that God, to accomplish His glorious purpose with regard to the salvation of man, has appointed that Christ shall come personally and visibly again to this world, to raise the dead, judge mankind, punish His enemies, and establish His "everlasting kingdom under the whole heaven."

The above are emphatically the truths embraced in the great doctrine of the Advent. They are cardinal truths. They are intimately connected with the interests of the whole human family, and sooner or later their realization will be known by all mankind.

As it regards the questions of the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked, my mind is unchanged. I have never seen any reason to change my mind, (as it regards these questions,) since I embraced these sentiments, some sixteen years ago.

In respect of the means or condition of attaining to the blessings of the gospel, there are two:

1st. Repentance toward God, and
2nd. Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

A life devoted to God and the interests of truth, is what is required. God must be worshipped sincerely; Christ must be honored as our Savior and Redeemer; and self must be crucified.

Now these are my sentiments, and this my position.

As it regards my general welfare, I may say:

1st. Temporally, we have enough to eat and drink and wherewithal to be clothed. Through the kindness of the friends of truth, we possess a little patch of land and a house, and in connection with all of these blessings we have comfortable health, for which we are thankful to God.

2d. Spiritually. On this point I can say I am trying to serve the Lord. Not making, perhaps, so great advancement as some, nor so little as others. Yet we trust with all of our imperfections, the Lord is with us. We do not feel that we merit salvation, for after we have done all, we are unprofitable; but trusting in a God of mercy and justice, and in a Savior whose compassionate heart is "touched with the feelings of our infirmities," having been tempted "in all points" as we are, we have confidence that He will not only succor us here, but will save hereafter.

With regard to my success in preaching, I have nothing to boast of, never having had any great success in this department. I am often sad because I have not the ability to do more; and as often reproved for not improving more faithfully upon the little ability I already have. Sorrowful at times, because I do not have the privilege of leading some happy soul down into the water in obedience to the commands of Christ: and then again, when I see those professing to love Christ, becoming carnal and sectarian, with Paul I am glad that I have baptized none save some Crispus, or Gaius, or the household of Stephanas. Downcast sometimes, on account of temptations and trials, at other times rejoicing in the full assurance of hope."

The interests of the cause in this region are fair. There are a few here who love the Lord and his truth. They do not, perhaps, make so much noise in the world as some, not being as a general thing, of a very excitable turn of mind; yet, possessing as much real principle and sound sense as men in general. Most of them met with a severe disappointment on time, but still their courage is good.

You are aware that a considerable number of churches in the West are believers in what is termed the "Age to come," in which special favor will be shown to the Jews, &c.: the church, however, in this place, reject the above view; believing that "God is no respecter of persons;" that "in every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with Him:"—that the time of saving men is while Christ sits at the right hand of God; that salvation, which is the result of mediation, cannot be realized when Christ ceases to occupy this position, which will be the case when he comes the second time, without a sin offering unto salvation;—that the harvest is the end of the world, or age; and, "as therefore the tares are gathered and bound in bundles to be burned"—in the figure,—"so shall it be in FACT, in the end of this age, and not in the beginning, middle, or end of an "Age to come." To which I append my Amen and Amen.

I have thus endeavored to answer your enquiries. Hence, you understand my position, welfare, and the state of the cause in this region. In a word I may say, that I am doing what I can to spread the truth, obtain an honest living, and mind my own business.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel,
F. H. Berick.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. A. P. Morrill.

Bro. Grant:—I have for a long time had a desire to write a few lines for the Crisis, but knowing my inability to write to give satisfaction, even to my own mind, and feeling my own unworthiness, I have in some sense asked to be excused, until I feel that I am not obeying the command of the Savior—"as ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," for I do feel much comforted while reading letters from my dear Brn. and Srs. of like precious faith. In the last No. while in deep trial, I cast my eye upon Bro. Burnham's little bit, headed, "The Triumph." O how it was blessed to my poor soul; how sweet every sentence: it seemed to lift me right up out of the pit (as it were) of grief and sorrow, temptation and suffering, and surely I felt that I could suffer on, and wait a little while longer, even until Jesus come; if the Lord will.

O that the good Lord will continue to fill up Bro. Burnham's whole soul, with his Holy Spirit, to feed the sheep and lambs of the flock that are perishing for want of that food that they can eat. For "blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing."

Again I cast my eye on another page, of the same No., and read Bro. Allen, on "The Crucifixion." O what a spirit of humiliation filled my soul; I seemed less than nothing to myself, and Jesus, yes, that lovely Jesus, was "all in all." My whole soul cries out and longs to be more like him; yes, to be more meek, more mild, more patient in suffering, more persevering in all the Christian graces.

Also, Bro. Sheldon, on the Seventh day Sabbath. I was very glad indeed, that my Heavenly Father, had put it into the heart of some one of his servants, to take hold of that theory, on Bible ground, and write; and my prayer is, that the Lord may direct by his Spirit into all truth, upon the subject of the Sabbath. I believe Bro. Sheldon has got on the right track. "Blessed are the meek."

Finally, all the letters from the Brn. and Srs. are good, I love them; and I have been looking for letters, or writings from some who have formerly written for the Crisis, but do not see their names as yet. Brn. and Srs. do not be discouraged: the Master is coming, although we have been disappointed many times, the word of God cannot fail. The signs of his coming are most all in the past; and now I think the world and the cold-hearted professor, will have a little while to cry "peace and safety," more emphatically than ever before; and then the apostle says, "sudden destruction cometh upon them."

Let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober, having our lamps trimmed and burning, all ready to meet the bridegroom when he shall come. For Jesus has said, "as the lightning that shineth out of the East even unto the West, so also shall the coming of the Son of man be."

O, what an awfully solemn time we now occupy. I do verily believe that we are living in the last moments of time, and our present position as individuals, and as a body, should be all ready and waiting.

My whole soul cries:—

"O, wake thy slumbering virgins,
Send forth the solemn cry,
Let all the saints repeat it,
The bridegroom draweth nigh!

May all our lamps be burning,
Our loins well girded be;
Each longing heart preparing,
With joy thy face to see."

Then, O then will the saints have one eternal meeting, where sin, sorrow, grief and tears, suffering and death, can never enter; there to enjoy the presence of that lovely, blessed Savior, who has washed and redeemed us by his most precious blood.

"O, how I long to see the day,
When the redeemed shall come."

Yes, "I long to be there.' Glory to God! his children are almost home. A few more trials and sufferings, and our blessed Jesus will say to us:—"Child, your Father calls, come home."

Grammar in Rhyme.

We advise every little grammarian just entering upon Murray, Brown, or any of the thousand grammars in use, to commit to memory the following easy lines, and then they never need to mistake a part of speech:

1. Three little words you often see,
   Are Articles—a, an, and the.
2. A Noun 's the name of anything,
   As school, or garden, hoop, or swing.
3. Adjectives tell the kind of Noun,
   As great, small, pretty, white or brown.
4. Instead of Noun, the Pronouns stand—
   Her head, his face, your arm, my hand,
5. Verbs tell of something to be done—
   To read, count, sing, play or run.
6. How things are done the Adverbs tell—
   As slowly, quickly, ill or well.
7. Conjunctions join the words together—
   As men and women, wind or weather.
8. The Preposition stands before
   A Noun—as in or through a door.
9. The Interjection shows surprise—

Behind Time—Hints for the Careless.

A railroad train was rushing along at almost lightning speed. A curve was just ahead, beyond which was a station, at which the cars usually passed each other. The conductor was late—so late that the period during which the down train was to wait, had nearly elapsed—but he hoped yet to pass the curve safely. Suddenly a locomotive dashed into sight right ahead. In an instant there was a collision. A shriek, a shock, and fifty souls were in eternity. And all because an engineer had been behind time.

A great battle was being fought. Column after column had been precipitated, for eight mortal hours on the enemy posted along the ridge of a hill. The summer sun was sinking to the west, reinforcements to the obstinate defenders were already in sight; it was necessary to carry the position with one final charge, or everything would be lost. A powerful corps had been summoned from across the country, and if it came up in season, all would yet be right. The great conqueror, confident in its arrival, formed his reserve into an attacking column, and led them down the hill. The whole world knows the result. Grouchy failed to appear. The Imperial Guard was beaten back. Waterloo was lost. Napoleon died a prisoner at St. Helena because one of his marshals was behind time.

A leading firm in commercial circles had long struggled against bankruptcy. As it had enormous assets in California, it expected remittances by a certain day, and if the sums promised, arrived, its credit, its honor and its future prosperity would be preserved. But week after week elapsed without bringing the gold. At last came the fatal day on which the firm had bills matured to enormous amounts. The steamer was telegraphed at daybreak—but it was found on inquiry, that she brought no funds; and the house failed. The next arrival brought nearly half a million to the insolvents, but it was too late—they were ruined, because their agent, in remitting, had been behind time.

A condemned man was being led out for execution. He had taken human life, but under circumstances of the greatest provocation, and public sympathy was active in his behalf. Thousands had signed petitions for his reprieve, a favorable answer had been expected the night before, and though it had not come, even the sheriff felt confident that it would yet arrive in season. Thus the morning passed without the appearance of the message. The last moment was up. The prisoner took his place on the drop, the cap was drawn over his eyes, the bolt was drawn, and a lifeless body swung revolving in the wind. Just at that instant, a horseman came in sight, galloping down hill, his steed covered with foam. He carried a packet in his right hand, which he waved partially to the crowd. He was the express rider with the reprieve. But he had come too late. A comparatively innocent man had died an ignominious death, because a watch had been five minutes too slow, making its bearer arrive behind time.

The Allies have lost nearly a year at Sebastopol, because they delayed a superfluous day after the battle of Alma, and came up too late for a coup de main, just twenty-four hours behind time." Five minutes in a crisis is worth years. It is but a little period, yet it has often saved a fortune, or redeemed a people. If there is one virtue that should be cultivated more than another, by him who would succeed in life, it is punctuality; if there is one error that should be avoided, it is behind time.

It is continually so in life. The best laid plans, the most important affairs the fortunes of individuals, the weal of nations, honor, happiness itself, are daily sacrificed because somebody is "behind time." There are men who always fail in whatever they undertake, simply because they are "behind time." There are others who put off reformation year by year, till death seizes them, and they perish unrepentant, because forever "behind time."

The Hiccup.—Some time ago I had occasion to call at Highland shooting-lodge, and on entering the kitchen, where two English sportsmen were sitting, I happened to be attacked by a fit of hiccup. One of the sportsmen took a piece of grey paper from his pocket, and after lighting and blowing it out, he started up, and held the fumes of it opposite my mouth and nostrils. I started, to be sure, but was quite astonished to find myself entirely cured, and I have since seen it tried on others, and always proving a "never-failing remedy."—Corr. of Inverness Cour.

Response.

BY W. M.

Bro. Grant:—The following remarks were called forth in reply to a letter sent to the writer, a physician in this village, who has lately renounced, the popular views held by his more orthodox Presbyterian brother, exhorting him to renounce Millerism, otherwise a polite orthodox world will renounce him. J. Porter.

[In your letter, you say that you hope I have given up Millerism and if I do not abandon it, I shall not be likely to make a livelihood of any kind.]

Come, let us reason together. What is Millerism?

I do not know, but suppose it may mean following the tenets of a certain man; if that be its import, and this is the only one of which I can think, I am certainly ignorant of them, for I have never read a page either of Miller's life or writings.

If I rightly comprehend your statement, it is this,—unless you follow in the regularly time-beaten, and time-honored track of popular superstition, bigotry and error, the votariés of such systems will be likely to abhor and excommunicate you from their ranks. Terrible calamity! a time-server may well tremble at the sight.

But let a man float on the smooth unruffled tide of immortal-soulism, and bask in the sunny gleams of a—

"Heaven of Elysian delights
Far beyond the skies,
Where his sunny fancies
To Ærial habitations rise;

Let him look down into the dark, deep abyss of a fancy-pictured hell till his soul quaff of the stream of unending torments, and conjure up ever and anon, the wailing anguish and the unutterable agonies of the DAMNED; as they writhe in tones of suppliant mercy to their Maker.

But mercy fled, and love o'erthrown,
They curse their maker in each moan;

Yes, let a man revel in such ungodlike scenes, till the fountain of his fancy is brimming o'er, till his heart's blood chills within its veins, and the hand of terror stays its course, till he reels and sickens at the sight; yes, let a man charge the God of love, wisdom, benevolence, with such horrible impiety, and he is well esteemed; and the more he scoffs at the cause of truth the more meritorious is he thought.

But pause for a moment! Can a man serve two masters? Can he serve the God of truth acceptably and cleave unto error? Can he be a candidate for the world to come, and lay up treasures where moth and rust doth corrupt? "For where your treasure is there will your heart be also." "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

But to return to the subject. What is Millerism?

What would you think of the science of Phrenology were it called, Gallism, or the science of the healing art were it named Gallenism? Would not common sense be shocked by such ignominious epithets and slander thrown upon those noble sciences, by ignorant and malicious persons to mar their truth and beauty, and impede their progress, in weak, and unthinking minds? Such people oppose their lying errors to the principles of truth which they stigmatize as unworthy of the world's approbation.

Certain individuals may discover and elucidate the principles of a science or art which is founded in nature, but which can lay claim to no one's invention, for it comes from the hand of Him whence emanates all truth.

What malignancy then to brand it for one of man's invention, to mar the wisdom of the great creator, by maligning his immutable truths! But what is Millerism? Is it of man's invent ion? Is it a perversion of the truth and wisdom of God? Then brand it with all the infamy and degradation it justly merits.

Does Millerism advocate views opposed to truth?

But Millerism is something of which, I have told you, I am ignorant; if there were any ism in the matter, I should be inclined to call it Bibleism. It is Bible truths with which I am now dealing. It is the Revelation which God has given us of his wisdom and plan of redemption. He has made his revealed will plain, and adapted the Bible to the understanding of every intelligent person. We are assured throughout the whole, that he says what he means, and means what he says,—"for it is impossible that God should lie." He is the fountain of all truth, eternal and immutable. The great first Cause—the author of all that is. Harmony, wisdom, love, and holiness are the attributes of the great Supreme. He has developed all nature in harmony with His character.

The science of theology treats of his wonderful attributes—reveals His love, His wisdom, and His greatness. It is the science of all sciences. As far transcendent above all others in its beauty, wisdom and power, as Heaven is above earth.

It alone unfolds the destiny of man and the world. It alone breaks the dark chaotic gloom that hangs around each mortal's destiny, and tells him whence he came and whither he hastens. It tells man he is a dying, perishing creature, fallen from his primeval bliss to his now forlorn condition. It tells him he has transgressed his Maker's laws, trampled on His mercy, slighted His love, despised His counsel. It tells him the plan which God's Holy and omnipotent wisdom has devised to rescue fallen man, formed in the image of his Maker, from the oblivion of eternal death. It tells him "the wages of sin is death,"—eternal, irrevocable death, but the reward of virtue and holiness, is eternal life.

The science of theology points man to the lamp of life, that lights and cheers his pilgrimage through this dark vale of sin, woe and death. It points him to God's long-suffering mercy, the depths of His love, the riches of His grace, and the exceeding weight of glory reserved for the inheritance of the saints in the "world to come.

What science so grand, so perfect and sublime. Do not all other sciences sink into merited insignificance before the glorious excellence of this God-taught science—Theology? It emanated from the throne of the Almighty,—sublime, and yet so simple that every intelligent mind can drink in an exhaustless stream from the immeasurable depths of its fountain, and the inestimable riches of its treasures.

How glorious! how cheering amid life's dreary course of trials and vicissitudes of sin, wretchedness and death. It points us forward from Paradise lost to Eden regained in the glorious restitution of the coming age, when Christ shall be our King, (visible and personal) and the redeemed shall be his people; when earth shall regain her primitive material loveliness and transcendent grandeur.

When "the wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them; and the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cocatrice' den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knoweldge of the Lord." The light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days." For "I will rejoice in Jerusalem and joy in my people and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." The Lord hath spoken it.

Now, pray what is all this? Is it Bible truth? Is it Millerism? Which?

It is solemn Bible truth.

How, then, can it be Millerism? Was that truth the ingenious invention of any man?

No! no! no! They are the stern declartions of "thus saith the Lord"—and no man can take from or add to these solemn truths.

Seeing then the Word was made what it is without the aid of man, how comes it to be Millerism? What! call the teachings and Word of God Millerism, because one man broke the iron-bound case of heathenism, superstition, tradition and bigotry of fallible divines, and gathered out from the rubbish-heap of apostate ages, the pure bright word; wrested God's plan from its mystic expounders and brought it forth bright and clear, as a sun in meridian effulgence, to the amazement of intelligence.

Think, what ignominy to charge the Word of God with Millerism. Does not the tingling blush of shame creep over you, and conscience whisper you have wronged the noble cause of truth? Shall the truth of God be branded with ignominy, derision, lies? Shall His solemn declarations be mocked? Shall the wicked scoffers flourish forever like a green bay tree? deride His truths, stigmatize his followers, and seek by worldly allurments to draw man away from its embrace?

No, "Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven and all the proud, yea, all that do wickedly shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." An awful doom awaits the impenitent. "Be not deceived God is not mocked." The scoffers of His holy cause will bring their retribution fearfully on their own heads. "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from Heaven with His mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting DESTRUCTION from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power; when He shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe."

My dear brother, I would exhort you with all christian feeling to "search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." Be strong once, quit you like a man; and with a firm resolve burst the illusive spell which holds you with a giant's grasp to error and tradition. Put on the whole armor of truth and be not afraid. Embrace the everlasting gospel of God's son; the tidings of joy, the proclamation of the kingdom in the future, nigh, even at the door; the glorious inheritance of the saints, "who shall be heirs and joint heirs with Christ."

Let no worldly purpose, no sordid interest hold you back. Remember the carnal mind is enmity against God; you cannot serve Him and the world. The world may despise you, slander you, persecute you; the saints of old "were stoned, were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented;" "of whom" says the sacred word, "the world was not worthy." "Not accepting deliverance that they might obtain a better resurrection." The wicked have but a short day, for the wages of sin is eternal death; but the fruits of the spirit are eternal life.

Lay hold of your Bible, read it, study it for yourself; take no one's word for anything, but let it be,—"Thus saith the Lord." Remember, ministers, though they may mean well, are fallible like other men. They should be taken as guides to the study of the Holy Scriptures, but never looked upon as authority. The great majority of ministers belonging to the popular orthodoxy of the day are spoiled by education, ruined by bigotry, bound by sectarianism, blinded by tradition. "But beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world and not after Christ."

Nor do they always feed the flock in humility with truth, and a willing mind as being ensamples among them; but exalt themselves as Lords over God's heritage and, alas! too often influenced by filthy lucre, the truth is bartered for sordid interests. If the truth of God which alone can make them free, be not in them, then are they slaves to sin and the world.

I am not bound to any particular sect, though my sympathies are attached to those who advocate a literal interpretation of the divine Oracles. I am the Lord's freeman. Any body of people who take the Word of God for their guide and rule, and hold the truth in the love of it, have an equal claim on christian sympathy. Sectarianism is a blind to the eyes of all that are enclosed in it.

Do you think Christ was a sectarian? Behold what love He manifested while on earth! what perfect love flowed through all His actions, and moulded the harmony and loveliness of his character. "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in Heaven, the same is my brother, and sister and mother," was the language of our adorable, Redeemer;—but, whosoever shall not believe and obey the tenets and traditions of our church, let him be excommunicated, is the language of every sect.

What a thrilling contrast between christianity and sectarianism! Verily, they have made the commandments of God of none effect by their traditions, teaching for doctrine, the commandments of men.

Finally my dear brother, if you are willing to have me correspond on this important subject, the truths of the gospel, I will cheerfully do so, and humbly endeavor to put you on the path of truthful investigation, that you may be able to root up SECTARIANISM, TRADITION and ERROR, and with an unbiassed mind and single eye to the glory of God, may receive and proclaim his blessed truths; laying aside all theories of men; believing that through Christ alone, by patient continuing in well-doing, you will receive glory, honor, and immortality;—eternal life.

For the Crisis.

"Wer'e going home."

BY S. W. BISHOP.

Bro. Grant:—After the toils of this day of the preacher's labor, I seat myself to drop a few words to the brethren scattered abroad.

I have just closed the labors of another day, and its work, results, and motives, are registered in "the books," to be called up again at the great day of accounts.

Thus, day after day passes away, and brings us nearer, and still nearer the haven of eternal rest.

Yet, if we are [illegible] the children of God, "we're going home." I was just now thinking of the multitude of times the above sentence has fallen from our lips. "We're going home," is the burden of our songs, our prayers, and our exhortations. Yes, all, in our christian conversation and intercourse, is leading to this same great idea, "we're going home."

And as I was thinking of the pleasures of home, my mind went back to "the days of other years." I remember well the pleasing delights of that "first home," the home of my boyhood. I remember the scenes around that old hearthstone, in that cottage in the dell; where brothers and sisters met in love, and toiled the live-long day in childish sports. I remember well the joyous countenances of those I loved at home. I remember how we were cheered by a thousand tokens of a mother's love, and how our little hearts were made glad by a father's smiles. Ah yes, I lovod that home, where tender hearts were moulded by the almost matchless power of a mother's sympathy and love. Home was sweet indeed to my boyish heart.

I remember that sometimes I was called, though only for a season, to leave my home, and when after a fow short days or weeks I was permitted to return, it was a glad hour, and my heart beat high with emotions of delight when I was fairly on the way. And as we journied on, I minded very little the jars and jolts I might experience on the road, for my mind was all absorbed with the pleasing idea of "going home."

As I passed object after object on the way, each familiar hill, grove, brook, cottage, stump and tree, would count me so much nearer home. And my heart would be filled almost to overflowing at the thought that soon a mother's arms, a father's words of kindness, and brother's smiles, and sisters kisses would greet my return, and bid me a sweet, a hearty welcome to all the joys of home.

Yes, these scenes are all fresh before my mind as though they were but yesterday. And who that has known a mother's love, who that has been blessed with the smile of a loving father, the society of brothers and sisters dear at home, would chide me, if even now, unbidden, the falling tear would tell those joys all passed away.

How much is this slight sketch like the pilgrim on the way to Zion. To the way-worn weary one, toiling on time's troubled ocean, tempest tossed, amid perils and dangers, tears and grief, sorrow and anguish, death and woe, temptations, misery and sin,—nothing is so cheering, so full of heaven-born comfort to his weary exile heart as the glad sound—"we're going home." As token after token, and way-mark after way-mark he passes in his voyage, his heart glows more clearly with longings for the better land. Yes, there is all his hope. Here the home circle has been broken. Mothe , little ones, friends, one after another have whispered a last farewell, and we have laid them away in the cold charnel-house; but O, blessed, soul-enrapturing thought, we shall see them all again at home. Yes, from the cold, dreary grave that robs us of our best, our dearest friends; we turn our tear-moistened eyes away towards that sweet, sweet home in our Father's kingdom, and in faith's clear vision we can see a land

"Where all is fair,
Where is seen no broken band—
All, all are there."

Yes all

"The loved of earth will meet
Whom death has sundered here."

And in that blessed country, where

"Death enters not, and not one sigh
E'er ladens zephyr's wing;—
Unfading immortality
Is stamped on everything,"— dwell forever at home. Yes, around the dying bed of friends most dear; as we march in solemn measured tread to bear them to the narrow house; as we gather around the last resting place of their mortal remains, and gaze in the dark, cold grave, the voice of inspiration is speaking to our hearts;—thy mother, thy brother, thy little ones shall rise again at the last great day. Yes, in that glad morning when God shall be the plague of death, and the grave shall be destroyed, the way-worn, weary ones will reach their long-sought, blissful home in paradise restored.

Oh, sweet thought! "We're going home" to see the friends we love. We've been a long time away from home. We're journeying in a dark and cloudy day. Our sojourn here is in a gloomy, cold-hearted, sin-cursed, fire-doomed world. And Oh! we sigh for home; for there a cloudless day of eternal sunshine shall, by its first dawning rays chase all this gloom away. Our ardent, agonizing prayer before the throne of God is, "come and reign, Jesus, on thy throne." Oh! come, and bring thy children home. Come, and wipe their tears away; come, and ease their anguish-riven hearts, and give them eternal peace in that goodly heritage, where in quietness they shall rest from all their toils.

"We're going home." How long the story has been told. Patriarchs in olden time were not content to have their portion here. They wandered, strangers and pilgrims. But they too sought a home; a home beyond this vale of tears, a land where thorns and briars never grow—the promised land in Eden beauty fair—the paradise of God; and they will reach that home, for God has said to them he'll verify His Word and give them all the land.

And prophets too, those holy men on whom God's spirt moved in ancient days to utter words of solemn import; they, too, in strains of deep sublimity have sung of a home far, far away, in the heavenly land of rest.

And those sainted ones—apostles of a Savior's choice, have dipped their pens in inspiration's living light; and in the holy book of God have written, in "thoughts that breathe and words that burn," the heaven-born loveliness, the matchless unfading beauty, the eternal excellence, and everlasting glory of that blissful home for all the saints. They, too, have sighed for home.

Yes, for near six thousand years the universal church, in one united cry, have been praying God to bring them home. And will they not be heard?

Ah yes, our home is nearing. We can sing and pray and tell the blessed story—"We're going home," and we are almost there. A few more days of toil, grief, woe and pain; of sighing, weeping and groaning for deliverance, and home is sweetly and forever gained.

Oh, then, let faithfulness to God and our fellow men mark all our conduct here, till that blessed home is given. Let not trials, or the roughness of the way hinder us in our course but remember, that—

"Our troubles and our trials here
Will only make us richer there
When we arrive at home,"

And while we talk and sing of home, Oh! let us carefully and most critically search ourselves in the light of eternal truth; and settle the question for ourselves, whether indeed with all the holy throng we are on our journey home. If we are, all will be well. And when the King shall come, and gather all the loved ones, our rest will be forever sweet, in "our happy Eden home."

For the Crisis.

The Resurrection of the Dead.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Our friends—our fathers, our mothers, our husbands, our wives, our children, our brothers, our sisters, and the fond ones that we loved generally, in many cases, are sleeping in the cold, dark, and silent grave—mouldering and mouldered back to mother dust.

But is this the last of those lovely and interestingly, and in some instances, beautifully organized forms? Shall they never again live, move, have a being, think, talk, act, love, and be loved? What more interesting question than this can be proposed to the stricken and bereaved [illegible]? How many millions that now dwell [illegible] in gloom and desolation, would sit in the light places of joy, could they—would they answer this question in the affirmative, without a fear or doubt! How would it smooth the dreary and troubled pathway of life, to many a groaning, sighing spirit, would they simply, with firm confidence, rest in the blessed expectation of unending life beyond the forbidding confines of the tomb! See that pale, sighing mother, standing solitarily by that short, isolated grave, under the shadow of the weeping willow—her tears are falling like raindrops, and her heart is almost breaking—that little grave contains the once beautiful child of her fond affection. How dark now, to her, is the home where recently the lovely being gambolled in sunny playfulness, and where the music of his silvery voice cheered her hours of toil. How long she lingers here, as if those tones, to her, so almost divinely sweet, would vibrate the tender sympathies of her loving soul again! And will it ever be? She cannot—it is impossible for her to decide in the negative. What now, if, from yon opening heaven, an angel of the Lord, on wings of light, descends and stands before her; and in simple, positive language, declares to her, "thy child shall live again, in an all-glorious and immortal condition, literally, in God's eternal kingdom?" How would the smiles of thankfulness and joy break through her falling tears, and the spirit of divine praise lift up her burdened heart!

But she may not thus be consoled. Such a manifestation is not needed. God himself hath spoken—the Son of God from heaven hath revealed the blessed cheering truth, that "there shall be a resurrection of the dead; both of the just and the unjust."

Let the mourners—let us all, hear the word of the Lord, and believe it. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death. O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction; repentance shall be hid from mine eyes. Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto unto the resurrection of damnation."—Such is the positive language of inspiration.

The hope of the resurrection has ever been placed before every edition of the church, to comfort, cheer, and strengthen each individual believer. Abraham obtained strength to offer up his own beloved son, because he held the hope of the resurrection. Job was patient in affliction, because he believed, and consequently hoped, that though he might be hidden in the grave, God would at length "call," and he would "answer" him; and though worms might riot in his "body," yet in his "FLESH" he should "see God," when in the "latter day" his "Redeemer" should "stand upon the earth," and he would see him for himself with his own "eyes and not another." David could, with confidence declare before the Lord, that he should be quickened and brought "up again from the depths of the earth."

Isaiah could sing in anticipant triumph, "thy dead men shall live—together with my dead body shall they arise." Apostles could preach with almost divine boldness in the midst of fightings without, and fears within—perils by land and sea—stripes, imprisonments, sufferings and deaths, "Jesus and the resurrection." Agonizing martyrs, who shed their blood plentifully as the showers of heaven, and loaded the winds of the earth with their prayers, groans and sighs, could sing, as they rode on "fiery wheels,"

"We shall live again, to die no more."

When life's buffeting waves rise too high, and surge too heavily, and the mortal mariner can stay no longer above the flood—when by God's own appointment he seeks the quiet of the grave, how sweet to him is the confident expectation that the grave shall not be his eternal home—that "the sunshine of glory will beam bright on his waking, and the song he will hear will be the seraphim's song." O blessed, blessed, thrice blessed, glorious hope! If we must lie down in the dust, and be hidden in the darkness—if, before the deliverer comes, some of our number do make their bed in corruption with the groveling reptiles of the pit, then, O angel hope, spread thou thy glittering wings over dusty pillows, and loved and sleeping mortals until the dawn of endless morning.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 6, 1856.

Editorial.

For want of time, we have not been able to say much recently by way of editorial, and had we time, we doubt whether it would be best to take room that may be better occupied by others.

If the paper were the property of the editor, the case would be different; but as it belongs to the church of Christ, we think the editor should act only as a servant, doing the best he can, in preparing and arranging the food provided, so as to give the greatest amount of benefit to the household of faith.

We hope to have time soon to answer some important questions, that have been submitted for consideration.

We wish to express our thanks to our new contributors, and hope the number will be greatly increased.

Brethren and Sisters in Christ, we wish you to feel that the Crisis is your paper, and that you are responsible for its financial, moral, and intellectual support.

Make it as good as you can. Send in your best thoughts, and let us scatter them to a perishing world, like food to the starving.

We wish our paper to be one which God will own and bless, to the salvation of the people.

Time is SHORT. Work, while the "day lasts." AROUSE! No time to slumber now.

"Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find WATCHING."

To our Contributors.

Those who write for the Crisis, must have a little patience with us, their interesting communications are not lost or rejected; we shall do the best to accommodate all.

Write short articles, baptizing them with prayer, and when the subject is necessarily continued, endeavor to have each number independent in itself, if possible. In these days when people ride by steam, and talk by lightning, they wish their reading matter plain, and expressed in as few words as possible.

It is well to write out your thoughts in full, and then re-write, and condense till every word is "like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

Notice.

We conclude from some letters received, that several, who have had the Crisis in room of the Prophetic Messenger, did not see the notice in No. 44, June 25, stating that their subscription for the Messenger, expired with that number of the Crisis; hence, we repeat it now, and hope to hear from all before the close of this volume. If you do not wish to take the Crisis, please give immediate information, that we may know what number to issue at the beginning of the new volume.

An Explanation.

BRETHREN:—Several of you have written to me from different parts of the country, to come and preach with you. I have not answered your letters. You think I treat you with contempt. It is not so. I will explain the matters to you. I presume I shall not come to you at all, or at least, at present. The reason is, I have not the means. I have spent my last dollar in the cause of God and humanity. I am now persuaded that God will have me change my temporal situation in life. Just what I shall do, I do not know; but the following things I will not do.

1.

I will not beg money to preach the gospel. I do not believe God ever sent a man to preach the gospel by begging. I despise a ministerial beggar.

2.

I will not borrow money to preach with. I do not believe God ever sent a man to preach by borrowing.

3.

I will not "run in debt" to preach. The gospel commands "owe no man anything."

4.

I will not "settle down" and be a pastor, for the sake of a living. I despise the mean thing.

5.

I will not leave the "Advent Cause," and preach what I do not fully believe, among other denominations, for the sake of a living. No, I will die in the Alms House first, rather than seek such a mess of pottage.

6.

I will not leave off preaching the gospel while I can honestly procure the means to preach with.

7.

I will not cease to trust in God to provide in some way, such means as are needful.

Now, Brethren, I wish to engage in some honest, profitable business; so that I can labor week days, and preach Sundays and evenings, as God shall open my way. If any of you know of any way open to this end, please let me know immediately. If any of you know of a small farm, in any part of New England, within one and-a-half mile of a permanent High School, which I can hire for one or more years, if time continues, please write to me soon; or if you hear of such a place any time this Fall, please write. I can work, and I love to work.

The Holy Spirit.

BY J. B. COOK.

No. I.

We are bound to speak on this vital truth according to the "oracles of God;" else, we stand convicted as having "no light" in us.

To present a basis on which to stand and illustrate this foundation doctrine, I remark,—that "He who made all things is God." God is "over all—blessed forever." Hence he has not become exhausted or absorbed—latent or lost in his creation. It is written "from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." He sees "the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, my counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." "The wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain;" for a sparrow doth not fall without thy notice! This, "the godly" see and own, but the ungodly neither own, nor see "the blessed God" in any of these relations. This is the difference.

Now, as there is a Creator back of, and at present over the natural creation, so in "the spiritual" system. The gospel recognizes "the Holy Spirit," back of, and over, and present with, and in—all its operations. As the Creator stands related to creation, so is the Holy Spirit to redemption, the incipient, progressive, and yet to be completed, new creation.

PROOF.

"Holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Their words were His utterance. His presence and agency were matters of promise. This promised spirit was not the Father Almighty, as such; but "from the Father." Not "the Son" as such, but IN His heavenly "name." Not "the word of inspiration," as such; but He who brought the word "to their remembrance," to enable them to speak (not the Holy Ghost as such, but) by "the Holy Ghost sent down from Heaven." This "spirit" given at the Pentecost, was an effusion of Heavenly light and favors, distinct from the gospel—the verbal drapery of the spirit's power. "The word of the gospel"—the spirit's utterance from the Father, in Jesus' name, is the Divine presence, only in the form of promise. This promise that fills out and constitutes the fulness of "the word of the truth of the gospel," is "the sword of the spirit." It was not precisely the promised Pentecostal effusion. No. This mighty spiritual bestowment enabled the apostles to remember the word of Jesus, and bring out "the gospel" as the channel and instrument of the spirit's powers, throughout the gospel age.

This gospel system is the spiritual system; all others claiming this name, are only got up in mockery of Divine mercy: they are counterfeits from the tempter—"clouds without water;" for whose devotees, "is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." As Satan and all false Christ's are to God Almighty and his Christ; so, all "spiritualism" aside from the gospel, (the only divine spiritualism,) is a Satanic sham—an insult to the Holy Spirit.

Mark! The gospel system of motives, ordinances and agencies, is subordinate to the Holy Spirit, as the Creation of God is subject to the Creator. "The spirit" is no more absorbed in "the word" than the creature, (the product of creating power) absorbs the Creator, or than an effect, exhausts its cause. No, indeed. This spirit, as revealed in the gospel's unerring "word," pervades "the body—the church" of Christ, as an unfailing life-giving presence. It was not given like the Savior's personal manifestation, "for a little while," nor, for a part of "the body," but "forever!" Yea, for ALL who ever become "living stones" in "the temple of God." All so distinguished, "are GOD's husbandry—God's building." They are "builded for an habitation of God THROUGH THE SPIRIT." This agency exists in every member, and extends on to the resurrection, to quicken the mortal body into immortality. It is the recognized power that now transforms "from glory to glory," by the ministration of righteousness. And it will yet transfigure "the bride" and adorn her to meet "the bridegroom in all "the glory of the kingdom."

Let those who can afford it," use the world" as if it were not God's world. It does not matter that you find an excuse for ungodliness in the errors of some, as erring as yourselves.

Thus also, those who have a substitute for this Holy Spirit—or no conscious need of it—must do as they can. But as it is a sin to deny God in his own works and ways; as it is anti-christian to deny Christ, as the only Savior set forth for dying sinners, so, we read of a "sin against the Holy Ghost," that hath never forgiveness! It is safe to believe. It is best to bow; "for if any man hath not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

Prayer.

BY A. D.

"When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father who is in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly." Matt. 6: 6.

Feeling it duty to pen a few lines on this command of our Savior, I desire to be guided by the Holy Spirit. This subject would be profaned were it treated in any other way than with the holy seriousness and devout affection which we should cultivate in the closet or in secret; that is, it demands the privacy of a closet. When withdrawn from every creature, we feel deeply penetrated with the awe of his presence, and having no one else to regard, we make the solemn reflection,—"Thou God seest me." It is there each one can enter into his own particular case and draw near with acceptance to Him whose presence fills the place; and pour out our feelings, temptations and griefs to Him who knows our hearts. It is in secret that those who complain of not having the gift of prayer, can call upon God unencumbered with the shackles of the form of prayer. Here the language of an overflowing heart offends no ear, however ungrammatical, and we feel no propensity to quench the emotions of the Spirit, conscious that "He who searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." Here we may peform the secret, solemn act of surrendering ourselves to God, and the consecration of our hearts to Him in an everlasting covenant; never to be forgotten. Devout meditation is a duty of the closet; this is repeatedly inculcated in scripture. Self-examination should also attend our secret worship. Observe how Paul urges this duty,—"Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" "The world," says a pious writer, "must not dare to tread the floor that is washed with the tears of penitence; nor unhallowed thoughts to live in the air that is filled with sighs and prayers." Let all the outward service go for nothing, 'till we draw near to God in full assurance of faith in secret. O may we imitate Christ's example, who withdrew from the multitude for private devotion, to a garden, field, or mountain. Secret worship is the path to public excellence. Thy Father "will reward thee openly." Can a sincere christian live without secret worship? What would be thought of a child, who, in public, should pretend much love for its parent, but in private should treat him with coldness and neglect? Would not every person of discernment turn away with disgust at such hypocrisy? What then must our Heavenly Father think of our public services and professions, if we neglect to worship Him in private where his eye alone can behold us? We may safely say he who never prays in secret, never prays at all. O what delightful communion the believer enjoys with the Savior in the silence of the closet; how freely he pours out his whole heart into the bosom of that God who is to him more intimate, than any other creature. At his feet he lays down the burden which no other friend could lift from his shoulder, and then goes on with cheerful steps. Look at Moses, as he descends the Mount, after he has been with God, where no eye saw him but His. Look, how the sons of Israel turn away; their eyes dazzled with the glory of his countenance; they now knew what had become of him, they see he has conversed with God face to face, for the skin of his face shines with beams of glory, and they cannot endure to look upon him unveiled. We see the christian return from his closet, we had missed him,—he tells no one where he has been, but his looks divulge the secret; we behold an air of heaven about him, a beam of glory playing on his countenance; we perceive something divine in his spirit, his temper, his conversation and conduct; the beauty of the Lord is upon him in a measure, and in his company, we can feel we are with a child of God. He has been conversing with his God and beholding by an eye of faith his glory, excellence, and beauty, and has felt his matchless love and power like fire shut up in his bones. O how blessed to walk in the footsteps of the dear Saviour, and feel our acceptance with Him, and realize at all times our ways please Him, and that we are His, and He is ours.

How shameful to make public business an excuse even for neglect of retirement, when the greater the pressure and publicity of business, the more imperiously they demand that exercise in which we derive grace and honor from God. David seems to have delighted much in private meditation and worship. Elijah retired into his chamber and shut the door when he would pour out his soul to God. To David his prophetic visions were vouchsafed at the close of his private humiliation and prayer, and many others I might name took delight in private worship as well as public. But some complain of being deterred from entering the closet by guilt of conscience or some unhappy frame of spirit. Well, then forsaking the throne of grace is no remedy for a guilty conscience or worldly frame of mind; no, but go to God in the spirit of meekness, and be reconciled to Him. O Brethren and Sisters, let us pray without ceasing—let us be careful to set a good example before those around us. O how apt we are to ask amiss of God that we may consume it upon our lust; and how often do we ask God for certain blessings, and then go on forgetting what we asked for. O, let us ask in faith, and then live as though we expected to receive what we asked for.

How soberly and righteously ought parents to walk before their children, and keep in mind that they have got to meet them at the judgment. Are we doing all we can for the bleeding cause of Christ? Are we measuring ourselves by the word of God, and living out his commands strictly? O God help us to do right, keep us from wounding thy cause,—and Brethren and Sisters, if there are conflicting views on points of scripture, do not let that cause you to throw away this or that Bro. or Sr., no matter if they do not think just as dear self does, we can love them just as well, or ought to. May God be with us and guide us by his Spirit, is my prayer.

A Statement.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

TO THE READERS OF THE CRISIS:—Having intimated in a letter from Chicago that a farther statement of facts might be looked for respecting my recent tour West, and its results, and finding it impossible to proceed at once to those places where Brn. may wish to see me and hear from me: I avail myself of this medium to set forth all those things which might interest my friends, and answer any queries in the minds of the curious.

First, then, it was known in the outset that I had no means to take my family West in the spring.

It was also plain that my wife had no health to endure the privations of settling in an entirely new country, without proper previous preparation. To make such preparation, as well as to secure a place, was my object in going out early in the spring, as also to secure a company to settle with me.

It is likewise known that my boy who has been suffering at times, with lung complaint for years, was suddenly taken down worse, and entirely prostrated for several weeks, immediately after I left. His health is now somewhat improved, but with insufficient strength to labor.

That we did not obtain a place in Minnesota is to be attributed to facts and circumstances which could not have been fully provided against. This affected me most seriously; since I would, at best, have to return for my family, which would require several months; add to this the fact that some six or eight men, mostly with families, did not arrive till a month after we did and expected them; with our entire ignorance of their whereabouts, also some we expected to go with us did not, and farther, that those who were on the ground were not prepared to do anything except to pre-empt which we were unwilling to undertake, and the difficulties will appear and at once show the poor policy, if not impracticability of the object at first contemplated. The testimony of brethren out West, and of reliable gentlemen of my acquaintance may be taken if desired, to show that this is a correct view.

Secondly, I was taken sick in Chicago with lung fever, which I succeeded in breaking, but was left with an inflammation of the lungs for four or five weeks, in addition to which I suffered indescribably with inflammation of the eyes, which has left the eyes exceedingly weak yet; all this prevented me from preaching for awhile, and incapacitated me for business of any kind.

This was my peculiar misfortune; especially as in this respect I incurred considerable expense; still, by the aid of friends, with prudence and expedition, after I sufficiently recovered, I was enabled to pass to the work of preaching without a great expenditure. I had not much to expend.

Thirdly. The purpose of settling as originally intended, having been frustrated, I did to the best of my ability, and still think to the best advantage, the business of those parties who entrusted business to me; and am happy to say that my relations with those gentlemen are perfectly satisfactory.

Fourthly. I will state the reasons of my return. I intended when I left New England, to return by the first of July, I did reach home by the first of June. In leaving the West I was obliged to refuse calls in various places; and one region of the field where I had good prospect of effecting good for the cause, and of being sustained in the work; but the afflicting circumstances of my family imperiously demanded my return East.

When I left the Mississippi river, I was not able to begin the work necessary to prepare for a residence, either as it regards health or means. My strength, which, owing to a fine constitution, has been adequate to labor in all the conditions incident to our work, is very far from that state now.

Believing that the word of life was still demanded by the people, and having received it, I have labored thus far since my return in this state, preaching every Sunday, mostly three times, and some during the week. I have received not half enough to support my family. I suffer a constant anxiety and embarrassed state of mind on account of my wife's feeble health; who, without sufficient strength to do her own house work, has resorted to taking work from the shop, contrary to protestations, to keep the family from beggary. Should I not then have returned, and for the present, labor as I might find openings in the East, and provide, if possible, for my own household?

In conclusion: I remark that, to say nothing of my relations and prospects in the Methodist church, I have since 1832 been preaching the near coming of Christ, and kindred topics, required to awaken the world and save the church, in these last days; and have refused all inducements to leave this work. Having been in the field, it presents the only home to me even in view of all its vicissitudes. I have refused to practice medicine, to which I have been urged by experienced and scientific physicians, or even to take patients; but if I do not find encouragement in my own proper calling, I may have to turn my attention to business.

I was embarrassed at Chester Factories, and found it necessary to remove to a location where my family could have an entirely different situation.

At that place, where we resided nearly ten years, and most of the brethren in the ministry know with what labor and privation; entertaining "good, bad, and indifferent" connected with the cause; sometimes deceived but oftener having "angels," it was a continued scene of sacrifice, toil and trial to my wife, with almost an entire deprivation of privileges such as a minister's family should enjoy.

We have no disposition to shrink from any of the responsibilities of the gospel work; but a determination to rear the family in the fear of God, by a proper and thorough moral and intellectual training, even if we are told there is no need of attention to their education, "because the Lord is coming." The fruits of that sentiment have been sufficiently seen. "We continue to the present," &c.

I find one of the defects of our plan, if plan we have, is, that if a preacher is absent in a distant field, he returns to know nothing where his labor may be required or adapted, and to find his old acre turned to other products, or gone to a deserters.

This much I wish to say; and shall not obtrude such matters upon your attention farther, now, or hereafter.

Yours, &c., W. S. Campbell.

Letter from Bro. N. Tuttle.

Bro. Grant:—I am taught in the good book to "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ," and by what I see in the Crisis respecting Bro. Turner's debt, I think the burden is too much for him to bear alone; for he has labored for the good of the Brethren and Sisters, and with an eye, we think, single to the glory of God; and if we are members of the same body, can we look on and think it is nothing concerns us, when we are taught in the same good book, that if one member suffers, all of them suffer with it, so far as we have knowledge of their sufferings?

We are taught by Jesus Christ to do unto others as we would wish to be done by. Bro. Turner now appeals for help, and Brethren and Sisters, let him not ask in vain, but let us cast in our free will offerings, knowing that God blesseth the cheerful giver, and that it is more blessed to give than to receive. For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. Clark H. Morgan.

Bro. Grant:—Dear Sir: I trust you will pardon me if I trouble you with a line. The various capacities in which you act, as an Evangelist, Pastor, Editor, afford you little time for the perusal of letters unless necessary.

But while I have been from my Connecticut home nearly eight months, hearing but two Advent sermons in the time, my heart has ofttimes been made sad by my reflections. Well do I remember the first time Bro. Matthewson came to our place—then on old Kent Mountain—to proclaim the glad tidings of the kingdom near. The effect of the labors of that man and my beloved father, are recorded by the pen of angels. Though we were twice stoned, (which made us much expense) and would probably have been, like Paul, beaten with stripes, had not God interposed, yet we never regretted the stand we took upon this mighty platform, founded on the eternal truth of God. O glorious truth! Amid all the ridicule the world can rally, still this mighty car of God's truth moves unshaken. Who that has watched the movements of divine power, can but exclaim—"God moves in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform." While in this corrupt village, necessarily mixing with the profane, the ungodly, the careless and the thoughtless, I have endeavored to let my "light shine." I am grateful, that I feel confident of doing some little good. I have boarded with the Methodist clergyman of the place, and have not shunned to declare what I believed to be the "counsel of God." Of course it meets with much prejudice.

May the Lord give you grace to act according to His will, and give you a portion of good things in this life, and in the "world to come, life everlasting."

Cordially, your Bro.,

C. H. Morgan.

Obituary.

Died in New Boston, N. H., of consumption, Sr. Eliza T. Andrews, wife of Bro. Joseph Andrews, aged about 41 years.

The subject of this notice was formerly a member of the C. Baptist church in New B., but in the preaching of Christ's advent about 1843, she became interested, and finally embraced the faith of our Lord's speedy coming; and in this faith she lived till she fell asleep in Christ, in the hope of soon being made immortal from the dead, at the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. T. M. Preble.

Died in Bangor, Me., April 12, sister Mary, wife of Bro. Moses Grant, aged 38. Sister G., embraced religion in the winter of '44, and was baptized by the writer in the town of Lowell, Me. Her privileges were small till last summer, when she came to the city of Bangor, where she had the privilege of meeting with those that loved the coming kingdom. She died in hope of being raised to immortality soon.

A discourse was given by the writer from John 11: 24, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day."

N. F. Nason.

July 4th, 1856

[This should have been inserted earlier but was accidentally overlooked.—Ed.]

Died in this city, 28th inst., Albert, son of Bro. W. C. Stone, aged 14 years, 4 months.

Bro. Grant:—As you know, I have been made to drink a little deeper into the cup of sorrow of late. The enemy has made a breach in our little circle. One has been prostrated by the fell destroyer, whom a few weeks ago, we looked upon as the most robust of our number. Albert has passed away as a dream of the night. I had hoped that the Life-giver would come before we should be broken in upon, but it is not the will of the Lord. I submit to him. I rejoice that the cup of sorrow may be sweetened by the consolations of the gospel. Here our breasts may swell with grief, and tears gush forth because of the absent one; but praise the Lord, there will be a time not far distant, when sorrow will give place to joy, that never afterwards will be mixed with grief. Life there, never will decline,

"But there eternal youth shall bloom,
And bright shall beam each eye."

W. C. Stone.

Boston, Mass., July 31, '56.

Died in Litchfield, Conn., July 22, 1856, Mary, wife of Milo Beach.

Sister Beach was confined to the house about two weeks before her death, and was aware that her departure was at hand—she gave directions in regard to temporal matters, the disposal of her property, and was entirely resigned to the will of God, knowing that when the Chief Shepherd should appear, she should appear with Him in glory.

Domestic Summary.

Wreck of Twenty-Nine Vessels—Loss of Life—Provincetown, July 30.—We learn from a letter dated Green Island, Straits of Belleisle, July 7th, from Capt. Cook, of brig Samuel Cook, that during a gale on July 1st, 29 vessels went ashore at that place, two of which belonged to this port, the brig Samuel Cook, and schooner Lousia. The brig will be taken off if possible, but the schooner will not be got off. 353 men are living in tents on the island. But one vessel rode out the gale.

The gale was the most severe ever experienced by the oldest inhabitant.

The Mormons.—The Fort Desmoines (Iowa) papers give some details of the passage of a band of Mormon emigrants through that place a few days since. In the broiling sun these poor creatures, the majority of whom are women, moved along slowly in Indian file, dragging behind them in little carts the necessaries for the journey, sometimes two women dragging the cart, at other times a man and a woman together.

The company was from Europe, and mostly consisted of English people, who had left their comfortable homes, their early associations, and all the attachments which render the English people such unwilling emigrants, and here, with a journey of more than a thousand miles before them, of which two hundred would be through a perfect desert, without shade or water, these miserably deluded people were trudging forward.

From Kansas.—A telegraphic despatch from Rock Island, July 25, says that Gen. Stringfellow, and other citizens from Preston, issued a hand-bill on July 8, calling on all Missourians to go over to Kansas before August to vote at the November election under Toombs' bill.

Lane's party of 200 persons, including women and children crossed the Missouri to Nebraska City on Monday. Gen. Smith says if Lane enters Kansas he will arrest him if it costs him $500. Lane will remain in Iowa unless the Missourians attempt to intercept his party.

At St. Joseph, 600 Missourians are said to be organized to intercept Lane's party. There will be a battle if they attempt it. At Nebraska 90 Chicagoans and 30 Massachusetts men are expected to join Lane. At Council Bluffs, 520 miles west of Iowa City, there are 300 Mormons, and several hundred others near; Gen. Harney left there on Monday for Kansas.

Return of the Great Comet.—The astronomer M. Babinet, member of the Academy of Sciences, and M. Bomme, of Middleburg, Holland, have been making some investigations in respect to the return of the great comet which appeared in the year 104, 392, 629, 975, 1264, and 1556. The result gives the arrival of this rare visitor in August, 1858, with an uncertainty of two years, more or less.

The Trans-Atlantic Telegraph—The submarine Cable laid in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.—Sydney, C. B., July 12.—The Sub-Marine Electric Telegraph Cable, for the New York, Newfoundland, and London Telegraph Company, has been successfully laid across the Gulf of St. Lawrence, between Cape Ray Cove, Newfoundland, and Ashby Bay, Cape Breton, a distance of 85 miles, and messages are now being freely transmitted from shore to shore.

The Company have now seven hundred men at work on the line in Newfoundland and Cape Breton, and it is confidently expected that the whole line will be completed, and in successful operation between New York and St. Johns, N. F., the first of Sept. next, and between St. Johns, and London within one year thereafter.

We understand that Cyrus W. Field, Esq., one of the most prominent members of the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company, will leave for Europe this week, to complete arrangements for the immediate commencement of the trans-Atlantic line.

Fourth of March.—Why Selected. Do our readers generally know the reason why the Fourth of March was chosen as the day for the inauguration of the President of the United States? It was selected because the Fourth of March in every year, commencing from the first inauguration, cannot come on a Sunday for at least three hundred years. This fact shows the great regard which the framers of our Government had for the Sabbath."—Rural New Yorker.

Now the above is utterly false. Every day of every month falls on each day of the week four times in each successive cycle of 28 years. The 4th of March fell on Sunday in 1804, 1810, 1821, 1827, 1832, 1838, 1849, 1855, and will so fall in 1860, 1866, 1877, 1883, 1888, and 1894.

At the second inauguration of Monroe, in 1821, and that of Gen. Taylor in 1849, the 4th came on Sunday, and the inauguration had to be deferred to Monday. Persons must ache for new errors, when they originate or give currency to a statement so at variance with truth!—Adv. Herald.

SPAIN.

A formidable insurrection has broken out in Spain. The imbroglio began by the opposition compelling Espartero and ministry to resign, and the appointment of a new ministry, viz.: O'Donnell, Minister of War; Deay, Foreign Affairs; Cantero, Finance; Rosas, Interior; L'Ilzdaga, Justice; Ollado, Public Works.

Espartero is supposed to have left Madrid. At least it is not known where he is.

Immediately on the new appointments, the insurrection broke out in Madrid. The National Guards assisted the citizens in erecting barricades, and, being attacked by the troops, fighting ensued in the streets for twenty-four hours, with much loss on both sides.

On Tuesday, the 15th, at 4 P. M., a suspension of hostilities was agreed to until 5 o'clock, to allow the insurgents to make submission. Fighting seems to have been then resumed, for the next accounts we have is a government despatch, dated Madrid, 4 P. M., 16th, stating that the insurrection is suppressed, excepting a few bandits, one band under command of Pachita, the celebrated bull fighter.

The Queen presented herself to the combatants, and a government despatch says she was respectfully received, but other statements say the insurgents proclaimed a republic.

Gen. Eufante, President of the Cortes, commanded the insurrection. O'Donnell was appointed to the new Municipality of Madrid, and has declared all Spain in a state of siege. He is acting with rigor, but Paris despatches say that the French government do not believe in his remaining master of the situation.

O'Donnell, by decree, dissolves the National Guards, and calls on them to deliever up their arms.

General Eufante assembled the minority of the Cortes, but O'Donnell caused them to be dispersed.

Another account says that the Queen appeared on the plaza in tears, and besought the combatants to cease, and that it was owing to her intercession the armistice of one hour was agreed to.

Gen. O'Donnell's despatch says he hopes to suppress the insurrection, from which it is surmised that the revolt is yet unquelled.

The revolt has broken out at Saragossa; all Arragon is more or less in insurrection, and fears are entertained of an outbreak at Barcelona.

THE MAN DEMON.

The Paris correspondent of the London Court Journal writes as follows:

The wonders of Signor Ragazzoni, whose approaching departure for London fills us with dismay, have been exhibited at the Tuilleries. This wondrous magnetizer, called the "man-demon" in Italy, has produced more surprising effects in magnetism, than have ever been witnessed before. The experiment of striking senseless was repeated the other night at St. Cloud, and filled the beholder with amazement. Signor Ragazzoni placed himself at one end of the long gallery of the palace, upon receiving the indication in writing of the person chosen from among the company to serve as an example of his power, outstretched his hand towards the victim, who instantly fell, struck as with the lightning's blast, stiff and senseless on the floor. So long as Ragazzoni willed it, did the patient remain thus stretched out before him, to all appearances dead—for it seems that this magnetiser is the first whose power has been strong enough to stop the pulsation of the heart. Another gesture and the patient rises—wondering what has happened, and why he is lying thus irreverently before Imperial greatness on the ground. After the exhibition of these and other curious experiments, an Italian singer, just arrived from Florence, was introduced under the auspices of the Princess Matilde, and sang with great eclat the andante of Vaccai's bravura, "La Romeo." The allegro followed, and the cantatrice was rushing from the top to the bottom of the clavier, sending out rockets and blazes of harmony to the great delight and admiration of the company, when the Emperor, who was seated at the further end of the room made a sign to Ragazzoni, who was standing at a distance behind the singer—the "man-demon" stretched forth his hand towards her, who suddenly, as if some infernal power had seized her in its grasp, the singer paused, with staring eyes and mouth wide open—the note unfinished died away; and, after two or three gulping efforts, she gazed around terrified—then, falling forward on the piano, burst into tears. The audience, believing the effect to be produced by timidity, applauded to the utmost, encouraging her by every means in their power—but to all the kind inquiries of the ladies she could return no answer. Her voice was paralyzed, and all she could do was to point to her throat with a piteous expression of countenance, and shake her head in despair. Another sign from the Emperor, who had been much amused at the scene, Ragazzoni stretched forth his hand once more, and then the spell was unloosed—the poor cantatrice could thank, with all the volubility of her country, the courtly audience for the interest they had expressed, and give way to the pent-up words which came rushing in a torrent to her lips; but the emotion had been too violent, nothing could induce her to resume her cavatina, and the concluding notes of "La tremenda necise spada" remain yet to be sung before we can judge of the power of her contralto notes, by the famous phrase of that air, which has been the stumbling-block of so many singers, and made the fortune of Giulio Grisi.

TERRIBLE COLLIERY EXPLOSION IN SOUTH WALES.

The London papers furnish us with the details of the terrible explosion which occurred on the 15th inst., in the collieries at Cymmer, in the Rhoudda valley, about 14 miles above Cardiff. It was attended by a frightful fatality, not less than 110 miners having been killed.

ITALY

Naples letters say that signs of a revolt are more frequent, and even the army are discontented. Government increases its securities.

Austria has sent another note of remonstrance, and a letter in Borsenhall says if not attended to, a special ambassador will be sent to Denmark for categorical guarantee. Austria is supposed to be acting by instigation of France.

RUSSIA.

The Crimea was entirely evacuated, excepting the allied ships carrying away hewn stone and iron from Sebastopol.

Independent Camp-Meeting and Conference at Wilbraham.

We have in conformity with the wishes of many Brethren, decided to hold a Camp-meeting and General Conference at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence on Monday the 18th of August. We call this an Independent Camp-meeting and Conference, because we intend that it shall be independent of all sectarianism and partyism. We invite all to attend it who are interested in, and love the immediate appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ. We expect at this meeting a general gathering of the "waiting ones." It seems to us that it cannot be otherwise, as this will be the only camp-meeting of importance that we contemplate holding this season, and this will be centrally located for the friends of the cause.

Come Brethren and Sisters, in the Lord's name, help! Make all the preparation you consistently can to attend, we beseech you, for "is there not a cause?" We feel lonely and pilgrim-like, and it will be well to meet, and greet, and cheer each other once more on the journey. Will you come from the East, and West, and North, and South, and sit down, once more in the anticipation of the kingdom?

The objects of this meeting are three-fold.

1. To comfort and strengthen one another.
2. To endeavor to benefit, with the truth, all who will attend the meeting, who are not yet ready for the kingdom.
3. To consult, in conference, as to what is duty in relation to the various branches of public work, as the people, and especially the ministers, of God.

Let all preaching brethren, who can possibly, be present. We shall expect each Bro. and Sister at this meeting, to speak and act as he, or she may think God requires, with a view to the best good of all concerned. We desire no public debates or controversy, but let each speak independently of others, and in the spirit of Christ. It is the general desire of the friends that Bro. Munger be Superintendent of this meeting, inasmuch as his acquaintance with that part of the country and long experience in these matters render him the fittest person that can be selected. We can all confide in his integrity and faithfulness. We trust he will comply. We would say in conclusion, that it will be well for our friends in all parts, where they can, to associate and prepare tents and bedding, &c., for themselves, so as not generally to be dependent, as many individual cases must necessarily be. The cloth which is used for tents can be taken by the several families which purchase it, after the meeting, and be used for domestic purposes. In some cases, tents may be more cheaply hired. We will try to get the fare on the railroad from Boston to Wilbraham reduced, if possible, and thus help our Eastern friends; and should we succeed, will give notice in season. Perhaps other brethren will do the same on other railroads.

Get tickets for North Wilbraham—the Camp-ground is near the North Wilbraham depot.

And now, Brethren and Sisters, we submit this matter to you in the Lord. Act right.

Edwin Burnham,
For many Brethren.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Coug and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Austin Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. [illegible], Boston, Mass.

O give me a Home.

BY [illegible].

Air—"O give me a home in a foreign land."

O give me a home in that promised land
Where the saints shall meet in a happy band—
Where the millions of ages who holy have lived,
Redeemed from the earth, in Paradise saved;
In anthems of praises together unite,
Swelling loud their glad notes in blissful delight.

O give me a home where the lowly live,
Where the peaceful and meek their joy receive;
Where the sighing ones and the weary rest,
With the smiles of their Savior forever blest.
Where the pure in heart their God shall see,
And dwell in his kingdom, eternally free.

O give me a home where the darksome shades
Of death are unknown,—where nought ever fades;
Where eternally blooming those forms we've loved
Shall shine in the presence of angels and God;
With Christ's glorious likeness in beauty divine,
The pure starry radiance of heaven outshine.

O give me a home where the tear-drops ne'er flow
From eyes bathed in grief, where no anguish or woe
Shall dim the existence of that changeless sphere
Resplendent with glory—unsullied with care.
Haste on, thou bright morn! I welcome thee near!
Bring Eden restored! O Jesus appear!

Boston, Mass.

From the Voice of Truth.

Call me not back.

BY L. I. LESLIE.

Speak not to me of honors now;
Speak not of things so vain—
I've parted with them all, nor would
I take them back again.
They all are gone—though once so dear,
How worthless now to me!
Since soon in judgment to appear,
My God, I turn to thee.

Speak not to me of fortune now;
Speak not to me of fame—
I ask no laurels on my brow,
No earthly, empty name;
The shame alone I now would bear
Of him who died for me;
That when again He shall appear
I may remember'd be.

Speak not to me of those who loved
Me when in folly's maze;
Nor of the hours of sinful mirth,
We spent in other days:
Wev'e parted since—a long farewell
I've taken of them all;
Then hail me not—in vain 'twill be;
I cannot heed the call.

O, tell me of that brighter shore;
That promised, better land;
Where they who meet will part no more,
A happy, shining band.
But tell me not of earthly toys,
So fleeting, and so vain;
I've parted with them all, nor can
I take them back again.

The Kind of Preaching we Need.

Conclusion of a Discourse preached in Moline, July 6, '56.

BY P. B. MORGAN.

2 Cor. 3: 6. "Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit; for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

But it is objected, that if there is such a thing as being "led by the spirit," and having its aid after this manner, then there is less need of the word of God. That is just what the Anabaptists of Germany said when they threw away the Bible, but it is a false position in toto. The facts are, the the spirit and the word agree. Again, they say its tendency is to mystify the word of God; but I would say it is what vitalizes the word of God. "The spirit giveth life, or quickeneth."

Now I would not be unfair—for I have yet to learn that it is possible to do any body, or their creed any good by false or wrong representations: but if I mistake not, the popular and opposite view is precisely this—there is no spirit to operate aside from the word; that is to say, abstractly; or, in other words, the spirit is the influence of the word. Now if that is not German neology, I should like to know what is. Hear the Savior—"If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." Does He mean the word? No. But perhaps it is said, He meant the influence or spirit of the word, then we ask, why did he not say so? Was our Lord incapable of saying what He meant? If their position was correct, then I ask, if it does not follow as a most logical conclusion, that commensurate with the amount of Bible truth we have, is our holiness? Consequently among Christians equally sincere and equally devoted, those who have the most flexible mind, the most retentive memory, and the most time to search the scriptures, should necessarily have the most of the spirit of God. If this were true, with the latter consideration, I should be almost tempted to be a monk—seek a protestant monastery and do nothing else.

As an example of the specious arguments used to prove their position, I refer you to this, one of their strongest texts. John 6: 63.

Our Lord, after speaking of the Eucharist—or the eating of His flesh—uses these words:—"It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." But mark, this is precisely the same kind of reasoning made use of by the Swedenborgians, Quakers, Universalists and others, when they attempt to prove there is to be no resurrection of the body. Paul to the Ephesians says,—when we were dead in sins, God hath quickened us together with the quickened or resurrected Christ, hath raised us up together, etc., Eph. 2: 5–6. And again in chap. 5: 14, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead and Christ shall give thee light." Now does this prove there is to be no literal resurrection of the body? Yet, just as much as the text in John 6: 63, proves that there is no spirit aside from the word, received of the Father and ministered to us by Christ; John 15: 26, and in the power and demonstration of which Paul was wont to preach. . . . .

And now a few remarks by way of application.

1. I wish to say that what was needed in the apostles' times is needed now; that is, in the way of preaching to convince and save men from sin. If they needed spiritual preaching, or that which was in the power and demonstration of the spirit, then we need it now. Some presume to think that the world is making progress in goodness, and that consequently the time will very soon be here, when this side of the day of judgment, all the world will be converted to God. But this we know is untrue. Both glaring facts and unqualified scripture prove the contrary. "As it was in the day of Noe," "so shall also the coming of the Son of man be," Matt. 24: 37–39. "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived;" 2 Tim. 3: 13. Mark,—not better and better, but worse and worse. Now under such a state of things as this, I say, if ever the gospel needed to be preached in the power and demonstration of the spirit, it is now.

2. Again, let me say to you, that this is a time when infidelity is making most fearful and unwonted progress. In the church is German neology, or rationalism; and it is taking a far wider spread and deeper hold of the Christian Church—both of ministers and people—than many dream; and few theories are more utterly subversive of God's truth than this. It is one of the most specious and popular forms of infidelity the devil ever put forth. Spiritualism, a species of Mythology, is likewise bearing with ponderous weight on the minds of thousands; and the plausible-looking philosophy of the mesmeric and psychological lecturer is uprooting the faith of thousands more. While these things are in the church, the wheels of salvation's car are clogged; Zion ceases to travail; the pious efforts of good men are hindered if not paralyzed, and the spirit of revival has almost ceased to exist in the church. Now, when such things exist IN the church, what may we expect OUT of it? The facts are, the masses are loosing all confidence in the present reality of divine things, are feeling there is no God in Israel, and that religion is only in form, or else that the present form is a mere pretention. Now in this state of things, we need in a pre-eminent degree, preaching not of the letter, but of the spirit, and in the power of the spirit.

3 These are days of peril; not merely of peace and progress as the millennialist would have us believe, but of danger, as the apostle in his Epistle to Timothy declares the last days should be; and observe, there are no days after the last. Almost all men have gone mad after the world. The spirit of covetousness has taken hold of all minds. As one of our western editors has cogently remarked,—"the world, the world, the world is the cry, though heaven weep tears of blood o'er our heads, and though the earth quakes beneath our feet, give us the world!" Now with such things, what can we expect but SPIRITUAL INDIFFERENCE AND DEATH? And if ever a heart-quickening ministration was needed, it is now.

4. Again.—However favored in doctrine or other religious privileges, we should never rest satisfied short of having with this form of godliness, the power thereof. In this matter, I know our danger; not that we have too much forever.—for I would that when Almighty God is worshipped in this place, all felt like humbly bowing on their knees: and when prayers are offered, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, I would that all could heartily and devoutly join in the responsive and scriptural Amen. But I know how easy it is to feel concerning the great question at issue between us and the other sections of Christendom—the nature of the approaching millennium—that having the most consistent, the literal interpretation of scripture, and which alone is consistent with sound Bible exegesis: and having with the scripture, the undivided voice of history in our favor, [in proof of which I refer you to that admirable work of D. T. Taylor's, the Voice of the Church on the Reign of Christ, and which you will find at Mr. Garnsey's book store], I say with all this in your favor, I know how easy it is to settle down in a kind of phariseeism, for it is nothing else, and feel that although our number is small, yet for glorious truths, as well as for moral integrity, we are unsurpassed; and thus rest down in the mere letter of the gospel, without its quickening power. I have no doubt there will be thousands of such Adventists found in the day of judgment. Let us rest satisfied short of nothing less than a religion, and preaching, that has with it the power of God. Nothing else can save us from the contaminating influence that surrounds us. Observe the only difference between the wise and foolish virgins of Matt. 25th, where we find a picture of the last state of the church; is, the wise have oil in their vessels, or the spirit of God with them, and the foolish do not.

Finally, my brethren, let me entreat you, as an individual church, to be determined to have as far as may be, apostolic preaching, and only that, not only in the letter, but also in the spirit. Be determined you will have no other. Not that I invite you to criticise every discourse you hear, to see if it suits in every minutia, your own notions: but watch closely to see if its doctrines and spirit is apostolic. And this you have a right to demand at the hand of your preacher; yea, more, it is your duty to demand this of him or of any man who preaches the gospel to you. Nothing can more effectually kill the life of godliness in a church, than to habitually sit under a cold and lifeless ministration of the gospel. Though a minister preach the gospel with the exhibition of much talent, though he speak logically, or eloquently, yet if he have not manifestly the spirit of God with him, better by far dismiss him at once; for "like priest, like people," is as true to-day as yesterday. Oh, would to God that the Advent Church and all churches would think more of these things. What strife there is for every man of talent, as they are called, and how exceedingly desirable is it now-a-days, to have him a learned man. Even among the most common men it is thought their preacher must understand the Greek language. Now while all this may be well enough of itself, yet to rest here, is to rest satisfied with the letter, that killeth—the spirit giveth life. To do after this manner, is like the Jews who cared for the annis, cummin, &c., which of themselves were well enough, but they neglected the weightier matters. Now to so much applaud the glitter of talent and the polish of scholastic lore without regard to the spirit of God is just as foolish as were those Jews.

The facts are, that with the spirit of God to assist us in preaching, we have success, without it we may arrange our discourses with never more care, but the sound is like a tinkling cymbal. With the spirit of God, truths though common-place and familiar, fall with great weight on the hearts of men, converting the sinner and arousing the backslider. Men call such, powerful preaching, little thinking why it is so. The sequel of which is this; truth whenever spoken in the power and demonstration of the spirit, is always mighty and effectual. Was this matter understood, it seems to me that on the part of the preachers and people, we might see a great reform. But this is my counsel to you; co-operate with your pastor and pray for him. If you have a Jonah on ship-board, throw him overboard and be determined you will have no other than apostolic preaching.

What is Truth! What is Duty!

BY PHI.

No. I.

These are questions equally important, and the one frequently involves the other. It was necessary for our government to know the truth of the Kansas outrages, in order to know its duty; so, of the question I am about to bring before the church.

I read in 1 Cor. chap. 14, Paul's direction concerning the manner of conducting religious meetings. He says, verse 23rd, "If, therefore, the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad? But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all; and thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth." The point I wish to call your attention to, is this; Paul is giving instructions relative to social meetings. Mark—"if the whole church be come together into one place," . . . "if all prophesy," implying that all took part in the meeting. Again, "ye may all prophesy one by one that all may learn, and all may be comforted." In the immediate connection, and without a hint at a change of subject to church government, he goes on to say in verse 34, "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." And then as if to bind it still stronger, he further adds,—"if any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord."

He says in 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12, "Let the women learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to learn in silence." But I think I hear some one say this means that women should not preach or teach; but that is not the matter under consideration, exclusively; it is a social meeting. "Ye may all prophesy," . . . but the women, it is not permitted unto them to speak," "but be in silence." The seal of the great apostle, might seem to be placed upon her lips, so as to settle the question forever, had he not elsewhere, both by word and practice, set the matter in clear light. But before we enter the opposite list, we will examine terms.

1. The church. What is it?

Ans. The mystical body of Christ. "For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body." Does this include females? It does. "For as many as have been baptised into Christ, have put on Christ." "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." From this, we would suppose that the body of Christ in some sense was equal, so that if being a Jew, or a bond-man, would not exclude from the privileges or offices of the church, neither would it exclude the female; "ye are all one." We proceed to inquire,

2. What is the order in the church?

Still retaining the beautiful figure of the body, the apostle says,—"Ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." Now if Christ has an entire body on the earth, these gifts or offices make up that body, and different members are endowed with different gifts; and in some cases one member may have many gifts, and hence be qualified to fill different and many offices. For instance, the apostle Paul says, he "was not behind the chiefest apostle, though he was nothing; it is also said of him that he was a "prophet," and that "he spoke with tongues more than they all;" and it is certain that he performed miracles. So we see that one individual is not shut up to one gift; but we are exhorted to covet earnestly the best gift, and that seems to be the gift of prophecy; which brings us to inquire,

3. What is the gift of prophecy?

The primary meaning of the term prophecy, is to foretell future events.

Secondarily, To preach and teach. "Now there were in the church that was at Antioch, certain prophets and teachers, as Barnabas and Simeon, ... and Paul." Acts 13: 1. "And Judas and Silas being prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them." "For ye may all prophesy one by one, that ye may all learn, and all may be comforted." It seems perfectly evident from the above passages—and many more might be quoted to prove the same point—that to prophesy, was not only to foretell future events, but to preach, exhort, and teach for the edification of the church. Having established this point, we are prepared to return to the question before us—did women thus prophesy under the apostolic sanction? They did. In the same epistle where Paul's instruction not to speak appears, are found directions how they should demean themselves while praying, and prophesying in meeting. "Every man praying or prophesying having his head uncovered, dishonoreth his head. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head." To be consistent with the construction some put upon the last of this epistle, he should have left this entirely out; or have said, I do not mean anything by these directions, for I have received a commandment from the Lord that the women must "keep silence in the churches." But he says, "When ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying." On his way to Jerusalem, he visits Philip the evangelist, who "had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy." But do we hear of any commandment to the contrary? any apostolic rebuke? Not a word. We do not even hear him say "I have no confidence in your improvement." But on the contrary, we DO find him commending to the special attention of the church, certain sisters. Let us examine Rom. 16; "I commend unto you Phebe, our sister, which is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea. In what sense she was a servant of the church, he does not tell us; but he does tell us that HE is servant of all. Does he mean, that he not only supports himself, but that he labors with his hands for all the churches. He tells us—"unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews. . . . "To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak," &c. The Master, Jesus, placed himself in the attitude of a servant to the disciples, and as if to clip the wings of ecclesiastical pride, he says,—"whosoever would be great among you, let him be your minister. And whosoever would be chief among you, let him be your servant." Again the faithful servant is found when his Lord returns, "giving meat in due season;" hence, Paul calls himself a "servant of Christ called to be an apostle," and the younger preachers as sons, that "served in the gospel." From the above, we might reasonably suppose that Phebe did something else beside serving tables, were she not of the proscribed sex.

"Greet Priscilla and Aquilla, my helpers in the gospel."

"Well, it is not certain what they did, but it is certain that they jeopardized their lives, helping in the gospel, and deserved not only Paul's thanks, but the thanks of the entire Gentile church.

"Salute Tryphena and Tryphosa, who labored in the Lord. Salute the beloved Persis, who labored much in the Lord." Now there seems to be a difference between these last three mentioned sisters, and the notice of Mary in the 6th verse; she "bestowed much labor on us."

In his epistle to the Phillippian church, chap. 4: 2; he says, "I beseech Euodias and Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord. I entreat thee also, true yoke fellow, help those women which labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow laborers, whose names are in the book of life." What "laboring in the gospel," and "fellow laborers" means, I am not able to say, unless it means what it does in other places, where similar terms are used. Let the candid judge.

God says by Joel, "I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and daughters shall prophesy." Peter quotes this on the day of Pentecost, and says it had its fulfillment then, for the out-pouring of the spirit was then introduced; hence, they were all prophesying. Either we are in the last days or we are not; if we are, the time is due for the daughters to prophesy. It is useless to say that the prophesying Joel spoke of, was the foretelling of future events, since there is not a fragment of prophecy, claiming to come from a female, in the New Testament. Now that Joel was a prophet of God and spake as God moved upon him by his spirit, perhaps none will question; if they should, Peter under the immediate influence of the spirit, endorses the text. If the term prophesying has the secondary signification, which is explaining the prophecies, I can arrive at no other conclusion, than that it is right, and in harmony with the scriptures, when rightly understood for every child of God to improve their talent in the vineyard of the Lord, wherever there is an opportunity.

Yours, seeking for truth that it may elucidate duty.

Northern Illinois Conference.

The Semi-Annual Conference of Adventists of Northern Illinois assembled at Shabbona Grove, Friday, May 30th 1856.

Had a season of prayer at 11 o'clock, and preaching at 1 o'clock P. M., by W. Pratt, from 1 Cor. 2: 2. Conference organized at 4 o'clock. Elder W. Pratt was called to the chair, and N. W. Spencer acted as Secretary.

Brethren N. W. Spencer, S. Marsh, A. Hurd, W. Pratt and M. Chandler were chosen a Business Committee.

Adjourned to meet at half past 9 o'clock Saturday, A. M.

Saturday morning. Prayer by W. Pratt—business of the Conference resumed.

Bro. M. Chandler had just arrived with the tent from Moline, which we expected to have been here on Tuesday. This crowded everything into a moment as it were, and in consequence, there was no time for a general report from the churches.

Brother Chandler remarked concerning Cordova, where he now resides, that they have a small church organized, numbering about fifteen. They meet in a hall. He preached a part of the time. Also preaches at Princeton, in Iowa, where there is a church of thirty members, and great interest to hear upon the Lord's soon coming.

At Moline the cause is more prosperous than formerly. Have a very interesting Sabbath School.

Brother Janes remarked with regard to DeKalb, that the cause was not as prosperous with them as they could wish. No distracting influence as yet has come among them. They have had to withdraw fellowship from six young members of the flock. Seven have removed to Iowa, which greatly reduces their number. At South Grove there is an interest to hear. At Sycamore, the labors of brother G. W. Burnham left a good impression.

Brother A. Hurd, from Union Grove remarked, that he was not a representative from any church, but that he represented our faith. There were three churches in his place. The Free church are friendly and favorable to our views, and wish some brother to come and preach to them a part of the time. Thinks good might be accomplished.

Having the tent to put up, for want of time there were no further reports from the churches.

Preaching at half-past 10 o'clock by W. Pratt, from Isa. 62: 11. Also in the P. M., by brother Chandler, from Rev. 8: 24.

Conference called at 4 P. M. A resolution was then acted upon that was passed at the Conference held at Payne's Point, in December last, viz.:

For this Conference to take into consideration the changing of it from a semi-annual to an annual Conference. After remarks from several brethren the resolution passed, making this an Annual Conference.

The following resolutions were presented by the Business committee and adopted.

1. In view of the infant state of the cause in Northern Illinois Conference, the wide and destitute field, and few laborers; and as the signs are thickening and opposing influences are increasing, we see the neo essity of more piety, engagedness, and sacrifice, in order to accomplish the work that in the providence of God it is our special duty to perform, therefore

"Resolved, That we recommend to the churches and brethren of this Conference, to appoint a committee in each church to visit brethren and ascertain what they can do to support an evangelist to travel and labor within the bounds of this Conference—the funds raised to be placed in the hands of the board, for them to disburse as the wants of tho cause may demand."

We also recommend that all become tract distributers, or place them in the hands of the evangelist to distribute as he travels and preaches the word.

The following brethren were then chosen said committee:

Shabbona Grove, S. Sherwood; DeKalb, Lee Taylor; Payne's Point, Joshua King; Amboy, S. Maybee; Paw Paw, Bro. Kidney; Moline, Bro, Dean; Cordova, Brn. Chandler and Gilbert; Somanauk, W. A. Fay; Union Grove, A. Hurd.

"Resolved, That the Business Committee prepare an address to be sent out from this Conference to those of like precious faith." Adopted.

Officers chosen for the ensuing year:

Michael Clapsaddle, President; N. W. Spencer, Secretary; Brn. S. Marsh, J. King, and W. A. Fay Directors. Adjourned, to meet Sunday morning. June 1st.

Met according to adjournment. The folllowing resolution was then presented and adopted:

As brother Himes designs visiting the West soon, therefore

"Resolved, That this Conference cordially invite him to labor among us, and we promise to co-operate with him in the great work of the Lord."

Adjourned to meet at the call of the board.

Sermons on the Sabbath by brethren Pratt and Chandler. There was a general impression upon the minds of all present, of the necessity of putting forth all our energy to spread this glorious truth.

The Holy Spirit.

BY J. B. COOK.

No. II.

Evasions.—1st. The doctrine of the gospel as to the "Holy Spirit of promise" is confined to the apostles and so denied to us.

Reply. This is a mere evasion; because the leading texts apply it to the whole "body of Christ." "As the body is one and hath many members, so also is Christ: for by one spirit are we all baptized into one body—whether Jews or Gentiles; whether bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one spirit!" This embraces the whole church, on to the resurrection. 1 Cor. 12: 12–31: 13: 1 -13; 15: 51–55. Eph. 4: 1—13.

2. It is applied as if there was "no Holy Spirit" to any save to those who are miraculously endowed!

Reply. This ignores every leading text on the subject. Nay, it flatly denies them; for, "if any man (every one, who,) have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His." Rom. 8: 1—18.

3. The "faith, hope and charity" of 1 Cor. 13;, is dis-associated from "the spirit" named in the context. The spirit, it is said, ceased, while "faith, hope and charity remaineth" to and in the church.

Reply. This denotes profound ignorance; or a culpable disregard of the apostle's own plain words.

a. Paul makes no such hint as that which is assumed to evade this truth.

b. The assumption flatly denies all that the apostle does say! So far from affirming the spirit of himself and other inspired men, was to cease with them; or saying that "faith, hope and charity" would characterize the church of Christ in ages after theirs, he uses the first person including himself, twenty times.

c. The apostle teaches that the crowning gift of the spirit—the grace that saves—is not confined to "tongues," or "healing, or to splendid alms-giving." No. The divinest bestowments of God's spirit embrace mental and moral qualities. "Faith, hope and love, the greatest" of which "is love! for God is love!" This assertion covers Paul and all "the called, the chosen and the faithful."

4. The Lord's prayer has been quoted—"thy kingdom come," as if the omission of the spirit in those clauses could be an argument against prayer for spiritual aid.

Reply. The paragraph on prayer containing the form called the Lord's prayer, culminates in this sweet assurance. "If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father GIVE THE HOLY SPIRIT to them that ask Him!" Luke 11: 1–13.

Mark! This promise of the spirit is commensurate with our use of the Lord's prayer. It is co-extensive with our need of forgiveness, and "daily bread."

5. An evasion that should, perhaps, end this series, has been based on John 17: 11. "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me." But this unscriptural, irrational and evasive argument against "the spirit of promise," grows out of "an evil heart of unbelief," that ignores the three foregoing chapters! The veriest child can read the promise of the Spirit in John 14, 15 and 16. "The spirit" is there the crowning theme of Divine promise.

But after so much said by our Lord in that ONE discourse, an omission of the word in chap. 17, is taken with sophomorean, philosophic pride, as an argument against the promised spirit that fills and crowns and consummates all divine bestowments. It is the Christian's highest good and greatest glory to say, "we have received not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God—the spirit of His Son!"

The ostensible ground of all these puerile evasions has been, to honor "the word," the holy scriptures—and its ministration.

But Mark! This unwarrantable turn seems less excusable than the original evasions themselves. It involves a plain and palpable contradiction. The fullest, divinest promises of the gospel to be enjoyed here, are those which specify the spirit. "The word" that relates to this subject is all that we want to perfect or express our faith. This "word of promise" the objector takes away, or explains away, and refuses it to the household of faith." He fain would exalt some other theory, so as to contravene the divine.

The prevailing mis-apprehension of this great subject—the want of the spirit,—is seen and felt. But the calamity is increased by covering up and perverting "the word of promise." Let us have and hold the doctrine of the spirit in its God-given form and fullness. Then while the multitude mistake other spirits for the Divine, let us ask and receive "the Holy Spirit," till we shall be "filled with the spirit." Let us "know that we are of God, because God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into our hearts." Gal. 4: 6; 1 John, 5: 19. The spirit on Moses was put on the 70 elders! The spirit of God's son must rest on us, or we shall never belong to Him nor make part of his heavenly "household."

If he is ungodly who refuses to acknowledge God Almighty as he is revealed, then for a like reason, he who fails to acknowledge the Holy Spirit in his official character as revealed in "the word" is un-spiritual, and of course, so far un-christian!

To be among those of whom it is written—"having not the spirit,"—is to be without the crowning bestowment of the gospel age.

It is certainly christian to accept the promise of Christ on this vital doctrine, for ourselves. It is also christian to try to correct those who strive to evade the application of these Divine promises to the church of Christ. Amen.

Practical Stories.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Now I am going to write a few practical stories. First, on liberality. There was, some few years since, an aged, and good friend of mine, living in the town of Stratham, N. H., who possessed a comfortable quantity of this world's goods, and who was very liberal, devoted and godly. Well, this man used to entertain a great many of the people of God, from time to time, and especially the ministers. This man had worldly and covetous neighbors who had much to say about his wasting his substance on these running about preachers," and lazy "christians" and all that. But it did not have the least effect on his christian mind to hinder him from doing his duty in the fear of God. They even went so far as to predict that he would be eaten out of house and home; but the more they expected him to become poor and embarrassed, the more he seemed to prosper and increase. At length there came a succession of years in which there was a great scarcity of grass and hay; and as the ministers continued to call on the dear old man, and put up their horses, the people all round were very confident they certainly should have to help him in the spring, to keep his cattle and sheep from starving. But the spring came, and the neighbors, nearly all lacked hay and fodder, while that of our friend was still abundant, so that he could help them. This was a poser to them. So some one called on him, and asked him what it meant? "O," said the humble christian, "I can tell you the reason I have hay; it is because I keep the horses of the Lord's ministers; if you will only put up the horses of the Lord's ministers, your hay will hold out well enough!

Moral. Is there not a text somewhere that reads like this, "There is that that scattereth and yet increaseth?" seems to me I have read such a text in an old book somewhere.

Another. Bro. ——, in the State of Maine was very liberal, and yet he seemed to prosper wonderfully. He always kept open doors for all saints.

But he was sure to do all that he did for Jesus' sake, even if he only gave a cup of cold water to one. Well, his prosperity excited the covetousness of one of his neighbors, who went to him and asked him how he contrived to get along so well. "Why," said he, "because I give part of what I get to others." This was a new idea to the man; and he went home resolving, "I will make an experiment." So he just went and gave a man who was poor, a sum of money—five dollars I think—and waited the result. The result was, the next day or two he lost ten dollars out of his pocket! When he inquired, "what does it mean?" the answer was, "what was your motive in giving?"

Moral. God will not allow people to speculate or experiment on his commands. People should do what they do for the Lord's sake.

Another. One of our congregations in N. H., is in the most flourishing condition—a house full of people—prayer-meetings excellent—preaching acceptable—no divisions among them; a good chapel; souls converted among them from time to time; and the blessing of God continually resting upon them. What is the reason?

Ans. They serve the Lord—take care of their own poor—and treat their ministers liberally and kindly.

Moral. God blesses those who bless others.

A Few Scattered Thoughts on Practical Religion.

BY A. D.

How I love this good old religion that is practiced, as well as talked and prayed. What obligations we are under to serve God, and how sincerely we ought to love him. He is worthy of all the love which we poor mortal creatures can bestow. We should practice this love as well as talk it. O how much talkative religion there is in this our day, but how little practical, inward, pure religion, that will break down pride and a haughty spirit, and will strip us of costly apparel, gold and silver, and make us forsake the outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and such like. O the danger of having a form without the power! What an abomination in the sight of the Lord, who looks at the heart, and is "no respecter of persons." Blessed be his holy name that it is just such a way as it is; I would not have it any other way if I could. Let us strive to walk in the way of his commandments, for they are not grievous—not half,—two or three of them, but all of them; nor should it be a burden to us, but we should love to walk in his precepts and delight to share in his reproach. Praise his holy name. O for grace to love and to serve him with our whole heart, for he will accept no divided affections. Let us keep God's mirror continually before us, and pray often, for "prayer makes the christian's armor more bright." Then let us get on the whole armor, that we may be able to stand in that day, which is about to be ushered in upon an ungodly world. Pure and holy we must be in order to reflect his lovely image. We need this practical religion to fit us for that solemn day. May God keep us from a slumbering spirit. I believe He will if we trust in Him, for He has promised, as our day is, so shall our strength be, and his promises cannot fail. Let us believe in God—take him at his word. Proud, wicked unbelief! may God cleanse our hearts from this wickedness. How apt we are to spend our money, for that which is to no profit, for the frivolous and foolish things of this world, things which we do not need, and that do not add anything to our comfort or happiness, but only to gratify our natural taste, foolish desires, and worldly lusts. We are commanded to deny ourselves "of all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly and righteously in this present evil world." How careful we should be to spend our time and money in just that way that we would if the Savior was with us, as he was with the apostles, teaching and commanding us what to do. His written word should be given heed to, just as much now as ever, and just as much now as in '54, and the commandments lived out as strictly now as then. I do feel to mourn when I look around and see what a falling away there is; the body of Christ all torn and lacerated, bleeding at every pore.—What long-suffering, love, and mercy is extended to us; and though our love grow ever so cold, yet when we come to him, how willing, how ready to receive and forgive. How blessed to go to him in prayer when alone, shut in from the world, and hold sweet communion with him, and by faith behold that blessed land and view ourselves almost there. O that glorious rest, that beautiful home, where Jesus has said we should eat and drink with Him at his table in his kingdom. Who would not be willing to suffer here a little while for the sake of obtaining that blessed inheritance."

"O wished for, longed for day,
For thee we'll ever pray."

O quickly come, Lord Jesus, we long for thy return—when thou will set up thy kingdom that will never be destroyed! Brethren and Sisters, let us be pure and holy, even as he is holy, and strive to keep ourselves in the love of God and patient waiting for his appearing, yielding ourselves as instruments of righteousness to God, and lay all on the altar of sacrifice, watch continually, and be careful not to catch the spirit of the world. We need to go often to the throne of grace, and wrestle with God as did Jacob, until we get the blessing. What a responsibility rests upon Zion's watchmen! How careful they should be to keep themselves unspotted from the world—for, as a general thing, they are looked up to as patterns.

How often we hear it expressed by some Brother or Sister, that Elder such a one does not appear as he used to, or does not seem to have that interest that he once had—and also, it wont be any more hurt for me to do this thing, or that, than it will be for Elder A. or B. But let us strive to be like Jesus—let us arm ourselves with that same mind, and look at our own faults and not so much at others. We can see others faults little better than we can our own, unless we keep in possession the spirit of Christ; for the influence of the devil is so strong, that almost before we are aware, we yield to it. What a picture this world presents; wickedness increases fast, iniquity abounds, and the love of many is waxing cold. A profound slumber seems to hang over the world; scoffers are growing bolder, the evil servant is smiting his fellow, and everything bespeaks the near coming of Jesus Christ. But none of these things seem to have any effect on the slumbering mass, their adamantine hearts seem unmoved; but let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, let us strive to do the will of God a little longer; hold on, hold on, do not let the transitory things of this world draw your minds away from God, away from that Eden-home where there will be no more sickness, sorrow nor death: where we shall meet the loved ones who now lie sleeping. O that blessed home, my longing heart cries out—come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!

Glory to Jehovah's name! How I long to see that dear Savior, who once suffered on the cross for me. Praise his name! Praise him, Brethren and Sisters! Love him with all your hearts—be bold in his cause, for he wants bold soldiers to fight the good fight of faith. If you get a little cold in your minds, or feel almost ready to give up the warfare, then go to the throne of grace, plead and wrestle with God till you get a blessing, for he is always ready to hear us when we come to him with a contrite spirit. Let us serve Him with reverent and godly fear, and strive to keep self subdued. Amen and Amen.

For the Crisis

An Eastern Tour.

Bro. Grant:—For the last four weeks I have been quite out of health. Sometimes I have almost concluded that my work in the vineyard of the Lord was about done. In my feeble state, my appointments with Brn. Hemenway and Ross came on, and on learning that Bro. H. would be unable to attend, I concluded duty was made plain for me; so on the 6th of June, with but little courage, I started from home by way of Lowell, for Me. On my way to Lowell, I was cheered by meeting some of like precious faith; a sister from Holyoke, who had been but a little while with the kingdom-bound company, and still another who was one of the early believers, who had done much to enlighten others by the distribution of Bro. Miller's lectures on the coming of the Lord. And thus the time passed almost imperceptibly away as we talked over the reasons of our still blessed hope. We were comforted by the way, seeing their determination to still hold on till faith is swallowed up in sight. We soon found ourselves at Lowell, and separated. Here I stopped with Bro. Churchill long enough to rest.

Again, at five o'clock, I seated myself in the last day lightning chariots, which were to run with the increase of knowledge, and soon we passed Lawrence, and onward. As I was musing, and thinking, lonely among many, I was accosted by a friend taking me by the hand, saying, "this is Bro. Boutell, I think." I said, "Yes, that is what they call me." It was Bro. E. H. York, of Alton, N. H. Many of the toil-worn pilgrims have found a home or comfort with him on their pilgrimage. He informed me he still solicited patronage, and would wait upon customers. He also said, the cause was languishing in that region, and he wished some preaching might be had there; he would find a house for the same. The calls are many, the laborers few. He left at Dover, and, by the good hand of the Lord, I soon found we were in sight of Portland. Here we changed our mode of conveyance to the boat, which was in steaming readiness. Soon the crowd with their baggage were on board, the tackling loosed, and we on the way. It being dark and foggy, and past 10 o'clock, I soon took my berth and fell asleep. At length my unconsciousness was broken in upon by the loud call for passengers for Rockland to select their baggage. I kept still a little longer, then out and prepared to leave at Camden. As the boat neared the wharf, I could see the old pilgrim, Bro. Blanden, waiting to welcome me to his home. He took my carpet bag, and soon I found myself with his family seated at the breakfast table with some appetite to eat. Thank the Lord for his goodness by land and sea, by cars and boat, by day and night; a present help at all times. Amen.

Here I found Bro. M. Hemenway all ready to take me to South Hope, the place of our first meeting. We were soon on our way, eight miles by wagon, rough road, but it wore off and we were at the spot. Here I met Bro. Ross, my true yoke fellow, and a goodly number of believers, who had had meetings the day before in a hall. This being too small for them, they fitted up a big barn for our meeting-house the rest of the time. At ten the meeting commenced, and although rainy, enough of the faithful came together to have a good time in exhorting one another to faithfulness and love, as the day is approaching. In the afternoon the meeting was omitted, as the child of Bro. Howard had fallen asleep in death, and the funeral was to be attended. Bro. Ross preached on this solemn occasion, from Nahum 1: 7, showing the only true source of comfort and consolation in affliction. This is not the first time our Bro. has been afflicted by the ravages of this cruel enemy. A son was the first victim, then a daughter, then his beloved companion, then a child; thus his afflictions have been sore, but they died in hope. So let our dear Bro. and the remaining children be comforted—"they shall come again from the land of the enemy," and have life eternal. Thank the Lord for such a hope.

At five o'clock we met again, and things assumed quite an encouraging aspect. We had a good gathering, and after my discourse the time was all taken up in giving in testimonies by the brethren, which told that there was a stick-to-it-iveness about them which would hold out to the end. Things are growing better here, and it is to be hoped the old adversary will not be suffered to bring his chaff basket this way.

Sunday was fair and pleasant. Conference and prayer-meeting before preaching. The pilgrims from the region round about came together, and, by the goodness of the Lord, we had a good time all day. The barn was well filled, and good attention was paid to the preaching of the word; we had three meetings, and were much encouraged, hoping that permanent good would be the result. The brethren here seemed determined to live good religion, bearing much fruit; so, being good disciples, they will get the heavenly kingdom. I made a happy acquaintance with the church in this place, hoping for a renewal of it in the world to come. God bless them by stirring them up to double their diligence, letting their light shine, so as to be all ready at any moment to wing their way to meet their Lord, and "so be forever with him."

From here, as in apostolic times, we were brought on our way by the church. Bro. Walker kindly carrying us over the hill country, to Lincolnville. Here we found a low state of things. Stopped at Bro. McKenney's, and had meetings two days with them. A few came together, and we did them all the good we could, hoping that an interest might be awakened, so that they might meet together often, in love, and see a blessed revival of good religion, and better days.

Leaving them we were brought onward to Camden. Staid at the pilgrim house of Bro. Blandin over night. We were up in the morning at four o'clock to take the boat for Bucksport; thence to Prospect to meet our appointments. Here we found good homes with Bro. Cousins, and Willis. There has been quite a reaction since the time passed, and a scattering, with a kind of fearfulness about giving up the past, or receiving the present; hence there was a seeming lack of interest in the life-giving word. But we held our meetings, Friday, Saturday and Sunday; and although the weather was unpleasant Sunday, we had a good congregation. Some of the faithful came in from other places, adding to the interests of the meeting. Bro. Merrill from Newburg, and his companion, were with us, and this we were glad of, but better than all, the Lord was with us; so we could but say—Amen and thank the Lord. Thus we labor and pray with full assurance, that our labors will not be in vain in the Lord. Our interest was awakened for this people, and in leaving I could but pray the Lord to send them the gospel in love and power, that there might a goodly number be ready to be translated at the coming of our Lord.

From here, Bro. Cousins took us into a mail boat, carried us up the river, and landed us on the other side. After committing ourselves and our Bro. to the Lord in prayer, we started for the road, where we could take the stage for Orrington. We called at a Methodist brother's to make inquiry, took dinner with him, and rested awhile, having a pleasant time in giving him the reasons of our blessed hope, till we saw the stage coming. We took our seat, telling the driver to leave us at Bro. Moses Blaisdell's. No sooner were we seated, than a gentleman whom we found to be a Methodist elder, said that Bro. Wood of Orrington, one of those who expected to live till Jesus came, had, a few days before, breathed his last. I said to him I had seen many such cases for the last few years, but nevertheless, I thought, hoped, and expected to live to see the coming of the Lord. This opened the subject of our faith which was the topic of conversation till we arrived at the gate of our stopping place. Thus we go, and as we go "we preach," bless the Lord. At Bro. Blaisdell's we found a welcome, where we rested till our meeting on the 20th, with the exception of visiting Bro. Smith's, and making Bro. Ross a pair of shoes. My health is still very poor; if it were not that Bro. R. was with me, I should not be able to fill the appointments on this mission. O for a land where the inhabitants will never be sick. I long for the time to come. This world is but one great hospital—sickness, everywhere—all dying.

Orrington is the place in which Bro. Cox came into the Advent faith in its early history, and most of his church with him. Since that time, although many changes have been seen, still the sacrificing, living faith could always be found, and although this may be as low a time with them as they have ever experienced, yet there is a little life to be found even here. Our meetings commenced with a few, but the numbers and interest increased. Friday afternoon we had a heavenly time. Full congregation Sunday. Bro. Thomas Smith was with us. There did seem to be an interest awakened. The Brn. came in from the vicinity. One of like faith was with us from Woodstock, N. B. Two Bro.'s rode forty miles Saturday night, to be at the meeting Sunday. We saw most of the old go through saints, and should have been glad to have seen them more wide awake, as we are nearing the land of promise. But they did look, after all their disappointment, as though they meant to hold on to the blessed Bible. God bless them all. I was sorry I could visit no more of them at their homes, but my health would not permit. I do pray the Lord to revive his work in all their hearts Amen.

We had one meeting at the Creek. Thus ended our meeting at Orrington, and I could but hope, under God, it might prove a great blessing to this people, one that should be salutary and soul-saving in the future. May love and union be fully restored, and others added to the church, such as may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Surely it is no time to be asleep, while the last prophetic picture is in process of fulfillment. This is emphatically the time to watch and pray always; not to be overcharged in any way. This is a fearful time—our own country rocking and reeling—outbreak and bloodshed, aggression without mercy or right, crowding with the call to arms! to arms! The patriotism of '76 is awaking, excitement runs high, and will still higher. But the ballot and cartridge box and battle-field, are so inseparably connected, that the true doctrine for those who would be overcomers, is,—"touch not, taste not, handle not." "The wisdom from above is first PURE, then PEACEABLE." Be staid on the Lord, and have perfect peace. The storm must come, and nothing but the living faith will protect us here.

Monday 23, Bro. Rich took us to Brewer. Here, and at Bangor, we spent our time till Friday morning. Visited Bro. Smith. Bro. Ross attended two meetings here, I, only one, not being able. We found a few who still hold on to that faith that works by love, and makes those that have it, free in Christ Jesus. Yesterday, I we came to Holden by the favor of Bro. Cheeley, who took us to his ever free pilgrim house. The conference commenced, and our first meeting was one of peculiar interest. Bro. Thomas Smith was with us in harmony, with but one interest. Thus, the glory of God by the saving of men, was the great absorbing theme. Friday, Saturday and Sunday the meetings continued, and this was one of our best meetings. Sunday there was quite a gathering. Brn. came in from Great Works region, and there was quite a revival of interest awakened, the spirit of the Lord was present to apply the word, which did have free course. Our Brethren concluded it was one of the best meetings they have had there for a long time. I am thankful the Lord, as he has promised, is still with us. And although this is the eleventh hour, yet all who will enter the vineyard will be fully rewarded. Thus, there is abundance of encouragement to labor. The Brn. in Holden seem to be in good harmony, and, with but few exceptions, determined by faithful perseverance to overcome and inherit the land of Israel. I could but observe, that in all the places we visited, the church were encouraged, and their spiritual strength made stronger. We did, under the Great Head of the Church all we could by speaking the word of love, IN love, to strengthen the things that remain, that were drooping and ready to die.

Sunday, was a blessed good day. All the weary, waiting ones were refreshed; others heard with interest, and it was a time when seemingly, a deep impression was made ot the need of personal religion, and that speedily. O that men would immediately make sure of a good hope through grace.

Thus ended a tour of four weeks with Bro. Ross, and we separated, hoping that our influence had been salutary and saving in all the places we visited, that God might be glorified. Amen. Yesterday, by the good hand of the Lord, I arrived at home once more—toil worn and weary, but hoping for rest.

In love, L. BOUTELL.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 13, 1856.

Last Call.

We wish to say one word more about the "old debt." Well, it looks pretty small. With a little more effort, it may be easily annihilated.

Shall it be done? We do not like to transfer it to the new volume, to be there like a black spot on the sun.

We have but one more number to issue to end this volume, and we wish to have the debt close at the same t me. You will notice that it is less than twenty-five dollars.

Come, let us pay our debts, and "owe no man anything."

We feel very thankful for the noble generosity of our brethren and sisters which has been so often manifested in time of need.

Now just take your farewell look at the "old debt," and aid in burying it out of sight, for we do not intend to give but one more opportunity to view its remains.

[Ed. in behalf of the Committe.]

News.

We wish to say a word relative to the news in our paper from week to week. Those who have daily papers in our cities and larger villages may wish to see our columns filled with "selections," rather than the news, which they have already received; but not so with those who take no daily, or weekly paper except the Crisis. This is the case with many of our subscribers, and they would be very unwilling that our news columns should be omitted.

We propose, therefore, to keep our readers who reside among the mountains and valleys, posted up in the foreign news of interest, that we can gather during the week from the daily papers; also to give them the most interesting items of domestic news, excepting the political excitement of tne day, in which we hope our patrons take no part, for as the apostle says we are "strangers and pilgrims" looking "for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

It is said by Paul of the good in days by-gone, that they "confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth

Let us then live and act like pilgrim, or else admit our pilgrimage ended.

Help the Poor.

BRO. GRANT:—I am requested by Sr. A. Page, to write to the Advent believers, of all such as expect an abundant entrance into the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, knowing that none will ever find admittance only such as obey the gospel from the heart. God must and will have such as are worthy to have a part in the first resurrection, tested at all points. Sufferers test our liberality. It is painful to see the saints suffer. Sr. P. has lived with me since October last, and has been grieved, being burdened in spirit, because, as she expresses it, I am under Caesar's household, and it ought not to be so. For no saint ought to be placed there for help, unless there has been a greater than Paul, since his day, to provide for the poor saints, and we think there has not a greater than he risen up in these last days.

Sr. P. has been sick nine or ten years, and has spent all that she had. She has felt it duty to lay her case before the household of faith, and leave the event in the hands of God. She has been a believer in the advent doctrine since '43, and it has been her all. She was was one of the disappointed ones at that time, and in '54. She is now waiting and looking with much anxiety for her blessed Lord and master.

All communications to Sr. ALMIRA PAGE, should be directed to EAST CANAAN, N. H.

If any one is disposed to give her a mite, it will be received thankfully.

The Law and the Gospel.

BY W. G. DAVISON.

My mind of late, has been called up to the subject of the Law and the Gospel. I find from Deut. 4: 10--13, and Mal. 4: 4, that the ten commandments are called the Law of Moses. That it is the Law, whether reference is had to the Law of God, or Law of Moses, or the Law of the Lord; for at different times it is called by each of these names, but never called the Laws. There is one Law under the Mosaic dispensation, as there is one Gospel under the gospel dispensation. I have been led to inquire, are the Laws of one dispensation binding on those living under another dispensation, after the other has enacted its own Laws? I find from the following texts of scripture that by the deeds of the Law, there can no flesh be justified; that we are not under the Law, but under grace, not without Law to GOD, but under the L a CHRIST.

Romans 6: 14, 15. "For sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law but under grace. What then? Shall we sin because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid. 1 Cor. 9: 21. "To them that are without law, as without law, being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ")—Gal. 2: 16, "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the taith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works ot the law, for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." Gal. 3: 11, 12. "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident; for the just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith;"—Gal. 4: 4, 5. "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of woman, made under the law, to redeem them that WERE under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Acts 13: 39. "And by him all that believe, are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses."—Romans 3: 20. "Therefore by the deeds of the law, there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin." 28th verse. "Therefore, we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law."—Gal. 5: 4. "Whosoever of you are justified by the law, ye are fallen from GRACE."—Gal. 3: 24, 25. "Whereupon the law was our school-master to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith; but after that faith is come, we are no longer under a school-master."

Now to illustrate. We were once under Great Britain. Then the laws of Great Britain governed these colonies, or in other words was our school-master to bring us unto the Revolution. But after the Revolution, we were no longer under Great Britain, but under the United States—and although the United States adopted some of the laws of England, yet we are not bound to keep any law of England that is not embodied in the laws of the United States. Therefore, I come to the conclusion, that we as Christians are not morally bound to keep any law, of any former dispensation, any more than we as citizens of the United States are bound to keep the laws of England, unless such laws are embodied in the NEW TESTAMENT, and taught either by precept or example. The law ended with the introduction, or the establishment of the Gospel.

Great was the Gain—but Greater the Loss.

BY G. DILLABAUGH.

"For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away." Luke 9: 25.

The Syriac reads—lose his life or be deprived of it.

This scripture was forcibly brought to my mind this morning, when hearing of the death of one ot our citizens, and the words he made use of a few hours before he closed his eyes in death. He had four of the best physicians that he could get. He called one to him, and asked him what he thought of his cause. The Dr. replied:

"You are a very sick man."

"But," says Mr. W., "is my case dangerous?"

The Dr. replied: "I think it is."

He then called another, and asked him, and was answered in about the same manner. He gazed around for a moment, and then said:

"I HAVE LIVED FOR THE WORLD, FOR MYSELF, AND FOR MY WIFE; and now I shall die WITHOUT ANY HOPE IN THE FUTURE."

Poor man. He must die and lose his life. Willingly would he then have given his fine marble block, the most splendid in the city, the admiration ot all who pass by. But this marble block and his costly goods could not be given to save his life. No, he must die, without any hope in the future of life eternal.

WHAT A LOSS! Lost the society of a loving wife, and the circle of numerous friends, together with all his wealth for which he had toiled early and late for many years; and more than all, he has lost his LIFE, without any hope of LIFE when Jesus comes to open the graves of his sleeping saints, and to beautify the EARTH, remove the curse, and make it a fit dwelling place for the saints of God. "And THERE SHALL BE NO MORE DEATH."

O ye dear children ot God, take courage, though you may be the despised of earth—pilgrims and strangers here, without any certain dwelling place. If you have a sure hope in Christ of living in the future, you can well afford to suffer want, and be looked upon as the despised of earth —the poor of the world. Your day of rejoicing and exaltation is not far in the future. Toil on a little longer without coveting the worlding's hope. This old sin-cursed earth, where there is so much disease and pain, and mourning the loss of departed friends, is well disposed of, if you could be possessor of all, to freely give it up for an inheritance in the beautiful new Earth, with Eternal Life, to enjoy its glories and unfading flowers, where pains or aches or dying groans will no more be felt or heard. Jesus, your Elder Brother, was rich. He enjoyed Glory with his Father, but he was willing to lay it by for a little season, and become poor, yes, poorer than many of you who profess to be his disciples, that through his poverty, you might become rich; be made heir and joint heir with him of the kingdom, to die no more.

Reader, which will you choose? The present, with the prospect of laying up treasure here, with the certainty of losing it all, and your Life too, without any hope in the future? or, to be numbered with the poor of this world, pilgrims and strangers here, looking for a better country, a heavenly one, possessing a rich faith, being heir of the kingdom soon to come? The latter, is my choice. My lot is cast with the despised ones ot earth—the chosen of God—though they are few and far between. I have given up ALL for a home in the beautiful NEW EARTH. God grant that I may not forfeit my title, for a home, or on an inheritance in this old sin-stained and blood-dyed earth. I have never possessed any of it, neither do I want to. Like Abraham, I can soon pull up stake and journey on to a better spot, if such can be found.

Your pilgrim Bro. waiting for Israel's king to come and restore the kingdom.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. S. P. Green.

A few more broken lines to all the dear brethren and sisters in Christ. I cannot see any of you, and hold sweet communion face to face, but I can be, and am delighted to hear from many of you, through our good paper: and it is no less delightsome to write a little now and then, to let you know something of my feelings. To me, all things are wearing a very gloomy aspect, both spiritually and temporally. Oh, what a deadness and drowsiness prevails here; is it so all over the land? Ah, yes, "wickedness so abounds," that the love of many is "waxing cold."

O, brethren and sisters, all that are living in gospel light and privileges, be faithful a few days longer, don't give o'er—let us be more careful now than ever before; there seems to be more danger now, when nearing the shore. O, if there is a little light amongst the crew, do let it shine,—take your lamps and go around amongst all the company, and see if there is not some one burdened, or lame, so that with a little help the whole family may be able to get ashore. Ye who are strong bear the infirmities of the weak," and we that have but little strength, must improve, keep striving, do all that we can, that we may gain more strength.

My prayer is daily, that we, who profess to be looking for our blessed Lord and Master, may not only profess, but be assured that we belong to God, that we are Christ's friends, and he will receive us when He comes. I never felt more like giving up the world, and all its pride, than I do now; never did I feel more willing to see Jesus, and dwell with Him, than at the present time.

Let our few remaining days be spent to the best good of the little flock, and from that flowing fountain, drink everlasting love. Let us watch and be sober, gird on the whole armor of God, and fight the good fight.

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we do know that when He shall appear we shall appear also with him in glory." It is enough for us that we be made like our Master, when He comes the second time without sin unto salvation.

Is it not a great privilege to be called His sons and daughters, and we so unworthy? Let us all try to live up to the standard rule in all things, and at all times. that we may meet His approval when "He comes to be admired in all them that believe."

Let all christians pray for each other's welfare, and see that no more of our company go back to the world. O Lord, keep us all safe from the foe, and all the plans he is master of to draw us away from the way that leads to thine abode.

At times, the way is dark, dreary, lonesome and gloomy; and at others, my heart is all in tune, to chant forth His love and favor. Praise the Lord continually for His loving kindness. Let us be often at the throne of grace,—let us be fervent, be watchful, be sober, be kind,—imitating our pattern in our daily walk, for soon He will come; then I trust, I, with the remainder of our Father's family, shall be free from bondage.

O may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, Amen.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. V. N. Cudworth.

Well, dear Brn. and Srs., how does the call for a camp meeting sound in your ears?

The lines of the poet addressed themselves to my mind, instantly:

"The trumpet of the gospel sounds
With an inviting voice,—
'Tis music in the sinner's ears;"—

If not in the sinner's, in the last days of peril, it is in the christian's; it is to fainting pilgrims that "long have sought for a cooling stream at hand," and they must drink or die."

It is for the few travelers in the desert lone, who seldom find a green spot in the wilderness, who pass many weeks and perhaps months, without hearing a gospel sermon, or indeed, a sermon without gospel in it; for the lips that have drank at the pure fountain, or tasted the ripe fruit of Canaan, cannot sup at the muddy rivulet, or eat the husks that swine eat. It is to the soul that has "tasted the good Word of God and the powers of the world to come"—that has had visions bright of that holy land, that world of light."

Well, the great question with me is, and no doubt with many others, can I go? Many mountains arise of considerable magnitude, and the giants stand in the way, but with God all things are possible, and I leave it all with Him. If He shuts the door, it is all well, I shall not attempt to push it open; but if He opens it I shall not fail to walk through.

Dear children, let us go right to the Lord if we want any good thing; walk uprightly, and we shall get it. He is the best lawyer, if we want a case plead. He is the best doctor. He has the best bank. In short, He has all that we need—only believe—all things are possible. "Is anything too hard for me, saith the Lord?"

Well, dear children, if I come not up to the feast, if I do not share in this blessed meeting, I will try to be faithful, and hope soon to meet all the saints in the golden city; the pearly gates will be opened wide to the pilgrims there, avarice, will, pride, lust, poverty, sickness, or death, cannot close them against us then.

May the good Lord go with those that go; may peace and union, kindness and benevolence prevail: may the watchmen on Zion's walls, have the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ; they be fully impressed with a sense of the perils that surround us, giving the note of warning to the people, and the people prove their religion extends to the business departments of this life, by giving liberally, and so be blest bountifully. O may the gospel reach some poor sinners' hearts, before the great days—man stops interceding.

From your Sr. expecting emancipation speedily, VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. R. Batley.

BRO. GRANT:—I hope you will send me the Crisis again, as I am a poor man with a large family, and have but one hand, having had one amputated over 20 years ago. But I like the paper and would like to pay for it, were I able, for its weekly arrivals are truly like cold water to a thirsty soul.

How I love to look for the return of Jesus, who has promised to come again, not as a man accustomed to sorrow and acquainted with grief, but as the Lion of the tribe of Judah, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel.

Dear Bro., I thought that we should have seen the King in his beauty, ere this, but praise the Lord, he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry. Praise the Lord! O, praise his holy name! I hope the Crisis will be sustained, and I wish I had the means to remunerate you for it, but you shall have my prayers for your prosperity, and the paper you publish, that it may continue to be the herald of good tidings to the saints scattered abroad.

I remain your Bro. in Christ, looking for the appearance of Jesus.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. J. E. Clark.

BRO. GRANT:—Time hastens on, and we are nearing the port of rest. Bro. Decker's argument looks good. After hearing him at Newark, N. J., and again at Waterbury, Ct., I can say the argument looks sound, and appears to be well sustained by testimony. The saints are rejoicing in many places in hope of going home this year. History fully confirms, that the union of Church and State was completed in 521, consequently there is the true point of time to commence the 1260 years of Rev. 12. If so, they ended in 1781. Between these points of time they had the power to kill with the sword, burn at the stake, &c.; or in other words, the saints were in the hands of that persecuting power between A. D. 521 and 1781. This "little horn" power might not have tormented the saints all this time, yet it had the power so to do up to 1781. In that very year there was an edict passed, granting toleration to the saints, yea, to all was granted freedom of mind to worship God as they chose. Here the 1260 years appear to end. And this is one reason why many of our Brn. could not embrace the '54 time argument, because they saw History affirmed—the union was not completed till 521, and some said even later; but we are to be governed by the edict passed in 1781. I think this is the latest point we can extend the 1260 years. Then add on the 75 years, and we are carried to the termination of the 1335 years, which brings to the present year.

O solemn thought! The Judge so near, and thousands are unprepared, and will be, when the Lord comes. The wise virgins will heed the cry and be ready, but the foolish will go on until it is too late. The wise virgins that have oil will stand ready and watching, with their loins girt about. But the world—the cold-hearted church, and back-slidden Adventist's will scoff at and put far off the day of God, and on them Christ will come as a thief in the night.

The Lord help the people to see the truth, and when they see it, believe it, and live it out.

Yours, expecting the Lord, soon.

J. E. Clark.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. Thomas Wilkins.

Bro. Grant:—Seeing in last week's Crisis, some remarks on the Sabbath, I should like the privilege of saying a few words on that subject.

And first, in no instance in the scriptures is the word Sabbath applied to the first day of the week, and to call the first day of the week Sabbath, is therefore unscriptural and incorrect. The word Sabbath, (since the ceremonial services of the Jews ended) belongs exclusively to the seventh day, or Saturday. God blessed and sanctified the seventh day, and praised be the name of the Lord, he has not removed his blessing from it; he gave it for our good. It cannot be among the things nailed to the cross, for they were against us, contrary to us. Whereas, the Sabbath has always been for us, for our comfort, for our good. He that spake as never man spake, says the Sabbath was made for man. Some will say it was made for the Jews. Jesus says, for MAN. The Sabbath was made for all men. Jesus recognized the existence of a Sabbath long after he had nailed to the cross all that was to be nailed there; when he says—"Pray that your flight be not in the winter, nor on the Sabbath-day." As truly as there was no Sabbath, so truly there was no winter, as Jesus understood it. I believe we all need a Sabbath physically, as well as morally. How clearly God gave the Sabbath to man at the beginning: then made it one of the ten parts of his law as given on the Mount. Now I think it should be as clearly repealed before we say it is abolished. It is best to serve God though it be contrary to all the world. "Blessed are they that do his commands, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city."

Believing the cause of truth requires something said on this subject, I have written the above; and remain your Bro. in the bonds of Christian love, looking for the return of Jesus from heaven, to set up his everlasting kingdom on the earth—when every knee to him shall bow, and every tongue shall call him blessed.

For the Crisis

Letter from W. H. Wild.

Bro. Grant:—With the help of the good Lord I thought I would sit down and pen a few lines for the encouragement of those of like precious faith, who are waiting and looking, and longing for the return of their blessed Master, the Lord Jesus Christ, when he shall come the second time without sin unto salvation to give to every man as his work shall be. O, Brn. and Srs., give glory to God, for soon the heavens shall roll together as a scroll, and then shall we see him whom we fondly love.

Let us therefore fight the good fight of faith, having on the whole armor of God, that we may say when the good Lord shall come,—"lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

Then let us keep our armor bright, and be like men that wait for their Lord, when he shall return from the wedding, and call us to supper. Bless the Lord! we shall drink wine anew with Him in that very day at his table, for he has promised such to all his disciples.

Brethren and sisters, ours is surely a glorious hope; it is big with immortality. Although we are scoffed at by the world, taken up on the lips of talkers, yet, nevertheless for that eternal weight of glory we can endure it.

Think it not strange concerning the fiery trials that shall try you as though some strange thing happened unto you; no, think it not strange if they call you Beelzebub, for so they called our Master. Think it not strange if they say you are beside yourself, for so they said of our Master; but let us hold out faithful, for "when the chief Shepherd shall appear we shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

Let us therefore "be sober and watch unto prayer, for the end of all things is at hand." "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching; verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself and make them sit down to meat, and shall come forth and serve them."

But Oh, my heart aches when I see so many in the broad road to destruction, even them of my own household. We are told to "rejoice evermore," but I cannot rejoice when I see my father, my mother, my sisters and brothers traveling in the path that leads to destruction. Oh, sinner, how long will you let Satan lead you on? Will you not prepare to meet your Savior; "when He shall be revealed from heaven with flaming fire taking vengeance upon all those who fear not God, and who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ?" O do you not wish to be made like that dear Savior, and be taken into His blessed kingdom, where you shall ever be at rest?

If so, come to your Savior; deny yourself, and verily I say unto you ye shall inherit the earth, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and the time comes that the saints shall possess the kingdom.

Your Bro., looking for the blessed Hope,

Wm. H. Wild.

For the Crisis

Letter from Sr. S. B. Saxton.

Bro. Grant:—As I was going to send my mite for the Crisis, I thought I would write a few lines more, that the Brethren and Sisters might hear how we get along in this great city. We have no one to preach to us, nor do we have even a prayer meeting. The brethren are making an effort to have one if they can get a room that will do. Our number which was so very large in the beginning, has dwindled to a very few with whom I can talk on the coming of the Savior and the joys of our Father's kingdom. I love to look back to '44; and think what good preaching we had from the many brethren coming to open unto us the truth of God's holy word, and the many that saw light and rejoiced in it. I shall never forget Bro. Brewer, who was so full of the love of God,—it seemed to me that the kingdom had truly come. How happy we were, and what love ran from heart to heart when we heard the Saviour was so nigh. Well, we were disappointed like those in the parable; the Bridegroom did not come, to consummate our hope; the day passed and the trial came, and where are the preaching Brethren? and where are those who sat and listened? They are gone—some to their farms, and some to their merchandize, because their lamps have gone out, and darkness surrounds them. Some are sleeping, and few with lamps trimmed and burning, are longing for the morning to dawn. I try to have patience and keep the prize in view, but the past experience has left an aching void in my heart, that the world can never fill. I, like one of old, will never be satisfied until I arise in the likeness of my Savior, and am gathered with all the redeemed to meet the Lord in the air. The few I can talk with are believing the time very near. We feel we are ready and waiting to hear the Master's voice. It will be a joyful time to see Jesus and all the dear children, when we meet to part no more.

I wish the Crisis to continue, for it nerves and strengthens us when we hear from those we love. May the grace of our Lord with his Holy Spirit, be with you all, and may we soon cease to sing the following song, and unite in one of joy and victory.

"How long, dear Savior, O how long,
Shall these bright hours delay?
Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

Sarah B. Saxton.

Obituary.

Died, in Savoy, July 20th, Bro. Zachariah Mayhew, aged about twenty-five years.

Bro. M. has been a believer in the speedy coming of the Lord for some years, and a devoted christian. Two years ago last Fall, he commenced preaching while traveling with the writer. He has preached to the edification and comfort of the church until last Fall, when his health failed. The church has sustained a great loss. He has left a companion and two children to mourn their loss, and a large circle of other relatives; but they mourn not as those who have no hope. Funeral sermon by the writer. E. W. Tert.

Florida, July 27, '56.

Domestic Summary.

Great Flood in Florida.—The Tampa Peninsula of the 19th, gives an account of some disastrous floods, which, in consequence of heavy rains have recently visited that section of the State. The roads have been impaired by them to such an extent as renders it impossible to travel, and the immense amount of water falling in cascades, has materially injured the crops. In Hernando county, many plantations have been entirely ruined, and over a vast tract of country, the fields are submerged, crops destroyed, and the surface of the soil cut into ravines. "Alas," exclaims the Peninsular, "the elements seem to have united with the Seminoles in their conspiracy against the welfare of South Florida, and the only dependence of her citizens for sustenance is now rendered void."

Distressing Occurrence.—Mr. S. Hooper, residing near McKissack's Grove, Iowa, while driving his team past the house of Eli Slusher, last Tuesday, was attacked by bees. They made the attack apparently in three strings about the size of a man's arm, first attacking the horses. Mr. Hooper still held to the team until Messrs. Gilmore and Slusher came to his assistance. One horse in endeavoring to extricate himself broke a blood vessel, and died shortly after; the other is severely injured. They next attacked Mr. Hooper, and those that came to his assistance. Everything was done that could be to extricate the unfortunate men, but not until Mr. Hooper and Mr. Slusher were so severely injured that but little hopes are entertained of their recovery. The symptoms and sufferings of the unfortunate men resemble those of hydrophobia. Dr. Casaca is in attendance, rendering every medical assistance.—Nebraska City News, 5th.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Atlantic.

Sandy Hook, Aug. 4.

The steamship Atlantic, Capt. Eldridge, from Liverpool, July 23 has arrived.

ITALY.

Serious disturbances had broken out at Cassena, in the Papal Sates; also at Naples. At the latter place several persons were wounded, and numerous arrests were made.

A Republican conspiracy had been detected at Tarentum, in the two Sicilies, and several arrests made.

The Russian Ambassador at Rome, it is said, has arranged all difficulties with the Holy See touching the nomination of Bishops for Poland.

SPAIN.

The news relates mainly to the outbreaks of civil war in Spain. The statements representing its progress and prospects are very conflicting.

It appears that O'Donnell had previously prepared to crush any manifestation, and had assembled in and around Madrid 18,000 troops. Against this force the National Guard and citizens held their ground for thirty hours, but at length gave in, and were disarmed. Two hundred persons were killed in the emeute. At latest dates Madrid was tranquil. Espartero was supposed to be within the city, under arrest.

At Barcelona and elsewhere there had been smaller outbreaks, but they were speedily suppressed.

The head-quarters of the insurrection were at Saragossa, where Espartero's friends had gained a victory over the garrison, and where it is reported more than a legal quorum of the Cortez had assembled, proclaiming Liberty and the Constitution.

The Emperor of France had ordered a French force to assemble on the Spanish frontier as a measure of precaution.

Narvaez and other adherents of the ex-Queen Christina were also hastening to the frontier.

Arrival of the Asia.

New York, Aug. 7.

The Cunard steamship Asia, Capt. Lott, arrived off Sandy Hook about 4 o'clock this afternoon, and reached her dock about 6. The Asia left Liverpool on the afternoon of the 26th ult. She brings three days later intelligence from Europe. Her news, however, is not of special importance, excepting from Spain, where the insurrection is not subdued.

FRANCE.

The intentions of the French government regarding Spain are a subject of much speculation in Paris. It is said that if O'Donnell is successful, France can have no occasion to interfere. On the other hand should the Liberals succeed and the Queen be required to abdicate in favor of the Princess of Austria, with Espartero regent, neither would France interfere. But if the Duchess Montpensier should become next heir to the throne, or should a republic be proclaimed, then France would invade Spain.

Prince Lucien Bonaparte has gone on a mission to Madrid.

LATEST.

Paris, Aug. 24.

The royal troops are masters of every point at Barcelona, but still remain under arms. Preparations are making to execute all taken with arms.

Gerona has risen where Gen. Ruiz commands the garrison.

The London Sun says that 1200 were killed in the streets of Barcelona. The people fought behind barricades, with determined courage, for three days, when their leaders deserted them.

The Spanish government had issued a programme of policy which is, theoretically, very liberal.

A number of arrests had been made in Paris of persons who had formed groups in the streets talking of Spanish affairs.

THE STATES OF THE CHURCH.

The whole dominions of the Pope are divided into 20 provinces, of which Rome is the chief. Of the remaining nineteen, six have the rank of legations, and are governed by cardinals, whilst the other thirteen are delegations under "prelates," some of whom are not necessarily churchmen.

Both of these classes of provinces are subdivided again into districts, governorships, and communes, whose administrative chiefs, as in case of the delegations, may or may not be ecclesiastics. Of the whole of this territory the supreme government lies in the hands of the Pope and a council of ministers, of which last the Cardinal Secretary of State is the chief, and from the nearly autocratic influence of his position, is generally—as in the case of Monsignore Antonelli—the virtual ruler of the country.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

The reports from the wine districts in Portugal are most lamentable. Not only has the disease manifested itself in a most virulent manner, but in the Oporto district the vines appear to be dying and decaying, as was the case at Madeira and the alarm is consequently much greater than if a temporary blight only were feared.

Wine and corn, the two great staples of the country, are this year quite a failure, and famine will be severely felt.

The first railway in the Roman States, which goes from Rome to Frascati, was opened on the 7th.

Advices from Florence state that a negotiation has been pending for some time between the governments of Rome, Naples, Florence, and Modena, for the purpose of forming a confederation of those States, under the patronage of Austria.

Clerical Politicians.

We remember that some years ago, when temperance reform was in its infancy, e was a decided hostility manifested the part of certain of the clergy, against ing the topic introduced into their pul- on the Sabbath day. This course w down upon them the severest animad- ions of those who esteemed themselves e, in a peculiar manner, the represen- ves and embodiment of temperance ciples. The course pursued by the gy in those early days of reform, is de- ible and was perhaps, the best practi- commentary they could give of their faith in the efficacy of spiritual teach- , to meet and rectify every social and al evil; for they had read in the great rter under which they were called to ach:—"the fruit of the spirit is love, , peace, long-suffering, gentleness, good- s, faith, meekness, temperance," and y knew, if they were faithful in spirit- things, temperance must follow, as a ural result.

But a change has taken place in the ws of a majority of the clergy, and it is

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the [illegible] and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also; it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, [illegible] and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases [illegible] Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, [illegible] Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, [illegible] Boston, Mass.

We have thus far avoided publishing any advertisements in the Crisis; but as Dr. Pierce's medicine [illegible] excellent remedy in many complaints [illegible] have proved to my entire satisfaction [illegible] qualities of one of the articles [illegible] subserve the cause of humanity [illegible] advertisement to the public [illegible]

a mail boat, carried us up the river, and landed us on the other side. After committing ourselves and our Bro. to the Lord in prayer, we started for the road, where we could take the stage for Orrington. We called at a Methodist brother's to make inquiry, took dinner with him, and rested awhile, having a pleasant time in giving him the reasons of our blessed hope, till we saw the stage coming. We took our seat, telling the driver to leave us at Bro. Moses Blaisdell's. No sooner were we seated, than a gentleman whom we found to be a Methodist elder, said that Bro. Wood of Orrington, one of those who expected to live till Jesus came, had, a few days before, breathed his last. I said to him I had seen many such cases for the last few years, but nevertheless, I thought, hoped, and expected to live to see the coming of the Lord. This opened the subject of our faith which was the topic of conversation till we arrived at the gate of our stopping place. Thus we go, and as we go "we preach," bless the Lord. At Bro. Blaisdell's we found a welcome, where we rested till our meeting on the 20th, with the exception of visiting Bro. Smith's, and making Bro. Ross a pair of shoes. My health is still very poor; if it were not that Bro. R. was with me, I should not be able to fill the appointments on this mission. O for a land where the inhabitants will never be sick. I long for the time to come. This world is but one great hospital—sickness, everywhere—all dying.

Orrington is the place in which Bro. Cox came into the Advent faith in its early history, and most of his church with him. Since that time, although many changes have been seen, still the sacrificing, living faith could always be found, and although this may be as low a time with them as they have ever experienced, yet there is a little life to be found even here. Our meetings commenced with a few, but the numbers and interest increased. Friday afternoon we had a heavenly time. Full congregation Sunday. Bro. Thomas Smith was with us. There did seem to be an interest awakened. The Brn. came in from the vicinity. One of like faith was with us from Woodstock, N. B. Two Bro.'s rode forty miles Saturday night, to be at the meeting Sunday. We saw most of the old go through saints, and should have been glad to have seen them more wide awake, as we are nearing the land of promise. But they did look, after all their disappointment, as though they meant to hold on to the blessed Bible. God bless them all. I was sorry I could visit no more of them at their homes, but my health would not permit. I do pray the Lord to revive his work in all their hearts Amen.

We had one meeting at the Creek. Thus ended our meeting at Orrington, and I could but hope, under God, it might prove a great blessing to this people, one that should be salutary and soul-saving in the future. May love and union be fully restored, and others added to the church, such as may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Surely it is no time to be asleep, while the last prophetic picture is in process of fulfillment. This is emphatically the time to watch and pray always; not to be overcharged in any way. This is a fearful time—our own country rocking and reeling—outbreak and bloodshed, aggression without mercy or right, crowding with the call to arms! to arms! The patriotism of '76 is awaking, excitement runs high, and will still higher. But the ballot and cartridge box and battle-field, are so inseparably connected, that the true doctrine for those who would be overcomers, is,—"touch not, taste not, handle not." "The wisdom from above is first PURE, then PEACEABLE." Be staid on the Lord, and have perfect peace. The storm must come, and nothing but the living faith will protect us here.

Monday 23, Bro. Rich took us to Brewer. Here, and at Bangor, we spent our time till Friday morning. Visited Bro. Smith. Bro. Ross attended two meetings here, I, only one, not being able. We found a few who still hold on to that faith that works by love, and makes those that have it, free in Christ Jesus. Yesterday, we came to Holden by the favor of Bro. Clewley, who took us to his ever free pilgrim house. The conference commenced, and our first meeting was one of peculiar interest. Bro. Thomas Smith was with us in harmony, with but one interest. Thus, the glory of God by the saving of men, was the great absorbing theme. Friday, Saturday and Sunday the meetings continued, and this was one of our best meetings. Sunday there was quite a gathering. Brn. came in from Great Works region, and there was quite a revival interest awakened, the spirit of the Lord was present to apply the word, which did have free course. Our Brethren concluded it was one of the best meetings they have had there for a long time. I am thankful the Lord, as he has promised, is still with us. And although this is the eleventh hour, yet all who will enter the vineyard will be fully rewarded. Thus, there is abundance of encouragement to labor. The Brn. in Holden seem to be in good harmony, and, with but few exceptions, determined by faithful perseverance to overcome and inherit the land of Israel. I could but observe, that in all the places we visited, the church were encouraged, and their spiritual strength made stronger. We did, under the Great Head of the Church all we could by speaking the word of love, IN love, to strengthen the things that remain, that were drooping and ready to die.

Sunday, was a blessed good day. All the weary, waiting ones were refreshed; others heard with interest, and it was a time when seemingly, a deep impression was made of the need of personal religion, and that speedily. O that men would immediately make sure of a good hope through grace.

Thus ended a tour of four weeks with Bro. Ross, and we separated, hoping that our influence had been salutary and saving in all the places we visited, that God might be glorified. Amen. Yesterday, by the good hand of the Lord, I arrived at home once more—toil worn and weary, but hoping for rest.

In love, L. BOUTELL.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 13, 1856.

Last Call.

We wish to say one word more about the "old debt." Well, it looks pretty small. With a little more effort, it may be easily annihilated.

Shall it be done? We do not like to transfer it to the new volume, to be there like a black spot on the sun.

We have but one more number to issue to end this volume, and we wish to have the debt close at the same t me. You will notice that it is less than twenty-five dollars.

Come, let us pay our debts, and "owe no man anything."

We feel very thankful for the noble generosity of our brethren and sisters which has been so often manifested in time of need.

Now just take your farewell look at the "old debt," and aid in burying it out of sight, for we do not intend to give but one more opportunity to view its remains.

[Ed. in behalf of the Committe]

News.

We wish to say a word relative to the news in our paper from week to week. Those who have daily papers in our cities and larger villages may wish to see our columns filled with "selections," rather than the news, which they have already received; but not so with those who take no daily, or weekly paper except the Crisis. This is the case with many of our subscribers, and they would be very unwilling that our news columns should be omitted.

We propose, therefore, to keep our readers who reside among the mountains and valleys, posted up in the foreign news of interest, that we can gather during the week from the daily papers; also to give them the most interesting items of domestic news, excepting the political excitement of tne day, in which we hope our patrons take no part, for as the apostle says we are "strangers and pilgrims" looking "for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

It is said by Paul of the good in days by-gone, that they "confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth

Let us then live and act like pilgrim, or else admit our pilgrimage ended.

Help the Poor.

BRO. GRANT:—I am requested by Sr. A. Page, to write to the Advent believers, of all such as expect an abundant entrance into the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, knowing that none will ever find admittance only such as obey the gospel from the heart. God must and will have such as are worthy to have a part in the first resurrection, tested at all points. Sufferers test our liberality. It is painful to see the saints suffer. Sr. P. has lived with me since October last, and has been grieved, being burdened in spirit, because, as she expresses it, I am under Cæsar's household, and it ought not to be so. For no saint ought to be placed there for help, unless there has been a greater than Paul, since his day, to provide for the poor saints, and we think there has not a greater than he risen up in these last days.

Sr. P. has been sick nine or ten years, and has spent all that she had. She has felt it duty to lay her case before the household of faith, and leave the event in the hands of God. She has been a believer in the advent doctrine since '43, and it has been her all. She was was one of the disappointed ones at that time, and in '54. She is now waiting and looking with much anxiety for her blessed Lord and master.

All communications to Sr. ALMIRA PAGE, should be directed to EAST CANAAN, N. H.

If any one is disposed to give her a mite, it will be received thankfully.

The Law and the Gospel.

BY W. G. DAVISON.

My mind of late, has been called up to the subject of the Law and the Gospel. I find from Deut. 4: 10—13, and Mal. 4: 4, that the ten commandments are called the Law of Moses. That it is the Law, whether reference is had to the Law of God, or Law of Moses, or the Law of the Lord; for at different times it is called by each of these names, but never called the Laws. There is one Law under the Mosaic dispensation, as there is one Gospel under the gospel dispensation. I have been led to inquire, are the Laws of one dispensation binding on those living under another dispensation, after the other has enacted its own Laws? I find from the following texts of scripture that by the deeds of the Law, there can no flesh be justified; that we are not under the Law, but under grace, not without Law to GOD, but under the L a CHRIST.

Romans 6: 14, 15. "For sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law but under grace. What then? Shall we sin because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid. 1 Cor. 9: 21. "To them that are without law, as without law, being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ")—Gal. 2: 16, "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law, for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." Gal. 3: 11, 12. "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident; for the just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith;"—Gal. 4: 4, 5. "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of woman, made under the law, to redeem them that WERE under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Acts 13: 39. "And by him all that believe, are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses."—Romans 3: 20. "Therefore by the deeds of the law, there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin." 28th verse. "Therefore, we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law."—Gal. 5: 4. "Whosoever of you are justified by the law, ye are fallen from GRACE."—Gal. 3: 24, 25. "Whereupon the law was our school-master to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith; but after that faith is come, we are no longer under a school-master."

Now to illustrate. We were once under Great Britain. Then the laws of Great Britain governed these colonies, or in other words was our school-master to bring us unto the Revolution. But after the Revolution, we were no longer under Great Britain, but under the United States—and although the United States adopted some of the laws of England, yet we are not bound to keep any law of England that is not embodied in the laws of the United States. Therefore, I come to the conclusion, that we as Christians are not morally bound to keep any law, of any former dispensation, any more than we as citizens of the United States are bound to keep the laws of England, unless such laws are embodied in the NEW TESTAMENT, and taught either by precept or example. The law ended with the introduction, or the establishment of the Gospel.

Great was the Gain—but Greater the Loss.

BY G. DILLABAUGH.

"For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away." Luke 9: 25.

The Syriac reads—lose his life or be deprived of it.

This scripture was forcibly brought to my mind this morning, when hearing of the death of one of our citizens, and the words he made use of a few hours before he closed his eyes in death. He had four of the best physicians that he could get. He called one to him, and asked him what he thought of his cause. The Dr. replied:

"You are a very sick man."

"But," says Mr. W., "is my case dangerous?"

The Dr. replied: "I think it is."

He then called another, and asked him, and was answered in about the same manner. He gazed around for a moment, and then said:

"I HAVE LIVED FOR THE WORLD, FOR MYSELF, AND FOR MY WIFE; and now I shall die WITHOUT ANY HOPE IN THE FUTURE."

Poor man. He must die and lose his life. Willingly would he then have given his fine marble block, the most splendid in the city, the admiration of all who pass by. But this marble block and his costly goods could not be given to save his life. No, he must die, without any hope in the future of life eternal.

WHAT A LOSS! Lost the society of a loving wife, and the circle of numerous friends, together with all his wealth for which he had toiled early and late for many years; and more than all, he has lost his LIFE, without any hope of LIFE when Jesus comes to open the graves of his sleeping saints, and to beautify the EARTH, remove the curse, and make it a fit dwelling place for the saints of God. "And THERE SHALL BE NO MORE DEATH."

O ye dear children of God, take courage, though you may be the despised of earth—pilgrims and strangers here, without any certain dwelling place. If you have a sure hope in Christ of living in the future, you can well afford to suffer want, and be looked upon as the despised of earth—the poor of the world. Your day of rejoicing and exaltation is not far in the future. Toil on a little longer without coveting the worlding's hope. This old sin-cursed earth, where there is so much disease and pain, and mourning the loss of departed friends, is well disposed of, if you could be possessor of all, to freely give it up for an inheritance in the beautiful new Earth, with Eternal Life, to enjoy its glories and unfading flowers, where pains or aches or dying groans will no more be felt or heard. Jesus, your Elder Brother, was rich. He enjoyed Glory with his Father, but he was willing to lay it by for a little season, and become poor, yes, poorer than many of you who profess to be his disciples, that through his poverty, you might become rich; be made heir and joint heir with him of the kingdom, to die no more.

Reader, which will you choose? The present, with the prospect of laying up treasure here, with the certainty of losing it all, and your Life too, without any hope in the future? or, to be numbered with the poor of this world, pilgrims and strangers here, looking for a better country, a heavenly one, possessing a rich faith, being heir of the kingdom soon to come? The latter, is my choice. My lot is cast with the despised ones of earth—the chosen of God—though they are few and far between. I have given up ALL for a home in the beautiful NEW EARTH. God grant that I may not forfeit my title, for a home, or on an inheritance in this old sin-stained and blood-dyed earth. I have never possessed any of it, neither do I want to. Like Abraham, I can soon pull up stake and journey on to a better spot, if such can be found.

Your pilgrim Bro. waiting for Israel's king to come and restore the kingdom.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. S. P. Green.

A few more broken lines to all the dear brethren and sisters in Christ. I cannot see any of you, and hold sweet communion face to face, but I can be, and am delighted to hear from many of you, through our good paper: and it is no less delightsome to write a little now and then, to let you know something of my feelings. To me, all things are wearing a very gloomy aspect, both spiritually and temporally. Oh, what a deadness and drowsiness prevails here; is it so all over the land? Ah, yes, "wickedness so abounds," that the love of many is "waxing cold."

O, brethren and sisters, all that are living in gospel light and privileges, be faithful a few days longer, dont't give o'er—let us be more careful now than ever before; there seems to be more danger now, when nearing the shore. O, if there is a little light amongst the crew, do let it shine,—take your lamps and go around amongst all the company, and see if there is not some one burdened, or lame, so that with a little help the whole family may be able to get ashore. Ye who are strong bear the infirmities of the weak," and we that have but little strength, must improve, keep striving, do all that we can, that we may gain more strength.

My prayer is daily, that we, who profess to be looking for our blessed Lord and Master, may not only profess, but be assured that we belong to God, that we are Christ's friends, and he will receive us when He comes. I never felt more like giving up the world, and all its pride, than I do now; never did I feel more willing to see Jesus, and dwell with Him, than at the present time.

Let our few remaining days be spent to the best good of the little flock, and from that flowing fountain, drink everlasting love. Let us watch and be sober, gird on the whole armor of God, and fight the good fight.

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we do know that when He shall appear we shall appear also with him in glory." It is enough for us that we be made like our Master, when He comes the second time without sin unto salvation.

Is it not a great privilege to be called His sons and daughters, and we so unworthy? Let us all try to live up to the standard rule in all things, and at all times, that we may meet His approval when "He comes to be admired in all them that believe."

Let all christians pray for each other's welfare, and see that no more of our company go back to the world. O Lord, keep us all safe from the foe, and all the plans he is master of to draw us away from the way that leads to thine abode.

At times, the way is dark, dreary, lonesome and gloomy; and at others, my heart is all in tune, to chant forth His love and favor. Praise the Lord continually for His loving kindness. Let us be often at the throne of grace,—let us be fervent, be watchful, be sober, be kind,—imitating our pattern in our daily walk, for soon He will come; then I trust, I, with the remainder of our Father's family, shall be free from bondage.

O may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, Amen.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. V. N. Cudworth.

Well, dear Brn. and Srs., how does the call for a camp meeting sound in your ears?

The lines of the poet addressed themselves to my mind, instantly:

"The trumpet of the gospel sounds
With an inviting voice,—
'Tis music in the sinner's ears;"—

If not in the sinner's, in the last days of peril, it is in the christian's; it is to fainting pilgrims that "long have sought for a cooling stream at hand," and they must drink or die."

It is for the few travelers in the desert lone, who seldom find a green spot in the wilderness, who pass many weeks and perhaps months, without hearing a gospel sermon, or indeed, a sermon without gospel in it; for the lips that have drank at the pure fountain, or tasted the ripe fruit of Canaan, cannot sup at the muddy rivulet, or eat the husks that swine eat. It is to the soul that has "tasted the good Word of God and the powers of the world to come"—that has had visions bright of that holy land, that world of light."

Well, the great question with me is, and no doubt with many others, can I go? Many mountains arise of considerable magnitude, and the giants stand in the way, but with God all things are possible, and I leave it all with Him. If He shuts the door, it is all well, I shall not attempt to push it open; but if He opens it I shall not fail to walk through.

Dear children, let us go right to the Lord if we want any good thing; walk uprightly, and we shall get it. He is the best lawyer, if we want a case plead. He is the best doctor. He has the best bank. In short, He has all that we need—only believe—all things are possible. "Is anything too hard for me, saith the Lord?"

Well, dear children, if I come not up to the feast, if I do not share in this blessed meeting, I will try to be faithful, and hope soon to meet all the saints in the golden city; the pearly gates will be opened wide to the pilgrims there, avarice, will, pride, lust, poverty, sickness, or death, cannot close them against us then.

May the good Lord go with those that go; may peace and union, kindness and benevolence prevail: may the watchmen on Zion's walls, have the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ; they be fully impressed with a sense of the perils that surround us, giving the note of warning to the people, and the people prove their religion extends to the business departments of this life, by giving liberally, and so be blest bountifully. O may the gospel reach some poor sinners' hearts, before the great days—man stops interceding.

From your Sr. expecting emancipation speedily, VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. R. Batley.

BRO. GRANT:—I hope you will send me the Crisis again, as I am a poor man with a large family, and have but one hand, having had one amputated over 20 years ago. But I like the paper and would like to pay for it, were I able, for its weekly arrivals are truly like cold water to a thirsty soul.

How I love to look for the return of Jesus, who has promised to come again, not as a man accustomed to sorrow and acquainted with grief, but as the Lion of the tribe of Judah, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel.

Dear Bro., I thought that we should have seen the King in his beauty, ere this, but praise the Lord, he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry. Praise the Lord! O, praise his holy name! I hope the Crisis will be sustained, and I wish I had the means to remunerate you for it, but you shall have my prayers for your prosperity, and the paper you publish, that it may continue to be the herald of good tidings to the saints scattered abroad.

I remain your Bro. in Christ, looking for the appearance of Jesus.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. J. E. Clark.

BRO. GRANT:—Time hastens on, and we are nearing the port of rest. Bro. Decker's argument looks good. After hearing him at Newark, N. J., and again at Waterbury, Ct., I can say the argument looks sound, and appears to be well sustained by testimony. The saints are rejoicing in many places in hope of going home this year. History fully confirms, that the union of Church and State was completed in 521, consequently there is the true point of time to commence the 1260 years of Rev. 12. If so, they ended in 1781. Between these points of time they had the power to kill with the sword, burn at the stake, &c.; or in other words, the saints were in the hands of that persecuting power between A. D. 521 and 1781. This "little horn" power might not have tormented the saints all this time, yet it had the power so to do up to 1781. In that very year there was an edict passed, granting toleration to the saints, yea, to all was granted freedom of mind to worship God as they chose. Here the 1260 years appear to end. And this is one reason why many of our Brn. could not embrace the '54 time argument, because they saw History affirmed—the union was not completed till 521, and some said even later; but we are to be governed by the edict passed in 1781. I think this is the latest point we can extend the 1260 years. Then add on the 75 years, and we are carried to the termination of the 1335 years, which brings to the present year.

O solemn thought! The Judge so near, and thousands are unprepared, and will be, when the Lord comes. The wise virgins will heed the cry and be ready, but the foolish will go on until it is too late. The wise virgins that have oil will stand, ready and watching, with their loins girt about. But the world—the cold-hearted church, and back-slidden Adventist's will scoff at and put far off the day of God, and on them Christ will come as a thief in the night.

The Lord help the people to see the truth, and when they see it, believe it, and live it out.

Yours, expecting the Lord, soon.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. Thomas Wilkins.

Bro. Grant:—Seeing in last week's Crisis, some remarks on the Sabbath, I should like the privilege of saying a few words on that subject.

And first, in no instance in the scriptures is the word Sabbath applied to the first day of the week, and to call the first day of the week Sabbath, is therefore unscriptural and incorrect. The word Sabbath, (since the ceremonial services of the Jews ended) belongs exclusively to the seventh day, or Saturday. God blessed and sanctified the seventh day, and praised be the name of the Lord, he has not removed his blessing from it; he gave it for our good. It cannot be among the things nailed to the cross, for they were against us, contrary to us. Whereas, the Sabbath has always been for us, for our comfort, for our good. He that spake as never man spake, says the Sabbath was made for man. Some will say it was made for the Jews. Jesus says, for MAN. The Sabbath was made for all men. Jesus recognized the existence of a Sabbath long after he had nailed to the cross all that was to be nailed there; when he says—"Pray that your flight be not in the winter, nor on the Sabbath-day." As truly as there was no Sabbath, so truly there was no winter, as Jesus understood it. I believe we all need a Sabbath physically, as well as morally. How clearly God gave the Sabbath to man at the beginning: then made it one of the ten parts of his law as given on the Mount. Now I think it should be as clearly repealed before we say it is abolished. It is best to serve God though it be contrary to all the world. "Blessed are they that do his commands, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city."

Believing the cause of truth requires something said on this subject, I have written the above; and remain your Bro. in the bonds of Christian love, looking for the return of Jesus from heaven, to set up his everlasting kingdom on the earth—when every knee to him shall bow, and every tongue shall call him blessed.

Thos. Wilkins.

For the Crisis

Letter from W. H. Wild.

Bro. Grant:—With the help of the good Lord I thought I would sit down and pen a few lines for the encouragement of those of like precious faith, who are waiting and looking, and longing for the return of their blessed Master, the Lord Jesus Christ, when he shall come the second time without sin unto salvation to give to every man as his work shall be. O, Brn. and Srs., give glory to God, for soon the heavens shall roll together as a scroll, and then shall we see him whom we fondly love.

Let us therefore fight the good fight of faith, having on the whole armor of God, that we may say when the good Lord shall come,—"lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

Then let us keep our armor bright, and be like men that wait for their Lord, when he shall return from the wedding, and call us to supper. Bless the Lord! we shall drink wine anew with Him in that very day at his table, for he has promised such to all his disciples.

Brethren and sisters, ours is surely a glorious hope; it is big with immortality. Although we are scoffed at by the world, taken up on the lips of talkers, yet, nevertheless for that eternal weight of glory we can endure it.

Think it not strange concerning the fiery trials that shall try you as though some strange thing happened unto you; no, think it not strange if they call you Beelsebub, for so they called our Master. Think it not strange, if they say you are beside yourself, for so they said of our Master; but let us hold out faithful, for "when the chief Shepherd shall appear we shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

"Let us therefore" "be sober and watch unto prayer, for the end of all things is at hand." "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching; verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself and make them sit down to meat, and shall come forth and serve them."

But Oh, my heart aches when I see so many in the broad road to destruction, even them of my own household. We are told to 'rejoice evermore,' but I cannot rejoice when I see my father, my mother, my sisters and brothers travelling in the path that leads to destruction. Oh, sinner, how long will you let Satan lead you on? Will you not prepare to meet your Savior; "when He shall be revealed from heaven with flaming fire taking vengeance upon all those who fear not God, and who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ?" O do you not wish to be made like that dear Savior, and be taken into His blessed kingdom, where you shall ever be at rest?

If so, come to your Savior; deny your self, and verily I say unto you ye shall inherit the earth, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and the time comes that the saints shall possess the kingdom.

Your Bro., looking for the blessed Hope,

Wm. H. Wild.

For the Crisis

Letter from Sr. S. B. Saxton.

Bro. Grant:—As I was going to send my mite for the Crisis, I thought I would write a few lines more, that the Brethren and Sisters might hear how we get along in this great city. We have no one to preach to us, nor do we have even a prayer meeting. The brethren are making an effort to have one if they can get a room that will do. Our number which was so very large in the beginning, has dwindled to a very few with whom I can talk on the coming of the Savior and the joys of our Father's kingdom. I love to look back to '44; and think what good preaching we had from the many brethren coming to open unto us the truth of God's holy word, and the many that saw light and rejoiced in it. I shall never forget Bro. Brewer, who was so full of the love of God,—it seemed to me that the kingdom had truly come. How happy we were, and what love ran from heart to heart when we heard the Saviour was so nigh. Well, we were disappointed like those in the parable; the Bridegroom did not come, to consummate our hope; the day passed and the trial came, and where are the preaching Brethren? and where are those who sat and listened? They are gone—some to their farms, and some to their merchandize, because their lamps have gone out, and darkness surrounds them. Some are sleeping, and few with lamps trimmed and burning, are longing for the morning to dawn. I try to have patience and keep the prize in view, but the past experience has left an aching void in my heart, that the world can never fill. I, like one of old, will never be satisfied until I arise in the likeness of my Savior, and am gathered with all the redeemed to meet the Lord in the air. The few I can talk with are believing the time very near. We feel we are ready and waiting to hear the Master's voice. It will be a joyful time to see Jesus and all the dear children, when we meet to part no more.

I wish the Crisis to continue, for it nerves and strengthens us when we hear from those we love. May the grace of our Lord with his Holy Spirit, be with you all, and may we soon cease to sing the following song, and unite in one of joy and victory.

"How long, dear Savior, O how long,
Shall these bright hours delay?
Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

Obituary.

Died, in Savoy, July 20th, Bro. Zechariah Mayhew, aged about twenty-five years.

Bro. M. has been a believer in the speedy coming of the Lord for some years, and a devoted christian. Two years ago last Fall, he commenced preaching while traveling with the writer. He has preached, to the edification and comfort of the church until last Fall, when his health failed. The church has sustained a great loss. He has left a companion and two children to mourn their loss, and a large circle of other relatives; but they mourn not as those who have no hope. Funeral sermon by the writer. E. W. Taft.

Domestic Summary.

Great Flood in Florida.—The Tampa Peninsula of the 19th, gives an account of some disastrous floods, which, in consequence of heavy rains have recently visited that section of the State. The roads have been impaired by them to such an extent as renders it impossible to travel, and the immense amount of water falling in cascades, has materially injured the crops. In Hernando county, many plantations have been entirely ruined, and over a vast tract of country, the fields are submerged, crops destroyed, and the surface of the soil cut into ravines. "Alas," exclaims the Peninsular, "the elements seem to have united with the Seminoles in their conspiracy against the welfare of South Florida, and the only dependence of her citizens for sustenance is now rendered void."

Distressing Occurrence.—Mr. S. Hooper, residing near McKissack's Grove, Iowa, while driving his team past the house of Eli Slusher, last Tuesday, was attacked by bees. They made the attack apparently in three strings about the size of a man's arm, first attacking the horses. Mr. Hooper, still held to the team until Messrs. Gilmore and Slusher came to his assistance. One horse in endeavoring to extricate himself broke a blood vessel, and died shortly after; the other is severely injured. They next attacked Mr. Hooper, and those that came to his assistance. Everything was done that could be to extricate the unfortunate men, but not until Mr. Hooper and Mr. Slusher were so severely injured that but little hopes are entertained of their recovery. The symptoms and sufferings of the unfortunate men resemble those of hydrophobia. Dr. Casaca is in attendance, rendering every medical assistance.—Nebrasha City News, 5th.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Atlantic.

Sandy Hook, Aug. 4.

The steamship Atlantic, Capt. Eldridge, from Liverpool, July 23 has arrived.

ITALY.

Serious disturbances had broken out at Cassena, in the Papal Sates; also at Naples. At the latter place several persons were wounded, and numerous arrests were made.

A Republican conspiracy had been detected at Tarentum, in the two Sicilies, and several arrests made.

The Russian Ambassador at Rome, it is said, has arranged all difficulties with the Holy See touching the nomination of Bishops for Poland.

SPAIN.

The news relates mainly to the outbreaks of civil war in Spain. The statements representing its progress and prospects are very conflicting.

It appears that O'Donnell had previously prepared to crush any manifestation, and had assembled in and around Madrid 18,000 troops. Against this force the National Guard and citizens held their ground for thirty hours, but at length gave in, and were disarmed. Two hundred persons were killed in the emeute. At latest dates Madrid was tranquil. Espartero was supposed to be within the city, under arrest.

At Barcelona and elsewhere there had been smaller outbreaks, but they were speedily suppressed.

The head-quarters of the insurrection were at Saragossa, where Espartero's friends had gained a victory over the garrison, and where it is reported more than a legal quorum of the Cortez had assembled, proclaiming Liberty and the Constitution.

The Emperor of France had ordered a French force to assemble on the Spanish frontier as a measure of precaution.

Narvaez and other adherents of the ex-Queen Christina were also hastening to the frontier.

Arrival of the Asia.

New York, Aug. 7.

The Cunard steamship Asia, Capt. Lott, arrived off Sandy Hook about 4 o'clock this afternoon, and reached her dock about 6. The Asia left Liverpool on the afternoon of the 26th ult. She brings three days later intelligence from Europe. Her news, however, is not of special importance, excepting from Spain, where the insurrection is not subdued.

FRANCE.

The intentions of the French government regarding Spain are a subject of much speculation in Paris. It is said that if O'Donnell is successful, France can have no occasion to interfere. On the other hand should the Liberals succeed and the Queen be required to abdicate in favor of the Princess of Austria, with Espartero regent, neither would France interfere. But if the Duchess Montpensier should become next heir to the throne, or should a republic be proclaimed, then France would invade Spain.

Prince Lucien Bonaparte has gone on a mission to Madrid.

LATEST.

Paris, Aug. 24.

The royal troops are masters of every point at Barcelona, but still remain under arms. Preparations are making to execute all taken with arms.

Gerona has risen where Gen. Ruiz commands the garrison.

The London Sun says that 1200 were killed in the streets of Barcelona. The people fought behind barricades, with determined courage, for three days, when their leaders deserted them.

The Spanish government had issued a programme of policy which is, theoretically, very liberal.

A number of arrests had been made in Paris of persons who had formed groups in the streets talking of Spanish affairs.

THE STATES OF THE CHURCH.

The whole dominions of the Pope are divided into 20 provinces, of which Rome is the chief. Of the remaining nineteen, six have the rank of legations, and are governed by cardinals, whilst the other thirteen are delegations under "prelates," some of whom are not necessarily churchmen.

Both of these classes of provinces are subdivided again into districts, governorships, and communes, whose administrative chiefs, as in case of the delegations, may or may not be ecclesiastics. Of the whole of this territory the supreme government lies in the hands of the Pope and a council of ministers, of which last the Cardinal Secretary of State is the chief, and from the nearly autocratic influence of his position, is generally—as in the case of Monsignore Antonelli—the virtual ruler of the country.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

The reports from the wine districts in Portugal are most lamentable. Not only has the disease manifested itself in a most virulent manner, but in the Oporto district the vines appear to be dying and decaying, as was the case at Madeira and the alarm is consequently much greater than if a temporary blight only were feared.

Wine and corn, the two great staples of the country, are this year quite a failure, and famine will be severely felt.

The first railway in the Roman States, which goes from Rome to Frascati, was opened on the 7th.

Advices from Florence state that a negotiation has been pending for some time between the governments of Rome, Naples, Florence, and Modena, for the purpose of forming a confederation of those States, under the patronage of Austria.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 1.

THE best cathartic ever used. It purges without pain, and never acts like the common purgative pills. It is exceedingly valuable in almost every type of disease.

RESTORATIVE BITTERS, No. 2.

This is an alterative; just the medicine that is needed to counteract and remove the Spring and other complaints to which so many persons are unhappily subject.

Spikenard and Dandelion Syrup.

This is most active in expelling from the system humors and chronic impurities of the blood. It is not only medicinal but nutritious also, it purifies and nourishes the blood at the same time. In connection with the No. 1, it has cured very many cases that have been regarded as incurable.

COUGH SYRUP.

For Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough and Consumptive habits. It will be found to serve an excellent purpose in all cases where a Cough Mixture is of use.

The above Medicines may be obtained of the proprietor, corner of Moody and Armstrong Streets, Lowell, Mass., and of Geo. T. Adams, 157 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

On the Death of Bro. Zachariah Mayhew.

BY J. M. CUDWORTH.

Yes, gone to the grave is the friend we have loved;
He's finished his warfare, his patience is proved;
We have almost felt sure our strong cries could save,
But echo still answers—He's gone to the grave.

Ah! the loved ones are sinking like stars of the night,
While setting, remind us how dear was their light;
Stern death so relentless, O, couldst thou not save,
The brightest and dearest that sleep in the grave?

Yes, gone to the grave, but His record's on high,
His treasure is safe far above the blue sky;
He's asleep, but the zephyrs that sigh round his grave
Seem whispering at twilight, we'd no power to save.

Yet death we may challenge; the worst thou canst do
Is to hold him in bondage 'till time's hour is through;
When the strong angel comes his lost jewels to save,
Thy power will be broke; he'll escape from the grave.

In triumph he'll rise, with the prophets of old,
His crown will be radiant with gems and with gold,
His loud hallelujah's will swell in the choir,
With angel's he'll strike the glad notes of the lyre.

Still something is whispering oft in my song,
The few scattered ones will be severed not long;
Soon Jesus must rescue, his banished ones save,
Or side by side sleeping, we'll meet in the grave.

Though tears often fall, yet my heart is made glad,
And sweet visions cheer me when weary and sad;
Sometimes I can catch a sweet glimpse of the throne,
Where the children of Abraham are all gathered home.

Then press on, my soul, let the fierce conflict come,
We'll struggle through poverty, sickness and gloom;
The morn of eternity's hastening on,
Where the dear one's will meet in their bright Eden [home.

Charlemont, Mass.

Speak Gently.

BY D. BATES.

Speak gently! It is better far
To rule by love, than fear—
Speak gently—let not harsh words mar
The good we might do here!

Speak gently! Love doth whisper low
The vows that true hearts bind;
And gently Friendship's accents flow;
Affection's voice is kind.

Speak gently to the little child!
Its love be sure to gain;
Teach it in accents soft and mild—
It may not long remain.

Speak gently to the young, for they
Will have enough to bear—
Pass through this life as best they may,
'Tis full of anxious care!

Speak gently to the aged one,
Grieve not the care-worn heart,
The sands of life are nearly run,
Let such in peace depart!

Speak gently, kindly to the poor;
Let no harsh tone be heard;
They have enough they must endure,
Without an unkind word!

Speak gently to the erring—know
They may have toiled in vain;
Perchance unkindness made them so;
O, win them back again!

Speak gently! He who gave his life
To bend man's stubborn will,
When elements were in fierce strife,
Said to them, "Peace, be still."

Speak gently!—'tis a little thing
Dropped in the heart's deep well;
The good, the joy, which it may bring,
Eternity shall tell.

Bible Truth.

No. III.

BY HENRY W. DANN.

That infidelity and skepticism should abound in the last ages of the world's history, is a truth clearly brought to light in divine revelation. Indeed, in every period of time that has elapsed down to the present hour, there have been multitudes of men, who, by their unbelief and error, have confirmed the Bible Truth, that "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse deceiving and being deceived."

By infidelity, I understand that particular kind of unbelief which denies the truths of Divine Revelation, and in its whole character stands opposed to christian faith. The man who rejects fundamental truth, by that very act, rejects the whole system of truth resting upon it, and in a word, denies the existence of Deity himself.

The existence of God is the most fundamental of all truths, and to deny and reject this is to shut out and forever close from mortal vision the last lingering rays of light that shall dawn on living mortals.

Man is a creature of hope. Indeed, it seems as though all the energies of man's nature were concentrated in this. In life, man hopes for better days, and in death, hope, like an "angel of eternal mercy" lingers about its dark and shadowy vale, awaiting the dawn of the resurrection morn. But by infidelity and error, [redacted] and the voice of Jehovah shall never be heard; neither will it let the songs of Zion, or the prayers of the saints break the awful stillness, but blackness and darkness shall reign forever.

Such are the miseries and forebodings attending infidelity, and yet, there are scores of men in every country, and in our community, whose highest hopes amount to nothing more than the infidel's dream. Perhaps these assertions may startle some, who suppose their hopes are founded on Bible truth.

Let us examine the subject for a moment. If we turn to divine Revelation, we are informed that many "signs and wonders" shall be visible to mortal eye just prior to the coming of Christ; and yet the mass of men enquire, "where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning." It is true a few are found who admit the nearness of the Savior's advent; but as a general thing, it is a subject seldom introduced either with the public or private ministrations of the church; and unless some unforeseen providence or calamity arouse them, its glorious sound is seldom heard to break the solemn stillness of the sanctuary.

Now, if the doctrine of Christ's immediate coming, with all the evidence a divine Revelation can give in its favor, pass unheeded, on whom will the awful responsibility rest?

I answer, on the professed church of Christ; for to the church is committed the oracles of God, and his servants are commanded to proclaim the great day of the Lord; and if they raise not the warning voice and sound the note of alarm, the blood of men will be found in their skirts.

It is an awfully solemn fact, that men, according to Bible prediction, are growing "worse and worse."

The very truths of the Bible that ought to thrill the christian's heart with joy and holy zeal, are passed by with careless indifference, by the mass of men. And even within the hallowed precints of the house of God, darkness is throwing her sable mantle over the minds of the people. And soon, unless the power of the Almighty be exerted in arousing them from their slumbering reveries, extrication will be impossible; and infidelity, bold and daring, will shout its fiendish yell on the very spot where once stood the church of Christ.

O, infidelity! how bold art thou! how daring must thou be, when thou dost insinuate thyself even into the midst of God's sanctuary.

But the reason why this darkness has thus overspread the church is obvious. The institution of the church was designed by Christ, to be the great instrumentality for the diffusion of Bible truth.

Now to the very fact that darkness has commenced its fearful reign in the church is, I think, proof positive that the church has not been willing to declare the whole counsel of God; but, on the contrary, have omitted those truths which were designed to be as a polar star for the guidance of weary pilgrims in this the last age of the world's history.

On such truths as these, the church sheds but a feeble light; hence, men, of necessity, will still continue to wander about in darkness, until suddenly, even as a thief cometh in the night, will the Son of man come to chase the moral darkness all away, and disperse the gloom that for ages has enveloped the mass of men; thus causing the strong holds of infidelity to tremble at the power of God, and fall before the glorious presence of Christ.

Although I belong to the church myself, and hold a position of no small moment in her ranks, yet, I tremble when I think of the careless indifference into which she has fallen.

The news of a coming Messiah, although it is so transcendently glorious, is scarcely ever dwelt upon, by her ministry, except as it is spoken of as an event too far in the distant future to need the attention of men in our own age. I am aware that a few are waiting in expectation of His glorious appearing; but, that the church in general are not expecting and looking for the coming of Christ, is a fact beyond dispute, and needs not argument for its defense.

Now, if this is the actual state of affairs in the world, how it becomes us to search the Scriptures, that are able to make us wise unto salvation. Then let us who profess to love the Lord start up from our reveries in this hour, and seek assistance from the hand of the Lord; for pride, fashion, and popularity threaten the eternal overthrow of the church; and she even now, trembles at her base, and her ruin is inevitable unless we betake ourselves to prayer, and Scripture self-examination. And if we are determined on this, we must act quickly, for the days are fast passing, and the last moments of time are already upon us. The last events of historical prophecy are now transpiring, and the scenes of 6000 years of the world's history are being summed up; and ere long the awful, solemn, and yet glorious sound of the last trump will be heard pealing its notes along the battlements of heaven, even down to the remotest point of our planet, announcing the dawn of the resurrection morn, and the appearance on earth again of the promised Messiah.

These are the scenes that are to stay the progress of infidelity, and until then, unbelief and error will have their desired sway; for the world is not to be converted as many suppose, but as God said, men will "grow worse and worse."

Then let us wait patiently for the coming of the blessed Master, in the meantime earnestly contending for "the faith once delivered to the saints."

Conference and Tent Meeting in Princeton, Iowa.

This was the third Tent meeting of the season, of the N. E. Mission Tent, which commenced under favorable auspices in this promising town beside whose banks roll the waters of the beautiful Mississippi.

The meeting began Thursday, June 19. Although the weather was almost intolerably warm, the attendance was good, especially evenings, and the interest excellent. Preaching by Elders Chandler, Pratt, Blanchard and Morgan. A few were baptized; and the brethren generally appeared not a little comforted.

On Saturday, May 21, the brethren assembled beneath the tent to take into consideration some of the wants of the cause, and organize a Conference. Elder M. Chandler was appointed chairman, and Eld. W. Pratt, Sect. pro tem.

Moline, Ill., was represented by Brn. W. G. Ruggles and N. Branch, Jr. They have, at present, a church of between thirty and forty brethren and sisters—have an interesting Bible class and Sabbath school. Elder P. B. Morgan has had the pastoral charge of the little flock since the 10th of May. Congregations are not large, but interesting. They are enjoying peace and unity, and some measure of spiritual prosperity. Prayer-meetings are well attended, and interesting. Brethren are generally well established in the great truths of the Advent doctrine. Should time last they hope to build a church this Fall.

Cordova, was represented by brethren Gilbert, Rathburn, and Shinabarger. They have a little company of fifteen or twenty, but enough for a permanent interest. They have no fit place for worship, and meet with considerable opposition. Eld. Chandler, now living in the village, has opened his house for worship, and preaches at home occasionally. Some have tried to use the question of life only through Christ to the prejudice of our interests, although Bro. Chandler has not preached on the subject since he came to the place. But for all this, truth is making progress. Some steps have been taken to build a place of worship. Have no Sabbath school. The friends feel their prospects are encouraging.

Princeton, was represented by Brn. Blackman, Williams, Lancaster, and others. This is an infant church. There were no Adventists in this place last winter when Bro. Morgan came here, hired his board at the tavern, and gave us a course of lectures on the prophecies and other glorious truths of which we were ignorant. As the result of these meetings, our whole community was stirred up, some were converted, and a church of some thirty or more has been organized with the adoption of a covenant, the appointment of an elder, a deacon and a clerk. We have preaching occasionally by Brn. Morgan, Chandler and Pratt; and have some hopes that Bro. Morgan will yet come and live among us if time last. Our Sabbath school interest is joined with the union Sabbath school. Have made some arrangements, and expect to erect a church immediately, if God will.

Genesse Grove, Ill. Bro. J. Cumming said of this place there were a few excellent brethren there, who should, properly, be represented in this Conference. Bro. G. W. Mitchell resides here, and he (Bro. Cummings) preached there occasionally. He believed there was the nucleus of a good church there; as also in Hampton, near Bro. Edwards, where he preached with a good deal of interest a part of the time. Indeed, he believed there were few school districts where there could not be found the nucleus for a church.

Grass River. Sisters Potter and Waterman from this place, said that our esteemed Bro. Chapman came there once and gave a few discourses; but they had to contend against not a little prejudice; yet they desired to see the precious cause of God firmly established in that place; felt blessed in enjoying this privilege, and they hoped and prayed that something might be done in this conference by which their region might be benefitted. Bro. Pratt had preached to them once, and they desired other Brn. should visit them.

Camanche, Muscatine and Iowa City. Bro. Morgan remarked of these places, that there were some good Brn., and if time should continue, he should expect to see in all of these places a good cause established, as also in Davenport, where he had preached not long since. Rock Island, and LeClaire, he also thought would be found ripe as soon as any one could make a suitable effort in these cities; all of which places should be carefully cared for by this conference.

Bro. Pratt had recently visited Windham, where lives a brother Graham, where is considerable interest and where is a pretty good prospect for a future cause according to present appearances. Agreeably to Bro. Graham's request, he had some thought of holding a tent meeting there.

Bro. Morgan said these reports might not sound altogether like those of older fields, but they spoke well for a new cause in a new field. He was very greatly encouraged by this reviewing of our field; did not before realize how large and promising the prospects of this immediate field were.

In each of these localities where now was but a brother or sister, if time lasts, we may expect to see a permanent church interest, providing the friends of the cause remain faithful to their trust.

In Moline we have, though a small, yet, one of the best churches of Northern Illinois, the existence of which may in a very great measure under God be attributed to the faithful steadfastness of a single brother.

With other remarks concerning our general prospects—the need of faithful labor for the conversion of sinners—and the necessity of union, and co-operation—Bro. Morgan introduced the following Constitution which was adopted by the Conference.

Article I. This Conference shall be known as the Eastern Iowa and Rock Island semi-annual Conference of Adventists.

Art. II. The object of this conference shall be to promote co-operation and efficiency among the churches of this region in spreading abroad divine truth—especially those prophetic and practical truths that relate to the speedy, personal, and pre-millennial advent of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ;—and in making ready a people prepared for the Lord.

Art. III. This Conference shall be composed of delegates from churches and preachers laboring with the churches represented;—each church being authorised to send five delegates; visiting brethren made eligible to a sitting by vote of the Conference.

Art IV. The officers of this Conference shall consist of a President, Vice President, and Secretary, which shall also constitute a committee, ex officio for the transaction of any business the conference may appoint them, or that may not be otherwise cared for by the Conference; and shall also have power to call an extra session when in their unanimous opinion it is deemed proper; provided due notice thereof be given to the churches herein represented.

Art. V. This Conference shall have power to hear, debate and council upon all matters relating to the local or general interests of the churches represented;—but shall in no case exercise legislative authority over any church herein represented.

Art. VI. The order of this Conference shall be, after the usual devotional exercises with the reading of the Scriptures,—

First; to appoint the officers of the Conference, and then hear an opening discourse fitted to the occasion.

Second, appoint a business committee—and any other committees desired.

Third, hear reports from churches and preachers present; when it is desired each church should present a letter setting forth their condition and prospects, and further transact any business deemed wise. Each session opening and closing with prayer or benediction.

Art. VII. This Constitution may be revised or amended by vote of two-thirds of all the members present, at any regularly appointed Conference;—providing notice may have been given of such intention by the preceding Conference.

Voted; We tender our thanks to this church for their hospitality.

Voted; The minutes of this conference be sent to the World's Crisis and Advent Herald, for publication.

Voted; To adjourn to meet, if the Lord will, in Moline, Ill., the first Friday in January, 1857.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. S. C. Teeple.

Bro. Grant:—I once more would say a few words through the Crisis to the children scattered over the land. It is a time of peril, and of sorrow, and if ever there was a time when we needed grace, it is now.

For one, I feel like praising God that I am still among the number that expect to enter the kingdom. It is somewhat hard fighting, but I am sure to reach that reward of the just if I faint not. Praise the living God forever! The warfare will soon be ended, and the dear children find rest.

O, how sweet to reflect on those joys that await us,—they will soon be ours to share. We have not left all for nought, no, no; Jesus has been with us, and is still with us, and I am glad his promise goes still further, "even to the end of the world."

Shall we leave him? Oh, my God, forbid it; we mean to watch a little longer and endure on, for such only will be saved. It has been a very trying time with me for the last year, and I know it must have been with all the dear children. Our blessed hope which we anticipated having so soon consummated, is deferred; our hearts are made sick,—and is it not often the language of our hearts, He will come, but Oh, when? All we can do is, to hold on.

But what is there to hold on to? The promise to the children, that the "same Jesus which went away will come again in like manner." Then He will come, O, yes; hasten the glad hour, is the language of my heart. But where is all the company that was with us one year ago? Instead of having their sympathies as we have needed for the last year, they have left, turned back to the world,—but we will still go on, the prize is ahead, and praise God we mean to get it; and if ever I had reason to praise God it is this morning, that I am still among the despised who have not cast away their confidence as yet, but believing it still hath a recompence of reward. "But ye have need of patience;" yes, that is very true, and I have felt much the the need of it.

Bro. Burnham's article on Patience in the Crisis, did me much good. I don't want to go back to the church or to the world, but mean to have patience and stay where I am. There are still a few who meet in this place, and are trying to live in readiness to meet the Lord at His appearing.

We find a promise to "two or three," and it is verified in our midst, praise the good Lord. We are not discouraged, for "He who is for us is more than all that can be against us." We will struggle on a little longer, be willing to endure a few more trials, bear a few more crosses, endure a little more shame, and then get the reward, which will pay for all.

I well recollect one year ago of telling a pilgrim, I meant to hold on this year, and then if the Lord did not come, give up; but no, no; I am no more willing to give up now, than I was twelve years ago. Religion is just as good as it ever was, and our hope is the same. O glorious hope, who would be willing to part with it? It "maketh not ashamed," it is a "lively hope," "sure and steadfast."

O glory to God, it is a good hope. I have it to-day and mean ever to keep it.

Brn. and Srs., remember us in Roxbury. We hope soon to meet you where sickness, sorrow, pain, and death, will forever have passed away. The Lord bless and keep you unto his coming.

"O how joyful then to hear him,
While all nations shall revere him,
Saying to his flock who fear him,—
I have come on earth to reign."

Yours, in the faith of the gospel,—sighing and groaning for redemption,

Susan E. Teeple

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. G. W. Dennsey.

Bro. Grant:—In these days of peril, of drawing back, of hard fighting, for the children of God, of luke-warmness, of astounding infidelity, it seems that I can hardly refrain my hand from writing a few lines to God's dear, scattered flock. If I ever loved the "little flock" it is now. Amid trials, disappointments, days of casting away former confidence in the Word, I exhort you, as I see the day approaching, to be faithful. For behold, your king cometh unto you; but not as in days of yore, when the little flock spread their garments in the way and the trees by the wayside had to be cropped of their green foliage to strew the way of the blessed King amid loud shoutings of "Hosanna, Hosanna," and "blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, Hosanna in the highest." Loud acclamations of joy went up, to keep the stones still, I suppose, for they would certainly have cried out if God's dear children had not given vent to their feeilngs. But not as then; "Behold he cometh with clouds," cometh speedy, arrayed in beauty, in grandeur, in glory, and angels lead the way.

But some of the saints have been disappointed so many times they think they will always be doomed to disappointment. The Lord bless you, you are not always to be disappointed, not always sick at heart; the Lord will come. When you are looking for him will he appear the second time for your salvation. "Light is sown for the righteous."

To those whom I have met in different States of New England at camp meetings, whom since that time I have not seen or heard from, know ye that I am still on the track; are you still looking for the Lord? Do be faithful a little longer, the Lord will come. In malice be children, but in understanding be men; not worldly men, not professors without being possessors, not Bro. Burnham's kind of men that he thinks might spend one dollar on a thousand and call themselves liberal; but be sure, such men as the Lord describes when he says, "be like unto men that wait for their Lord when he shall return from the wedding."

Your brother, George W. Dinsey.

The Pilgrim's Prospect.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Lift up thy head, heavenly pilgrim, and contemplate the enrapturing prospect which thy loving God hath spread out before thee! What seest thou? Eternal rest, unfading glory, immortal honor, everlasting life, undecaying health, a holy kingdom, a sparkling crown, bright robes of light, a palm of victory, joys all divine, celestial beauty! What wilt thou desire more? Dost thou complain of evil? Thy great gain, which thy faithful Lord hath promised, demands that thou suffer evil to possess it. Shall the warrior march in triumph, and receive the laurels without fighting the battles, and suffering on the field? Shall the traveler's eyes drink in the varied beauties of distant lands, without his braving the perils of the dividing oceans? Shall he eat in pleasure who hath wrought no labor? Shall he quietly rest who hath endured no toil? Nay, shall patriarchs, prophets, wise men of old, apostles, martyrs, and thy adorable Redeemer himself pass through tears, sighs, strong cryings, blood, and agony to gain the victory, and thou escape all evil? At times, indeed, thou dost hang thy head in sorrow, but, at length thou shall lift it up in smiling gladness. Thy cheeks are often bathed with bitter tears of grief, but the kind hand of thy Deliverer shall wipe them all away. Here thou dost tell of clouds, of darkness, and of gloom, but anon shalt sing of heavenly clearness, and cloudless skies. Now thy strong enemy fiercely opposes thy onward way, but thy stronger Friend, ere long, shall drive him captive at his fiery chariot wheels. Now the world fearfully baffles thy struggling spirit, but the power of the world itself, at length shall pass away. The carnal mind declares uncompromising war with thy upspringing desires of virtue and purity, but thy Savior will help thee drag even this vaunting foe to the cross, and by the cross, through grace, thou shalt finally overcome. In the midst of all thy troubles thou hast, even now, thy Redeemer's pledge of that "unspeakable good" which he hath promised." Does not the cheering light of his approving countenance come streaming from the throne when thou dost call to him for help? Dost thou not hear his voice, when thou walkest by the way, saying, "lo, I am with you?"

Does he not guard thee in the midst of danger, disease, and death, when the pestilence walks abroad at midnight, and desolation wastes at noonday; when thousands fall at thy side, and ten thousands at thy right hand? Do not the angels of his tabernacle come at his command, and by his direction to hold up thy footsteps, and direct thy goings? In thine hours of devotion, is not thine heart often made like the chariot of Aminadab?

Hail, Pilgrim! Lift up thy soul with courage, and address thee to thy journey with divine strength! Fix thine eyes on those hills of light, and mountains of gladness which thou seest in the distance! Thou goest to the city of God, whose walls are jasper, and the gates of pearl—which exhibits its twelve foundations, and displays its street of gold—which manifests the perfection of beauty in its form, and is lighted with the glory of God and the Lamb—which offereth its pellucid waters, and scattereth the fragrance of life's healing tree to the victorious ones!

For the Crisis.

Life, how Attained.

BY J. B. COOK.

"That no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, is evident; for the just shall live by fath." Gal. 3: 11.

The law demands complete obedience. It dooms the disobedient to death, with no promise or prospect of life; therefore, it is as clear as if recorded by a sunbeam, that no man can be acquitted, and restored to life by that which condemns and consigns only to death.

This truth is confirmed by the history of all Israel, and every one of the leading actors. In acting according to law, when seeking life and blessings in their own strength, they always failed and fell. But in all cases where they (for the time) obtained life and favor from God it was by faith in His promise, his presence and his power. Such were the circumstances surrounding them that nothing save divine power could deliver.

Thus it was with Enoch and Elijah at their translation. Thus it was with Israel at their exode from Egypt; at their crossing of Jordan, and conquest of Caanan! Abraham was compelled to cease from self and rely on "Him who quickeneth the dead." David and Daniel were delivered "because they trusted in their God;" they have in themselves no adequate strength, but their faith led them under and into the Divine all-sufficiency, where "they were safe."

Human power was, to the obstacles before them, absolute impotence! In view of the salvation to be accomplished, their strength was nothing. As the vessels (in the Welland canal, I recently passed,) in passing up hundreds of feet, from one lake to another, have no inherent power,—but must enter "the way" prepared, and "lock up," so we poor mortals must enter "the way of life." We come into the promise by faith in Jesus, and obedience to Him, we "lock up" from glory to glory, as by the spirit of the Lord."

Justification by law, is sought in the strength of self-reliance. But all thus far, have failed to fulfil the law. None love God supremely, and their neighbor fully and forever as themselves! Hence, the penalty, death, rests on us all. Hence, it is as clear as day, that we cannot be justified by that law which only can condemn. But faith acknowledges the law, and God its author; while Christ is apprehended as the resurrection and the life, having brought an immortal life to light! Thus by faith, justification and salvation are practicable.

"The law," however, in failing to justify is not to blame. It "is holy, just and good,"—a righteous rule of conduct, 'it is weak (or ineffectual only) through the flesh"—the present frailties of fallen nature.

But this exposure of our weakness is not made to tantalize or aggrieve us, but to instruct and convict us as to the evil of sin. Rom. 7: 12–14. Gal. 3: 18, 25. Nay, it is to educate and elevate us. It is to bring us to Christ, the Life-giver. We need to cease from self—from an arm of flesh, ere we betake ourselves to His unfailing, everlasting all-sufficiency. Its aim is to lead us to renounce creature good, and to bring and bind us to infinite, endless, immortal good. A renunciation of all that brought sin and death, is prerequisite to laying hold of that which produces life. "The world, flesh, and devil under law," induced death; and so death has reigned for ages.

"The sting of death is sin, the strength of sin is the law." Therefore, "it is evident that the law cannot justify." The obligation of law holds the sinner, mortality or death holds its victim. God holds his law in honor, as the great moral Governor.

Now, how can the subject of a violated law overcome its penalty, death? How surmount moral obligation, or throw aside the righteous administration of Almighty God? How can he, "by law" be justified, raised up from immortality, and accepted in the sight of God?

"That no man is justified by law in the sight of God is evident," for all the facts in the case, all the assertions of eternal truth, affirm that "the just live by faith." The justified attain to life only "by faith," by trusting in Him who forgives, and gives life even to the dead!

That we are all dead or dying is matter of observation and experience. Thus "the law" holds all men; therefore, there can be no justification to life, except by a gracious power that maintains and magnifies the law; while it bestows life and immortality freely.

THIS DOCTRINE can not be understood when isolated from the grand argument of the apostle. It stands in harmonious relation to the Divine Sonship, (v. 26) to the Abrahamic, everlasting "inheritance," (v. 18,) and the heavenly "Jerusalem." (ch. 4: 26–31.)

But between us poor mortals and "the manifestation of the sons of God" in "the better country," and "the inheritance" of that "city which hath foundations; whose builder and maker is God"—there is death; and perhaps the grave, and surely the judgment of Almighty God!

Do reflect. No man of himself, by a condemning law can master death, overcome the grave, or evade the all comprehending judgment of the great day. That no man thus conditioned, can obtain acquital from mortality, and acceptance "in the sight of God" in immortality by his own strength through obeying the law, "is evident." It is as clear as a sunbeam. Nay more; it is certain; because eternal truth testifies that "the just (the justified) live (get life only) by faith," in Him who "redeems us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." (See vs. 10 to 14.)

THE ILLUSTRATION of this truth is as "evident" as is the apostolic statement, for the coming of the Son of man to us will be like the flood to Noah. Noah's cotemporaries could not breast the waves of the world-wide deluge! They could not control the outstretched arm of Almighty God! They could not surmount their righteous visitation, and pass by strength of their own, from the old world to that peopled by Noah! None were saved—none got life in that judgment, except "by faith;" that faith led them into the ark—into fellowship with God. He saved them! He gave them life. "So shall the coming of the Son of man be."

Thus Lot got life, not by wit, or wisdom, or virtue and strength of his own! No: but "by faith" that led him into God's plan—"the just live by faith!" No mortal of himself could surmount that sulphurous, fiery storm! "So shall the coming of the Son of man be."

Enoch and Elijah were not translated by triumphing over "the law" of gravity, or any other law of their being. No, no. They "walked with God." They came into his covenant of life. God let down His presence in the form of promise; they entered, though in all the impotence of mortality, and by faith they locked up from earth to heaven, from mortal to immortality! Nay, into association and assimilation with the everlasting One! the "I AM!"

Thus the honored heirs of promise who "shall be alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord," will attain justification to life; not by law; but "by faith" in the descending Lord! He comes to lift them up to "everlasting habitations." Divested of mortality, they will rise enwrapped in the glories of his own immortality.

In every instance in the history of God's people, illustrative of this doctrine, we find that they failed by self reliance, or according to law, and got life or deliverance from surrounding death "by faith" in him who was alone in those conditions, competent to save.

Thus, Israel by faith got "life" at the Passover when the destroying angel slew the Egyptians.

Thus they got "life" at the Red sea, when Pharaoh's host was destroyed.

Thus, Caleb and Joshua got "life" when the ten spies by their "evil report" perished with their hundreds of thousands of associates in unbelief. "They would not enter in because of unbelief."

David and Daniel with their compéers in moral heroism, attained to life "by faith" that brought them and bound them within the sphere of Omnipotent power. The deliverance demanded by their conviction, and the salvation accomplished on their behalf, transcended all created agency.

"Through faith they subdued kingdoms, wrought rigteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, * * * received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection! "These all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Heb. 11.

These "things happened to them for ensamples!" The grand and final attainment of "life," is in "the resurrection." Then all mortals whose faith renounces trust in law, and which allies them to the "resurrection and the life," will enjoy "the gift of God"—eternal life.

The law or bond of mortality to Elijah and Enoch, the flood to Noah, the fiery judgment on Sodom, the overthrow of Pharaoh's host, the death to the children of promise, the furnace of fire to those who believed, in Babylon; when all are woven into one grand, God-given symbol of "the great day," may aid our conception of this all-important assertion of Divine inspiration,—

"That no man is justified in the sight of God is evident; for the just shall live by faith."

Of all parts in the great system of truth, on which faith relies, there is none quite comparable, to the crowning of the dome of the heavenly temple. This shall be when He comes again to array his people in immortality. "Unto them that look for Him he shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9: 28. "Then shall we appear with Him in glory—wearing a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

Let those alone doubt who can rise above mortality scale the battlements, and ope the gates of the celestial city, unaided by God Almighty. But all who lay hold of the promise and arm of the Lord by faith, have a rational ground of hope; an illustrative hope; a hope in Him whose faithfulness never fails, and whose power is equal to all the emergencies involved in hades' moral government, and "eternal judgment."

In the light of this luminous subject, we can apprehend the import and obligation of christian baptism. In us, that is, in our flesh, "there is no good thing;" nothing that can avail to secure life. As "the flesh" has been tried, found utter weakness, and read unfit for, and forever out of the kingdom, as "Christ died and rose again" to "enter into His glory;" it is made plain in baptism. It is embodied, or acted out in Gospel worship.

"Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? therefore we are buried with Him by baptism, into death;" that as He was raised, we may also be, in "the resurrection."

The believer "buried in baptism" has no hope by remaining "planted in the likeness of Christ's death!" His hope lies in being "raised from baptism to newness of life here, and of being "made like Him" "in immortality," at the "resurrection of the Just." 1 Cor. 15. Rom. 6: 3, 5.

This is "the form of the doctrine." It is its type or outward exhibition.

As in the Lord's supper we show His death till He come;" so in baptism we profess openly, that there is no hope from "law" in mortality. Our hope is in God "who giveth life to the dead." "THE JUST LIVE BY FAITH."

New Bedford, Mass. July, '56.

Clerical Politicians.

We remember that some years ago, when the temperance reform was in its infancy, there was a decided hostility manifested on the part of certain of the clergy, against having the topic introduced into their pulpits on the Sabbath day. This course drew down upon them the severest animadversions of those who esteemed themselves to be, in a peculiar manner, the representatives and embodiment of temperance principles. The course pursued by the clergy in those early days of reform, is defensible and was perhaps, the best practical commentary they could give of their firm faith in the efficacy of spiritual teachings, to meet and rectify every social and moral evil; for they had read in the great charter under which they were called to preach:—"the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," and they knew, if they were faithful in spiritual things, temperance must follow, as a natural result.

But a change has taken place in the views of a majority of the clergy, and it is a change that is greatly to be deplored; for it argues a loss of faith, a departure from the precepts of Christ, and the principles of the gospel, and a reliance upon merely human strength. Instead of guarding zealously their pulpits against those things that have a tendency to turn the mind from the simplicity and beauty of christian truths, they have turned the church into an arena for political discussions, for partisan declamations, for personalities, vituperation and scandal. They have, in many cases sown dissensions, where, aforetime, the sweet spirit of peace loved to dwell. They have sown the seeds of strife, bitterness and disunion where love and unity once dwelt serenely. Brother has been excited against brother, family ties have been weakened, and the satisfaction with which the church once held sweet counsel together is now no longer experienced.

The fell spirit of political partizanship is the demon who has wrought this work of desolation. It is one of the most common things of the day to read, in the religious periodicals, letters from clergymen from every part of the country, complaining of spiritual dearth in their churches—that the young, especially, give no heed to religious teachings—that cold indifference marks all their conduct.

Do not these clergymen see the reason for all this? Do they not see that it is because they themselves have stepped aside from the high mission to which they were called, and throwing off their sacerdotal robes, have turned their backs upon the pulpit, and entered the arena of political strife, become party wranglers, office-seekers and demagogues.

Young men, seeing this, will not believe there is any vitality in the religion which such a clergyman preaches. They hear him declare in complacent tones, and in that "pride that apes humility," that they are embassadors for God, standing before them in Christ's stead; and on the next day they see him lay aside his embassadorial functions, and mingle in the struggle for political loaves and fishes. They hear him declare in the language of St. Paul, "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified;" and see him on the next day, knowing nothing, and seemingly caring nothing, about anything else save the triumph of his party.

These things cannot but have the most deleterious effect upon the mind of young people. It looks to them like a departure from the faith; it speaks to them in language which their heart does not reject, that there is after all, no solid foundation in this religion, and thus are sown the seeds of unbelief, out of which grow infidelity in its most hopeless and almost incurable form.

This conduct on the part of the clergy has weakened the tie that formerly bound young and confiding hearts to the altars at which they worshipped with their fathers in early life; it has weakened the churches and brought down upon them the paralytic influences of cold and blank indifference.

When the American movement swept the country, in 1854, hosts of clergymen were found in the van, fighting with uncommon zeal against the Pope, the devil, and all foreign agencies. In our own State, large numbers of them were elected to political power. One was called upon to be Speaker of the House, others crowded the floor of the Representatives' Chamber, some were found in the Senate: one, certainly, if not two, were sent to Congress, and during the session of the Legislature these clerical politicians were the most active, the most virulent, the most bigoted of all the members of that large body. Now we tell these clerical gentlemen that they have done more injury to the cause of Protestantism by the course they saw fit to pursue, than the Pope, with all the power of the Romish Church, could do in a century. For, armed with the spirit of truth and righteousness, and dwelling in unity, we have the promise that nothing can prevail against us.

It is earnestly to be desired that the class of clergymen to whom we have alluded will consider the tendency of their course; its influence upon the minds of their parishioners, upon the health and prosperity of their churches, and turn again to the high mission upon which they are sent.

God forbid that we should deny to clergymen any more than to any other man the right to speak his sentiments and act up to his convictions on any of the current topics of the day. It is his birthright so to speak and so to act. But God forbid that the clergyman to whom is committed the spiritual charge of the whole community, should make that grave and solemn charge a secondary matter, while the god of this world claims his best energies, absorbs his mind and becomes his chief delight.—Boston Herald.

What no Parent can have the Right to Do.

No parent can have the right to insult a child, simply because he can have the right to insult no human being. Parents, guardians, and teachers, have the right to govern, but not to insult. We may not tell a boy that he is mean, that he is the worst boy in the land, nor anything of that sort; the reason whereof is that such denunciations, true or false, can do no good, their tendency being to torture only. Such abuse does not proceed from either goodness or wisdom, without which the exercise of power becomes tyranny.

No one can have the right to degrade a child either in his own estimation or in the estimation of others. For a parent to tell visitors of his having flogged his son is cruel and slanderous in its tendency. While it tortures the sensibilities of the boy, it gradually reveals to him the fact that he has but little character to take care of.

To pursue this course for any length of time, must inevitably undermine all self-respect, while resentment runs wild, and malice takes possession of a heart that has bled under this wanton cruelty until no virtuous feeling is left. Many boys are ruined beyond any remedy before they are twelve years old. The responsibility of that ruin lies either upon the parent or the teacher, or upon both. A fearful responsibility it is.

A parent has no right to govern a free moral agent by mere brute force. The failing to perceive and act upon this principle has done more to promote crime in the world than such government as we now

Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

The Pilgrim's Prospect.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Lift up thy head, heavenly pilgrim, and contemplate the enrapturing prospect which thy loving God hath spread out before thee! What seest thou? Eternal rest, unfading glory, immortal honor, everlasting life, undecaying health, a holy kingdom, a sparkling crown, bright robes of light, a palm of victory, joys all divine, celestial beauty! What wilt thou desire more? Dost thou complain of evil? Thy great gain, which thy faithful Lord hath promised, demands that thou suffer evil to possess it. Shall the warrior march in triumph, and receive the laurels without fighting the battles, and suffering on the field? Shall the traveler's eyes drink in the varied beauties of distant lands, without his braving the perils of the dividing oceans? Shall he eat in pleasure who hath wrought no labor? Shall he quietly rest who hath endured no toil? Nay, shall patriarchs, prophets, wise men of old, apostles, martyrs, and thy adorable Redeemer himself pass through tears, sighs, strong cryings, blood, and agony to gain the victory, and thou escape all evil? At times, indeed, thou dost hang thy head in sorrow, but, at length thou shall lift it up in smiling gladness. Thy cheeks are often bathed with bitter tears of grief, but the kind hand of thy Deliverer shall wipe them all away. Here thou dost tell of clouds, of darkness, and of gloom, but anon shalt sing of heavenly clearness, and cloudless skies. Now thy strong enemy fiercely opposes thy onward way, but thy stronger Friend, ere long, shall drive him captive at his fiery chariot wheels. Now the world fearfully baffles thy struggling spirit, but the power of the world itself, at length shall pass away. The carnal mind declares uncompromising war with thy upspringing desires of virtue and purity, but thy Savior will help thee drag even this vaunting foe to the cross, and by the cross, through grace, thou shalt finally overcome. In the midst of all thy troubles thou hast, even now, thy Redeemer's pledge of that "unspeakable good" which he hath promised." Does not the cheering light of his approving countenance come streaming from the throne when thou dost call to him for help? Dost thou not hear his voice, when thou walkest by the way, saying, "lo, I am with you?"

Does he not guard thee in the midst of danger, disease, and death, when the pestilence walks abroad at midnight, and desolation wastes at noonday; when thousands fall at thy side, and ten thousands at thy right hand? Do not the angels of his tabernacle come at his command, and by his direction to hold up thy footsteps, and direct thy goings? In thine hours of devotion, is not thine heart often made like the chariot of Aminadab?

Hail, Pilgrim! Lift up thy soul with courage, and address thee to thy journey with divine strength! Fix thine eyes on those hills of light, and mountains of gladness which thou seest in the distance! Thou goest to the city of God, whose walls are jasper, and the gates of pearl—which exhibits its twelve foundations, and displays its street of gold—which manifests the perfection of beauty in its form, and is lighted with the glory of God and the Lamb—which offereth its pellucid waters, and scattereth the fragrance of life's healing tree to the victorious ones!

For the Crisis.

Life, how Attained.

BY J. B. COOK.

"That no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, is evident; for the just shall live by fath." Gal. 3: 11.

The law demands complete obedience. It dooms the disobedient to death, with no promise or prospect of life; therefore, it is as clear as if recorded by a sunbeam, that no man can be acquitted, and restored to life by that which condemns and consigns only to death.

This truth is confirmed by the history of all Israel, and every one of the leading actors. In acting according to law, when seeking life and blessings in their own strength, they always failed and fell. But in all cases where they (for the time) obtained life and favor from God it was by faith in His promise, his presence and his power. Such were the circumstances surrounding them that nothing save divine power could deliver.

Thus it was with Enoch and Elijah at their translation. Thus it was with Israel at their exode from Egypt; at their crossing of Jordan, and conquest of Caanan! Abraham was compelled to cease from self and rely on "Him who quickeneth the dead." David and Daniel were delivered "because they trusted in their God;" they have in themselves no adequate strength, but their faith led them under and into the Divine all-sufficiency, where "they were safe."

Human power was, to the obstacles before them, absolute impotence! In view of the salvation to be accomplished, their strength was nothing. As the vessels (in the Welland canal, I recently passed,) in passing up hundreds of feet, from one lake to another, have no inherent power,—but must enter "the way" prepared, and "lock up," so we poor mortals must enter "the way of life." We come into the promise by faith in Jesus, and obedience to Him, we "lock up" from glory to glory, as by the spirit of the Lord."

Justification by law, is sought in the strength of self-reliance. But all thus far, have failed to fulfil the law. None love God supremely, and their neighbor fully and forever as themselves! Hence, the penalty, death, rests on us all. Hence, it is as clear as day, that we cannot be justified by that law which only can condemn. But faith acknowledges the law, and God its author; while Christ is apprehended as the resurrection and the life, having brought an immortal life to light! Thus by faith, justification and salvation are practicable.

"The law," however, in failing to justify is not to blame. It "is holy, just and good,"—a righteous rule of conduct, 'it is weak (or ineffectual only) through the flesh"—the present frailties of fallen nature.

But this exposure of our weakness is not made to tantalize or aggrieve us, but to instruct and convict us as to the evil of sin. Rom. 7: 12–14. Gal. 3: 18, 25. Nay, it is to educate and elevate us. It is to bring us to Christ, the Life-giver. We need to cease from self—from an arm of flesh, ere we betake ourselves to His unfailing, everlasting all-sufficiency. Its aim is to lead us to renounce creature good, and to bring and bind us to infinite, endless, immortal good. A renunciation of all that brought sin and death, is prerequisite to laying hold of that which produces life. "The world, flesh, and devil under law," induced death; and so death has reigned for ages.

"The sting of death is sin, the strength of sin is the law." Therefore, "it is evident that the law cannot justify." The obligation of law holds the sinner, mortality or death holds its victim. God holds his law in honor, as the great moral Governor.

Now, how can the subject of a violated law overcome its penalty, death? How surmount moral obligation, or throw aside the righteous administration of Almighty God? How can he, "by law" be justified, raised up from immortality, and accepted in the sight of God?

"That no man is justified by law in the sight of God is evident," for all the facts in the case, all the assertions of eternal truth, affirm that "the just live by faith." The justified attain to life only "by faith," by trusting in Him who forgives, and gives life even to the dead!

That we are all dead or dying is matter of observation and experience. Thus "the law" holds all men; the efore, there can be no justification to life, except by a gracious power that maintains and magnifies the law; while it bestows life and immortality freely.

THIS DOCTRINE can not be understood when isolated from the grand argument of the apostle. It stands in harmonious relation to the Divine Sonship, (v. 26) to the Abrahamic, everlasting "inheritance," (v. 18,) and the heavenly "Jerusalem." (ch. 4: 26–31.)

But between us poor mortals and "the manifestation of the sons of God" in "the better country," and "the inheritance" of that "city which hath foundations; whose builder and maker is God"—there is death; and perhaps the grave, and surely the judgment of Almighty God!

Do reflect. No man of himself, by a condemning law can master death, overcome the grave, or evade the all comprehending judgment of the great day. That no man thus conditioned, can obtain acquital from mortality, and acceptance "in the sight of God" in immortality by his own strength through obeying the law, "is evident." It is as clear as a sunbeam. Nay more; it is certain; because eternal truth testifies that "the just (the justified) live (get life only) by faith," in Him who "redeems us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." (See vs. 10 to 14.)

THE ILLUSTRATION of this truth is as "evident" as is the apostolic statement, for the coming of the Son of man to us will be like the flood to Noah. Noah's cotemporaries could not breast the waves of the world-wide deluge! They could not control the outstretched arm of Almighty God! They could not surmount their righteous visitation, and pass by strength of their own, from the old world to that peopled by Noah! None were saved—none got life in that judgment, except "by faith;" that faith led them into the ark—into fellowship with God. He saved them! He gave them life. "So shall the coming of the Son of man be."

Thus Lot got life, not by wit, or wisdom, or virtue and strength of his own! No: but "by faith" that led him into God's plan—"the just live by faith!" No mortal of himself could surmount that sulphurous, fiery storm! "So shall the coming of the Son of man be."

Enoch and Elijah were not translated by triumphing over "the law" of gravity, or any other law of their being. No, no. They "walked with God." They came into his covenant of life. God let down His presence in the form of promise; they entered, though in all the impotence of mortality, and by faith they locked up from earth to heaven, from mortal to immortality! Nay, into association and assimilation with the everlasting One! the "I AM!"

Thus the honored heirs of promise who "shall be alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord," will attain justification to life; not by law; but "by faith" in the descending Lord! He comes to lift them up to "everlasting habitations." Divested of mortality, they will rise enwrapped in the glories of his own immortality.

In every instance in the history of God's people, illustrative of this doctrine, we find that they failed by self reliance, or according to law, and got life or deliverance from surrounding death "by faith" in him who was alone in those conditions, competent to save.

Thus, Israel by faith got "life" at the Passover when the destroying angel slew the Egyptians.

Thus they got "life" at the Red sea, when Pharaoh's host was destroyed.

Thus, Caleb and Joshua got "life" when the ten spies by their "evil report" perished with their hundreds of thousands of associates in unbelief. "They would not enter in because of unbelief."

David and Daniel with their compeers in moral heroism, attained to life "by faith" that brought them and bound them within the sphere of Omnipotent power. The deliverance demanded by their conviction, and the salvation accomplished on their behalf, transcended all created agency.

"Through faith they subdued kingdoms, wrought rigteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, * * * received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection! "These all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Heb. 11.

These "things happened to them for ensamples!" The grand and final attainment of "life," is in "the resurrection." Then all mortals whose faith renounces trust in law, and whichallies them to the "resurrection and the life," will enjoy "the gift of God"—eternal life.

The law or bond of mortality to Elijah and Enoch, the flood to Noah, the fiery judgment on Sodom, the overthrow of Pharaoh's host, the death to the children of promise, the furnace of fire to those who believed, in Babylon; when all are woven into one grand, God-given symbol of "the great day," may aid our conception of this all-important assertion of Divine inspiration,—

"That no man is justified in the sight of God is evident; for the just shall live by faith."

Of all parts in the great system of truth, on which faith relies, there is none quite comparable, to the crowning of the dome of the heavenly temple. This shall be when He comes again to array his people in immortality. "Unto them that look for Him he shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9: 28. "Then shall we appear with Him in glory—wearing a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

Let those alone doubt who can rise above mortality scale the battlements, and ope the gates of the celestial city, unaided by God Almighty. But all who lay hold of the promise and arm of the Lord by faith, have a rational ground of hope; an illustrative hope; a hope in Him whose faithfulness never fails, and whose power is equal to all the emergencies involved in hades' moral government, and "eternal judgment."

In the light of this luminous subject, we can apprehend the import and obligation of christian baptism. In us, that is, in our flesh, "there is no good thing;" nothing that can avail to secure life. As "the flesh" has been tried, found utter weakness, and read unfit for, and forever out of the kingdom, as "Christ died and rose again" to "enter into His glory;" it is made plain in baptism. It is embodied, or acted out in Gospel worship.

"Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? therefore we are buried with Him by baptism, into death;" that as He was raised, we may also be, in "the resurrection."

The believer "buried in baptism" has no hope by remaining "planted in the likeness of Christ's death!" His hope lies in being "raised from baptism to newness of life here, and of being "made like Him" "in immortality," at the "resurrection of the Just." 1 Cor. 15. Rom. 6: 3, 5.

This is "the form of the doctrine." It is its type or outward exhibition.

As in the Lord's supper we show His death till He come;" so in baptism we profess openly, that there is no hope from "law" in mortality. Our hope is in God "who giveth life to the dead." "THE JUST LIVE BY FAITH."

Clerical Politicians.

We remember that some years ago, when the temperance reform was in its infancy, there was a decided hostility manifested on the part of certain of the clergy, against having the topic introduced into their pulpits on the Sabbath day. This course drew down upon them the severest animadversions of those who esteemed themselves to be, in a peculiar manner, the representatives and embodiment of temperance principles. The course pursued by the clergy in those early days of reform, is defensible and was perhaps, the best practical commentary they could give of their firm faith in the efficacy of spiritual teachings, to meet and rectify every social and moral evil; for they had read in the great charter under which they were called to preach:—"the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," and they knew, if they were faithful in spiritual things, temperance must follow, as a natural result.

But a change has taken place in the views of a majority of the clergy, and it is a change that is greatly to be deplored; for it argues a loss of faith, a departure from the precepts of Christ and the principles of the gospel, and a reliance upon merely human strength. Instead of guarding zealously their pulpits against those things that have a tendency to turn the mind from the simplicity and beauty of christian truths, they have turned the church into an arena for political discussions, for partisan declamations, for personalities, vituperation and scandal. They have, in many cases sown dissensions, where, aforetime, the sweet spirit of peace loved to dwell. They have sown the seeds of strife, bitterness and disunion where love and unity once dwelt serenely. Brother has been excited against brother, family ties have been weakened, and the satisfaction with which the church once held sweet counsel together is now no longer experienced.

The fell spirit of political partizanship is the demon who has wrought this work of desolation. It is one of the most common things of the day to read, in the religious periodicals, letters from clergymen from every part of the country, complaining of spiritual dearth in their churches—that the young, especially, give no heed to religious teachings—that cold indifference marks all their conduct.

Do not these clergymen see the reason for all this? Do they not see that it is because they themselves have stepped aside from the high mission to which they were called, and throwing off their sacerdotal robes, have turned their backs upon the pulpit, and entered the arena of political strife, become party wranglers, office-seekers and demagogues.

Young men, seeing this, will not believe there is any vitality in the religion which such a clergyman preaches. They hear him declare in complacent tones, and in that "pride that apes humility," that they are embassadors for God, standing before them in Christ's stead; and on the next day they see him lay aside his embassadorial functions, and mingle in the struggle for political loaves and fishes. They hear him declare in the language of St. Paul, "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified;" and see him on the next day, knowing nothing, and seemingly caring nothing, about anything else save the triumph of his party.

These things cannot but have the most deleterious effect upon the mind of young people. It looks to them like a departure from the faith; it speaks to them in language which their heart does not reject, that there is after all, no solid foundation in this religion, and thus are sown the seeds of unbelief, out of which grow infidelity in its most hopeless and almost incurable form.

This conduct on the part of the clergy has weakened the tie that formerly bound young and confiding hearts to the altars at which they worshipped with their fathers in early life; it has weakened the churches and brought down upon them the paralytic influences of cold and blank indifference.

When the American movement swept the country, in 1854, hosts of clergymen were found in the van, fighting with uncommon zeal against the Pope, the devil, and all foreign agencies. In our own State, large numbers of them were elected to political power. One was called upon to be Speaker of the House, others crowded the floor of the Representatives' Chamber, some were found in the Senate: one, certainly, if not two, were sent to Congress, and during the session of the Legislature these clerical politicians were the most active, the most virulent, the most bigoted of all the members of that large body. Now we tell these clerical gentlemen that they have done more injury to the cause of Protestantism by the course they saw fit to pursue, than the Pope, with all the power of the Romish Church, could do in a century. For, armed with the spirit of truth and righteousness, and dwelling in unity, we have the promise that nothing can prevail against us.

It is earnestly to be desired that the class of clergymen to whom we have alluded will consider the tendency of their course; its influence upon the minds of their parishioners, upon the health and prosperity of their churches, and turn again to the high mission upon which they are sent.

God forbid that we should deny to a clergymen any more than to any other man the right to speak his sentiments and act up to his convictions on any of the current topics of the day. It is his birthright so to speak and so to act. But God forbid that the clergyman to whom is committed the spiritual charge of the whole community, should make that grave and solemn charge a secondary matter, while the god of this world claims his best energies, absorbs his mind and becomes his chief delight.—Boston Herald.

What no Parent can have the Right to Do.

No parent can have the right to insult a child, simply because he can have the right to insult no human being. Parents, guardians, and teachers, have the right to govern, but not to insult. We may not tell a boy that he is mean, that he is the worst boy in the land, nor anything of that sort; the reason whereof is that such denunciations, true or false, can do no good, their tendency being to torture only. Such abuse does not proceed from either goodness or wisdom, without which the exercise of power becomes tyranny.

No one can have the right to degrade a child either in his own estimation or in the estimation of others. For a parent to tell visitors of his having flogged his son is cruel and slanderous in its tendency. While it tortures the sensibilities of the boy, it gradually reveals to him the fact that he has but little character to take care of.

To pursue this course for any length of time, must inevitably undermine all self-respect, while resentment runs wild, and malice takes possession of a heart that has bled under this wanton cruelty until no virtuous feeling is left. Many boys are ruined beyond any remedy before they are twelve years old. The responsibility of that ruin lies either upon the parent or the teacher, or upon both. A fearful responsibility it is.

A parent has no right to govern a free moral agent by mere brute force. The failing to perceive and act upon this principle has done more to promote crime in the world than such government as we now oppose ever prevented. These little words, "I will," and "you shall," are not in accordance with human nature; nor can he who acts upon the principle they inculcate be a good governor. Since children have a moral nature, he who forgets its existence in his efforts to govern, will be very apt to do more harm than good.—Golden Rule.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 20, 1856.

Notice.

Those who have not paid beyond the close of the present Vol. will find the No. marked on the wrapper or on the paper to which they have paid.

Those who have not paid any thing on the last two volumes, will find their wrapper or paper marked "No. 1," thus showing that we have received nothing for the last 52 numbers.

We shall be under the necessity of discontinuing such, after sending one more number, unless we hear from them. If any are not able to pay, if they will take the trouble to inform us, they shall have the paper free, and we shall forward it to them just as cheerfully, as to any of our paying subscribers. There are quite a number on the free list, and we hope our brethren will continue to send in money to give the Crisis to the poor.

We urge our friends to make a special effort to increase the circulation of the Crisis at the commencement of the next Vol.
